As the cochairman of the human rights caucus and one of the founding members of the International Parliamentary Group for Human Rights in the Soviet Union, I urge my colleagues to recognize August 1, 1984, the anniversary of the Helsinki accords, as Helsinki Human Rights Day to act as a reminder of our Nation's commitment to world freedom, and to further the world's crusade for peace and justice. We must continue to require the Soviet Union and nations in noncompliance to adhere to the human rights standards they agreed to.●

FUNDING CUTS BY THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I have stood up here many times to recount the harmful effects of Ronald Reagan's budget cuts. We have heard how the budget cuts have hurt the poor, the elderly, students, and the children of this Nation.

But today we learn that the Department of Health and Human Services, under the direction of Secretary Margaret Heckler, has cut the budget so that the mentally retarded are subjected to care that robs them of their human dignity and threatens their very lives.

The conditions outlined at these federally supported facilities is appalling. Mentally retarded adults are cared for by tranquilizers, not human attention. These mentally retarded patients, who have committed no crime but suffer from mental illness, are subject to physical and sexual abuse that would shock a prison warden.

The mark of a compassionate society is that it looks after the disabled. A compassionate government speaks for those who cannot speak for themselves. By that standard, the administration of Ronald Reagan is void of compassion. Secretary Heckler responded to the challenge that she was not doing enough for Federal retarded patients by saying more must be done by the States. She was willing to pass the buck, but she cannot pass the responsibility. The blame for these conditions lies with this administration. The blame lies with an administration that ignores those who cannot help themselves.●

HELSINKI AND THE CHARTER '77

HON. SIDNEY R. YATES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, today marks the ninth anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act on August 1, 1975, an event which triggered the hopes and sharpened the desire of millions of people living in the countries of Eastern Europe to live in a more just, less repressive environment. Nowhere were these hopes and desires felt more strongly than in Czechoslovakia where in 1968, armies of the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies had crushed the brief experiment in communism "with a human face."

In January 1977, as a direct result of the Helsinki Final Act, 1,000 Czechoslovak citizens from all walks of life—intellectuals, workers, students, ex-communists, clergy—banded together to form Charter '77, a group dedicated to upholding civil, political, and religious rights in Czechoslovakia. The aim of this diverse assemblage of men and women was to encourage their government to bring its laws and practices into line with both the spirit and the letter of the international obligations it had freely undertaken, most notably the Helsinki Final Act. The Charter '77 movement made it clear that it intended to go about this task in a peaceful, law-abiding fashion and had no intention of trying to establish itself as a political alternative to the ruling Communist party.

Over the years, the Charter has issued a steady stream of valuable reports and analyses shedding light on the dismal state of civil and political liberties in contemporary Czechoslovakia and has sent eloquent letters to the highest authorities in the country, urging greater respect for these rights. For their efforts, these courageous citizens have been imprisoned, harassed and intimidated by the crudest of methods. Spokesmen of the Charter, such as noted playwright Vaclav Benda, Peter Uhl, and Jaroslav Sabata have endured imprisonment of long periods before their release, and others such as Ladislav Lis, recently again imprisoned under flimsy pretexts, have also had members of their families threatened and blackmailed. Charter '77 spokesman Rudolf Battek still languishes in prison serving out his lengthy sentence under harsh conditions amidst convicted thieves and murderers.

At present there are still 10 Charter '77 signatories in Czechoslovak prisons together with another 50 civil, political, and religious activists. Yet despite official repression and harassment, the Charter '77 has survived and, in fact, expanded. Numbering today over 1,200 signatories, the Charter continues its work. For every Charter spokesman imprisoned or otherwise harassed, another has emerged to take his or her place. Today, as a result of the heroic efforts of the chartists, the whole world is aware of the extent of the violations of the human spirit perpetrated by the Czechoslovak authorities in Prague, who in a few short years have managed to turn Czechoslovakia, once the proud standard of liberalism and efficiency in central Europe, into a demoralized, mismanaged, and repressive backwater.

The process initiated by the Helsinki Final Act in 1975, while unable to halt these disturbing developments, has provided the beacon which has enabled groups in Eastern Europe, such as Charter '77, to enlighten the world as to the true state of affairs in their country. For this alone, the 9 years of Helsinki have not been in vain.●

THE 1984 CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL FOR SOVIET JEWS

HON. EDWARD P. BOLAND

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to join my colleagues in the House as a participant in the 1984 Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jews.

I wish to express my support of the hundreds of thousands of Soviet Jews seeking their right to emigrate, to practice their religion freely, and to study their history and culture. As we all know, the plight of Soviet Jews has worsened dramatically over the past decade. The figures tell the story; in 1983 1,314 Jews were allowed to emigrate compared to the 51,320 allowed to leave in 1979. Last year represented the lowest annual emigration total in 20 years, and the total number of Soviet Jews allowed to emigrate to the West has dropped 98 percent since 1979. Yet the number of visa applications have greatly increased as has the alarming rate of visa denials. For those who remain, religious persecution has become a fact of life. Those Soviet Jews with the courage to speak out on behalf of their people are silenced.

Soviets are successfully closing off the gates of freedom, and they are attempting to abolish Jewish culture and identity inside the Soviet Union. The Soviet Government refuses to allow Jews to live in their homeland with the freedom to be Jews. Yet it denies them the right to leave to fulfill these rights. The Government has intensified forced cultural assimilation, expanded its anti-Zionist propaganda campaign, and attempted to sever the Soviet Jewish community from any contact from abroad.

People all over the world must be reminded of the Soviet Jews' plight. The conditions under which they must live are totally unacceptable. The efforts of those of us in this Chamber, and the efforts of all concerned Americans, to call attention to those conditions are essential means of assisting the courageous Jewish men, women, and children of the Soviet Union. It is our vocal concern that provides them with the encouragement, and the confirmation of the justness of their cause, which allows them to go on. I am pleased to renew that call today and in so doing to serve notice that our voices will not be stilled until our protests succeed.●

A SAD ANNIVERSARY IN WORLD HISTORY

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, 9 years ago today, in Helsinki, Finland, the leaders of 35 nations, including the United States and the Soviet Union joined in signing a great humanitarian document.

Popularly known as the Helsinki Accords, the agreement established a clearly defined and far-reaching code of conduct for the signatory nations. Particularly important in this lengthy document was its emphasis on the recognition of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including, in the words of the agreement: "* * * the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief."

The Helsinki Accords required each participating nation to respect those human rights and freedoms, and to "deal in a positive and humanitarian spirit" with persons who have applied to leave their native land to be reunited with members of their families in other countries.

This human rights provision held a tremendous promise of a freer and brighter future for millions of persons living under Communist regimes, and particularly for the thousands of Soviet citizens of Jewish faith who have been harassed, persecuted and oppressed in the Soviet Union for attempting to practice their religion or for applying to emigrate to Israel.

For a brief time after the signing ceremony in Helsinki, the Soviet regime appeared to be making an effort to comply with its pledged word. Especially was this true in the realization of controls on emigration to Israel. In 1979, for example, some 51,000 Soviet Jews were permitted to leave the Soviet Union. But, sadly, that was the high mark. Since 1979 the situation has changed drastically.

The Soviet Union has clamped down the most severe restrictions on emigration of Soviet Jews. In the first 6 months of 1984 only 484 Soviet Jews received emigration visas—half the number permitted to emigrate in 1 week in 1979.

Even worse, the Kremlin has allowed and encouraged increasingly harsh persecution and harassment of its citizens who profess and attempt to practice their Jewish religion. Typical of these thousands of presecuted Soviet citizens is a most courageous woman, Ida Nudel, who I have adopted as my fourth congressional district's prisoner of conscience. She has been fighting Soviet officialdom for more than a decade, seeking permission to join her sister in Israel. Yet, in direct violation of the Helsinki accords, the Soviets not only refuse to permit her to leave, but are now subjecting her to the most vicious forms of harassment. They have forbidden her permission to live in Moscow, and sent her to a village in Moldavia. They continue to persecute her, even threatening her with prison for trying to observe the Jewish holy days. These cruel tactics are being used against an ever-increasing number of Soviet Jews.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot permit these anti-Semitic assaults on human rights to continue unchallenged in the Soviet Union. We must do more to bring to the attention of the world the Kremlin's callous flaunting of its most solemn treaty obligations. We must bring all possible pressure to bear upon the Soviet leadership to live up to its pledge made 9 years ago to respect individual human rights and fundamental freedoms.

This ninth anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords is a most appropriate time for the U.S. Congress to demand that the Soviet Union cease its flagrant violations of this international agreement. I urge my colleagues to join me in sending the strongest protests to Soviet President Chernenko and his anti-Semitic regime. The more pressure we can bring to bear on the Kremlin persecutors the greater the likelihood that the changes we are demanding will come about.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of Soviet Jews are crying out for our help. We in the U.S. Congress must heed that call for assistance. We must do everything we can in their behalf.●

AMERICA'S HISTORY

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, can you place a dollar value on the original Declaration of Independence or the U.S. Constitution?

Since the worth of these and other documents of American history are invaluable, Congress in its wisdom 50 years ago set up the National Archives and Records Service [NARS] to be responsible for saving them for posterity. Then in an effort to make a more efficient Government 35 years ago, put them under the control of the General Services Administration [GSA].

The GSA can quantify their holdings—furniture, buildings, copier paper—so there has been a problem in them understanding the funding and management of the NARS. This has proven detrimental to the NARS and the American people.

We can change this today by passage of H.R. 3987. This bill allows the NARS to become an independent agency like the Library of Congress or the Smithsonian Institution. For no additional cost to the taxpayer, we can be sure that America preserves her history correctly for posterity.●

ADMINISTRATION'S POLICY ON COMMERCIAL USE OF SPACE

HON. DANIEL K. AKAKA

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, a recent White House study on the commercial use of space is more noteworthy for what it doesn't say than for what it does say. The administration's national policy on the commercial use of space should be ashamed of itself for omitting the critical tough issues confronting our Nation's space effort in the years ahead.

This study is truly remarkable for what is doesn't say and the tough issues it skirts altogether. The few minor recommendations it makes represent an obvious first step in the direction of creating a climate conducive to private sector involvement in space; as such, its recommendations are positive, but trivial in nature.

The real issue is precisely what role the Federal Government wants to play in space. Until the private sector knows to what extent it is going to be forced to compete with the Federal Government, there will never be any noteworthy business activity in space . . . for a profit. There are some very tough questions which must be answered in the future. We must resolve the question of the space shuttle and shuttle-pricing policy, for the nascient commercial space transportation industry certainly cannot compete with a heavily-subsidized space shuttle system. Furthermore, we must also address the question of a mixed fleet, and the development of an American expendable launch vehicle capability. It is perfectly clear that the space shuttle, the wondrous flying machine that it is, is simply not able to meet all our launch needs now. This year has seen only two shuttle launches, a very long way from the projected 24-a-year flight NASA likes to discuss. We must take care not to indulge in "sacred-cowitis" with regard to our space shuttle system.

While the recommendations made by the administration's national policy on the commercial use of space are necessary ones dealing with regulatory and tax reform, the administration, unfortunately, ducked all the tough issues. I am disappointed that this long-awaited and greatly heralded effort produced so very little of substance. With the huge perturbations which accompanied this effort, one would have expected mountains to be moved—instead, they produced a mouse. It appears to be up to Congress to tackle these tough issues, and I look forward to doing so in the near future.●

TRIBUTE TO JOHN H. RACE

HON. FRANK HARRISON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, on August 10, 1984, employees of the United States Department of Labor Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Wilkes-Barre, PA, will pay tribute to John H. Race on the occasion of his retirement as a compliance officer with OSHA. Mr. Race has served as a safety and occupational health specialist for 12 years and has proven to be especially valuable to OSHA for inspections in the construction industry.

In addition to his regular duties, Mr. Race participated in one of the largest inspections in the history of OSHA at the Berwick Forge and Fabricating facility in 1978 and 1979. His expertise has been exhibited in a variety of inspections, but the two most notable are Bridon American and New Jersey Zinc. Mr. Race's versatile background has been an asset to the operation of the area office at Wilkes-Barre, PA. Mr. Race retires from OSHA on August 3, 1984.

Mr. Speaker, it is a genuine pleasure for me to join with the U.S. Department of Labor and all employees of OSHA in paying tribute to John H. Race.●

MILTON CAMPBELL: NEW JERSEY'S OLYMPIC HERO

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, today, while Americans throughout the Nation who watch the events of the XXIII Olympiad in Los Angeles take tremendous pride in our great athletes of present, and remember fondly those past, I wish to call my colleagues' attention to one former Olympian, Milton Campbell.

Though Campbell, a long-time resident of Plainfield, NJ, became the first black man, as well as the youngest man, to win the Olympic decathlon with his gold medal in Melbourne, Australia in 1956, the history books hardly acknowledge his name—let alone his superior achievement.

At the age of 17, still a student at Plainfield High School, Milt Campbell emerged on the international sports scene in 1952, competing in the XV Olympic Games in Helsinki, Finland. At those games, he earned a silver medal, finishing second to Bob Mathias, who set an Olympic decathlon record by scoring 7,887 points in the test of 10 events.

Four years later when he returned to the Olympics, Campbell surpassed Mathias' record, scoring 7,937 points on his was to defeating Rafer Johnson, a favorite to win the decathlon in 1956, and capturing the gold medal.

After the 1956 Olympics, Campbell went on to Indiana University and then served in the U.S. Navy. An all-around athlete, Milt later played professional football in both the Canadian Football League and the National Football League.

I am proud to say that Milt Campbell's accomplishments and contributions are not limited to athletics. Active with the youth of Newark and Plainfield, NJ, he is one of the founders of the Chad School, an alternative school, and the Milt Campbell Youth Center, both in Newark.

Voted New Jersey's greatest track and field star ever by a poll of two dozen track and field authorities, to me Milton Campbell's achievements both on and off the track are inspiring. While he remains an unsung hero some 28 years from when he won his gold medal at the XVI Olympiad, I am hopeful that Milt Campbell, New Jersey's only living Olympic decathlon champion, will soon begin to receive the recognition which he deserves, so that his story may serve as an inspiration to others.●

HELSINKI ACCORD ANNIVERSARY

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, today marks the ninth anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act, an agreement signed by the United States, Canada, the Soviet Union and over 32 other nations. The Helsinki accords cover nearly every aspect of East-West relations, particularly concern for human rights.

However, the grim situation faced by Jews in the Soviet Union clearly demonstrates total Soviet disregard for basic international standards of human rights, agreed to in the accords. Officially sanctioned anti-Semitism, persecution of refuseniks, and the continued downward trend in Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union are well-known examples of flagrant breeches of the agreement by the Soviets.

Of specific concern to us, not only as Americans but as fellow human beings, are the individuals who are suffering at the hands of their Soviet persecutors:

Yosef Begun, sentenced to a prison labor camp on charges of "anti-Soviet agitation," has now been hospitalized due to the hunger strike he began in early July. He has endangered his life to make a statement on the atrocious State of human rights in that country.

Once again, Ida Nudel has been refused emigration from the U.S.S.R., and must endure a 6-month delay before again petitioning. Ida Nudel's request has been denied successively since 1971.

In late June, Zakahar Zunshain participated in a demonstration at the Bolshoi Ballet, and circulated protest letters to the authorities. He was arrested and charged with "defamating of the Soviet state." Zunshain has begun a hunger strike pending his trial this week.

Aleksandr Yakir has been denied emigration from the Soviet Union on charges of refusing military service. He refused because, on the basis of preserving "national security," the Soviet Union denies exit visas to veterans. His trial begins tomorrow. If convicted he faces up to 3 years in prison for the crime of trying to emigrate—a crime these Soviet Jews all face, and one specifically outlawed by the Helsinki accords.

As Americans, and as fellow human beings, we must speak out for those who cannot. Religious freedom and human dignity must be fought for throughout the world. Their fight is our fight as well.

We must increase our efforts to obtain the release of these brave men and women, symbols of the will to live free of oppression and tyranny. Those whom I've mentioned are only a few among the many who yearn to leave. Please join me in calling upon the Soviet Union to set free these brave men and women.●

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

HON. NORMAN D. DICKS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, during the past few years, our Nation's need for vocational education has increased. Through vocational education, labor, business, and Government have been able to work closely together to meet the needs of thousands of communities across the country. Progress has been made, but the need for vocational education is growing. Unemployment rates remain high in many parts of our country, and workers who are able to meet the demands of changing technology will have a greater chance for employment.

Despite these facts, Federal funding for vocational education has deteriorated. Current funding is below the 1980 level. It is time that we increase the funding levels for this program so that they may adequately meet the growing needs of the Nation.

The House has already approved reauthorization for vocational education, but the other body has not taken further action on the bill. I urge my colleagues in the other body to approve the reauthorization as soon as possible so that we can consider increased appropriations for vocational education.●

REGIONAL PETROLEUM STORAGE

HON. CECIL "CEC" HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Persian Gulf war has heightened the attention of the Nation and the Congress on our continuing energy vulnerability. The House and Senate Energy Committees have been conducting hearings on our Nation's energy emergency preparedness, particularly on the capacity of the strategic petroleum reserve to meet our energy needs in an emergency. I have long felt that total energy preparedness requires regional petroleum storage, particularly for those areas of the country that would be hardest hit by an energy emergency, such as New England and my own State of Hawaii. In order to contribute to this debate, I have today introduced legislation to authorize regional petroleum storage in Hawaii and New England.

Mr. Speaker, my bill calls upon the President to amend the strategic petroleum reserve plan established under the 1975 Energy Policy and Conservation Act to provide, within 2 years, for the establishment and maintenance of regional petroleum reserves that would serve region 1, New England; and region 9, Hawaii, California, and the Pacific Territories.

Each of the two reserves would be authorized to hold no less than 2 million barrels of crude oil refined petroleum product such as jet fuel. My bill, which also calls for a Department of Energy hearing on regional petroleum storage in regions 1 and 9 within 90 days of its enactment, has been introduced to coincide with other energy emergency preparedness legislation being considered by the House and Senate Energy Committees at this time.

I feel that it is crucial that we proceed with regional petroleum storage at this time. The ongoing Persian Gulf war has heightened the Nation's awareness of the need to proceed with adequate energy preparedness measures. It has been some time since the Department of Energy has evaluated the distribution systems for the SPR in terms of oil tanker speed and cost to move crude oil to Hawaii. I am afraid that the time required to activate an SPR withdrawal combined with the transportation time from the gulf coast to Hawaii, for example, would overburden the capacity of the State's limited petroleum inventory and supply system. Studies have shown that tankers carrying SPR crude from the gulf coast could require at least 25 days to make the 6,000-mile trip to Honolulu. In an energy emergency, such a delay could devastate Hawaii's economy.

Mr. Speaker, we must not sit idly by and wait for an energy supply disruption. While we still have time, we must continue to evaluate our strategic petroleum program and improve its distribution capacity. I hope that my bill will prompt renewed debate in the Congress on the question of regional storage at a time when we are considering other facets of the SPR program.●

SENIOR CITIZENS APPRECIATION DAY

HON. BOB CARR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. CARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support and admiration of some very special people: the senior citizens of Pontiac, MI.

I'm proud to join with many of my fellow citizens who will gather to honor Pontiac's seniors on Saturday, August 4, when Tuscon Lodge No. 27 of the International Masons holds a banquet in their honor. This is the Seventh Annual Senior Citizen Banquet in Pontiac, and I hope there will be many more.

Senior citizens have made America what it is today. They've shaped our country's traditions of hard work and determination. They've supported their families, setting a good example for children and grandchildren to follow. They've shaped our homes and our work places, giving their guidance and wisdom to our country's future.

Today, our seniors deserve many rewards for their years of hard work. They most of all deserve recognition and respect in our community. Our senior citizens have a tremendous amount of talent and experience to offer us today, and their capabilities should not be forgotten.

Our seniors also deserve the assurance of a secure income, good health care, and housing. No senior citizen should be forced to choose between food on the table, heat for the home, or a visit to the doctor. As we gather to honor these important citizens, we should remind them of our commitment to strong, dependable Social Security and medicare. These are long-time commitments our Nation has made to all seniors, and those commitments cannot be compromised.

For the past 7 years, the members of Tuscon Lodge No. 27 have held this banquet in honor of Pontiac's seniors. They have provided the meals, refreshments, and transportation for our seniors and are to be commended for their hard work, dedication and generosity. I want to wish all of the participants in this banquet continued health and happiness. Congratulations, Pontiac seniors.●

YAMHILL COUNTY HISTORICAL MUSEUM

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to invite my colleagues to visit a part of Oregon's First Congressional District which is fast gaining a reputation for its scenic parks and vistas, historical landmarks, fresh produce, gourmet restaurants, quaint hotels, fine amateur theater, and award-winning wines.

Named after the Yamhelas Indian Tribe, Yamhill County, "the mother of Oregon" became the first home for Oregon Trail settlers in the early 1840's. This history is retold in the Yamhill County Historical Museum while the county's scenery is preserved and found in the many parks that dot the landscape.

As agriculture has traditionally played a major role in the county's economy, the high quality fresh produce is another major attraction for the many metropolitan residents who visit. Driving through the area, you will be overwhelmed by the number of produce markets.

In addition, the county has recently entered the ranks of the major wine producing regions of the country. With fertile and moist soils, similar to the Burgundy regions of France, Yamhill County's pinot noir and chardonnay wines now rival and in most instances surpass the quality of wines produced by Oregon's southern neighbor. I am particularly proud of the recent awards the Sokol-Blosser, Knudsen Erath, Adelsheim, and Amity vineyards have received, bringing international attention to the area. Using these fine wine and farm products, Yamhill County is now home to a number of fine restaurants.

Finally, with the increase in tourist traffic through the county has come new in cultural institutions and a revival of old ones. The Gallery Players of Oregon have staged many fine theatrical productions and the Lawrence Gallery has become a showplace for Oregon's many talented artists and craftsmen.

I am very proud of the growth Yamhill County has achieved and I would like to extend an invitation to Members of the House of Representatives to visit.●

ASK CONGRESS

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, the free flow of information between the citizens of this great country and their elected representatives in Washington has been a hallmark of our participatory democracy for more than 200 years. That noble tradition continues to be served by "Ask Congress," a public affairs cable TV program sponsored by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York with the active support and encouragement of its chairman, Edwin R. Werner.

"Ask Congress" is a nonpartisan production designed to keep the public up to date on key developments in Congress and in the health field, while providing Members of Congress with an opportunity to communicate with their constituencies. The program airs in the New York metropolitan area and is produced as a public service by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York.

Each week, two members of the House from the New York area appear on the program to discuss issues of local and national significance. The show is moderated by Lester L. Wolff, the former eight-term representative from Long Island and one of my predecessors in serving the people of my district. The show, I believe, is successful in fostering an increased understanding of the workings of this body among its viewers.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that I speak for other members of this body who have appeared on the show in praising the valuable contribution "Ask Congress" has made to the effective flow of communication between those of us here on Capitol Hill and the viewing audience. I would like to thank especially Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York and its board chairman and chief executive officer, Edwin R. Werner, for the job being done by this valuable public affairs programming. "Ask Congress" indeed serves the public interest, and I wish the show continued success.●

ALABAMA VOLUNTEERS FIGHT CRIME

HON. BEN ERDREICH

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend citizen involvement in the fight against crime. Only with strong citizen support can we effectively fight crime. This citizen involvement will be demonstrated on the evening of August 7, 1984, in communities all across America, and in Jefferson County, AL, where citizen volunteers will participate in "National Night Out," a volunteer effort to make their neighborhoods and their property safer from those who would steal or vandalize.

Mrs. Jessie Beavert is coordinating 500 neighborhood watch captains in the city of Birmingham who will participate in "National Night Out." These captains are setting up neighborhood watch vigils between 9 and 10 p.m. They hope that neighborhood action will prevent many crimes, and stop others. The police departments in Birmingham and Jefferson County are encouraging this evening of cooperation between neighbors and police, because neighborhood watch programs have been effective all over the country in deterring crime. Mrs. Beavert and her block captains are spreading the word that simple vigilance can help save lives and property.

I applaud the work of Mrs. Beavert and all of the volunteers in my district and across the country who are helping protect their own and their neighbor's property. The Birmingham and Jefferson County public safety officers are also to be commended for cooperating to educate citizens about ways they can make their neighborhoods safer. I hope all of my colleagues will join me in support of "National Night Out," which is sponsored by the National Town Watch Organization.●

IDAHO WILDERNESS ACT OF 1984

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, today, I am joined by my colleague, Representative KOSTMAYER, in introducing the Idaho Wilderness Act of 1984 which would protect some of this Nation's most outstanding wilderness areas remaining in Idaho.

In the past several months, both of our offices have been contacted by many of our constituents who believe that it is of the highest national importance to protect some of the most important remaining wild lands in the northern Rockies. Because of this interest and our own concerns, we had the privilege of accompanying Public Lands Subcommittee Chairman JOHN SEIBERLING and our colleague Representative LARRY CRAIG on portions of the subcommittee's recent inspection trip to Idaho.

These public lands are truly magnificent. The people of Idaho and all Americans are indeed fortunate that we still have an opportunity to ensure that some of these areas will be available for the enjoyment of our children in the future as they are presently enjoyed today.

Most importantly, we must keep in mind that these are America's public lands. Just as the money to manage the national forests and develop our national natural resources comes from all our citizens, so, too, should all Americans share in decisions over preservation of the best of America's wilderness. This can be accomplished without damaging the important economic interests that depend on forest lands and with the highest consideration for those individuals who live closest to the land.

The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs will soon have to determine the best balance between wilderness and development for Idaho's remaining 8 million acres of wild land. There is substantial disagreement as to where that balance lies. Proposals have ranged from 0.5 million acres to 4.5 million acres of wilderness. While we appreciate and respect the reasoning which have led to each of the proposals, we believe that our proposal for 3.4 million acres of wilderness is a fair, balanced, and defensible position. We will work to see that the committee considers this proposal as a vehicle to foster movement in the Idaho wilderness debate.

We wish to continue to study these areas and discuss important issues or conflicts and we look forward to working with the committee to resolve this problem fairly.

In summary, the Idaho wilderness debate is not a numbers game. It is a decision on specific wilderness tracts and should be deliberately and fully debated. Certainly a compromise is attainable—evidence the passage of the Wisconsin wilderness bill that received the unanimous support of its bipartisan delegation. We hope that our Idaho proposal, which we believe is in the interests of a great many Americans, will prove useful to the committee and the House in the days ahead.●

SERIOUS UNEMPLOYMENT IS CAMOUFLAGED BY DEVIOUS STATISTICS

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal said about the unemployment rate, and particularly about the recent decline to pre-Reagan rates. In my district, which is in the heart of Brooklyn, the reality that I see is in no way consistent with the rosy rhetoric that I hear. The frustrations of my unemployed constituents have led me to probe this situation in greater depth. What I found should be of interest to all those who seek an accurate reading of the unemployment tragedy in our society.

The unemployment rate in June was 7 percent for the country and 15 percent for blacks in this country. The black rate was down from 20.3 percent last June. This seemed like good news until I found that the percentage of adults working, called the labor force participation rate, has remained constant at 62 percent for blacks. If the same percentage of blacks are working, how can the unemployment rate drop by 25 percent? The answer is relatively simple. The Department of Labor simply doesn't count everyone. This is a simple way to reduce unemployment—don't count all of those who are unemployed.

Looking at New York State and New York City, the picture is similar. In the State as a whole, the labor force participation rate remained constant at 60 percent while unemployment dropped from 9.1 to 7.2 percent. The State's black participation rate remained constant at 54.5 percent while unemployment dropped from 15.3 to 11.5 percent. In New York City the black participation rate remained at 53 percent while unemployment officially dropped from 14.7 to 10.7 percent. In each set of figures, significant drops in the unemployment rate were officially noted when there was no change in the percentage of people in the workforce. In short, undercounting the unemployed is a consistent practice which provides the basis for rosy rhetoric while unemployment and poverty continue unabated.●

U.S. POSTAL SERVICE URGED TO RESUME GOOD FAITH NEGOTIATIONS

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I was astonished and greatly distressed to learn that the management of the U.S. Postal Service, unilaterally and arbitrarily, in the course of contract negotiations had set up a two tier pay system. While the Postal Service contends that this action is based on law, I can't think of a worse tactic for an employer, particularly a public employer, to take than this one which has brought labor-management relations in the Postal Service to an all-time low.

This action can only have a negative impact on the current employees and on the bargaining team, serving not only to impair morale, but also to impede negotiations. It has created an atmosphere of distrust on the part of employees by giving the appearance that management is not negotiating in good faith.

I might remind my colleagues that postal workers are not in the same position as other employees, as the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 denies postal workers the fundamental right of other working people, the right to strike, substituting for that right, binding arbitration. Certainly it was the intention of Congress in establishing this unique arrangement that matters under negotiation would be held in status quo until an arbitration panel, if ordered into the process, had concluded its work.

The Postal Service obviously believes otherwise and, in ordering a lower pay scale for new hires, is damaging labor relations and undermining the labor-management negotiation process in the U.S. Postal Service.

I urge the Board of Governors of the U.S. Postal Service to rescind their action as a step toward reestablishing a climate of good will and to enter upon good faith collective bargaining in order to resolve the present impasse.●

THE HELSINKI FINAL ACT: A PROMISE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, "the participating States will respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion."

These powerful words are found in the Final Act agreed to at Helsinki 9 years ago today. These words represent that which is good and wholesome in the human spirit, the quality which places man above the animals, the potential which points mankind to a future of cooperation and mutual respect.

These words are also a promise, made by all signatories of the treaty, to fulfill the goal of human rights. Let us not deceive ourselves: Human rights do not arise inherently out of the good will of a community, but from the compliance by governments. Human rights are not protected by the shield of righteousness, but are nurtured and defended by governments which respect them. The promise inherent in the Helsinki Final Act, therefore, is one that has to be assiduously monitored.

To monitor the lofty ideals expressed in the Helsinki Final Act, groups were established throughout the signatory States, including important groups in Eastern Europe. Czechoslovakia saw the rise of the Charter 77 group, which has been continuously harassed by state officials. Anatoly Shcharansky and Andrei Sakharov became active and forceful activists in the Soviet Helsinki monitor group. Their fates at the hands of a merciless Soviet police are well known.

How has the promise of the Helsinki Final Act been upheld? "(The States) will recognize and respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice * * * religion." That is impressive rhetoric. The reality is frighteningly different. Crosses are torn off school walls in Poland, causing students to boycott their classes. Local toughs are recruited into breaking up church-related peace demonstrations in East Germany. And anti-Semitic articles are officially sanctioned in the Soviet press.

"(The State) will respect the right of persons belonging to national minorities to equality before the law." That is inspiring rhetoric. The reality is to be found in Czechoslovakia, where Miklos Duray faces trial for defending the rights of the Hungarian minority living in predominantly Hungarian-speaking areas to receive instruction in Hungarian. Or Erno Borbely, a high school history teacher in Romania, who was sentenced to 6 years in jail when he protested against state-sponsored pamphlets bearing the words "The Hungarians are traitors. Stop them! Beat them! Tear them asunder!"

"The participating states will deal in a positive and humanitarian spirit with the applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family." That is beautiful rhetoric. The reality is more grim. Thousands wish to leave Romania to rejoin families in West Germany and Israel. In spite of some improvements in recent years, the waiting list is still long. Tens of thousands of Soviet Jews—the refuseniks—wish to leave Mother Russia to enjoy religious and personal freedom in Israel and the United States. Yet, currently only about 70 persons are allowed to emigrate each month. This is intolerable and unbearable.

"The participating states will respect—the freedom of thought." That is civilized rhetoric. But the reality can be found in Poland, where for over 2 years 700 political prisoners languished in jail due to their thoughts and ideals. Adam Michnik, one of the four imprisoned KOR—Worker's Defence Committee—leaders, wrote to General Jaruzelski last year from prison: "On that December night (when I was arrested) it was not I who was proscribed, it was freedom. It is not I who is imprisoned today, it is Poland." In spite of the fact that amnesty for political prisoners was recently declared in Poland many of the leaders of Solidarity have declared that the terms of amnesty are too harsh, and that it still does not grant them freedom to profess their beliefs.

If nations could be held at their words, if they can be trusted to uphold the spirit as well as the letter of a treaty, if they could be left unmonitored from outsiders to fulfill their promises, then we would be living in an ideal world. But time and again, we are reminded that our world falls below these ideals, and that the wonderful promise symbolized by the Helsinki Final Act is nothing but that: a promise, waiting to be realized by action.

Today, on the anniversary of the covenant arrived at in Helsinki among nations regarding human rights, I salute those people who, despite great personal sacrifice and suffering, continue to believe that their country should be held accountable to the promises it makes.●

FREE THE ARCHIVES

HON. GEORGE C. WORTLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I was pleasantly surprised when I read an editorial in the Washington Post titled "Free the Archives."

The Post editorial makes an excellent case for the enactment of H.R. 3987, a bill to improve the preservation and management of Federal records. The Government Operations Committee deserves accolades for reporting legislation that separates the National Archives from the General Services Administration.

As countries go, the United States is not very old. Yet, our history is rich and diverse. To let some of it fall through the cracks because of neglect or bureaucratic snafus is unthinkable.

The National Archives deserves its independence. What better present can we give to the American people than an honest and complete accounting of where our Nation has been. The Archives is truly a national treasure to be shared by all of us who care about our heritage.

When the vote is taken, I am confident that Members will see the wisdom in passing H.R. 3987 as reported without amendments.●

SELLER FINANCING: FURTHER MODIFICATION IS REQUIRED

HON. CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague on the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. ARCHER, in his effort to amend the seller financing provision enacted as part of the Deficit Reduction Act. The new imputed interest rate provision will definitely put a damper on certain sections of the real estate market during a time when this financing mechanism was being increasingly used.

First of all, I want to state that I was pleased with the exemption that was added for principal residences and small farms. The seller financing rate for these transactions, set by the Secretary of Treasury, is currently 9 percent, which is still an attractive interest rate. However, I believe that small businesses, resort property, investment property, and other forms of real estate will be adversely affected by this provision. The new law stipulates that if the 110 percent test is not met, the seller is deemed by the IRS to have received an imputed interest rate of 120 percent. This provision as the effect of placing the test rate at or above the market rate. Obviously, if someone is going to be taxed on money he doesn't receive, a different financing mechanism will be used. Unfortunately, seller financing is many times the only viable way to finance a transaction. I have talked to many of the small businessmen in South Carolina, and they are concerned about the ramifications of this bill.

As a cosponsor of H.R. 6021, I believe that further changes in the seller financing provision are required, so that thousands of small businessmen—both sellers and buyers—will not be penalized by rules intended to curb limited abuses.

Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee for scheduling hearings on the issue of imputed interest. I also want to urge my colleagues to carefully consider this issue and legislation.●

BUDDY KING RECEIVES SUPERIOR SERVICE AWARD

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention an outstanding citizen of Maryland's First District, William "Buddy" King. Buddy recently received a service award for his superior leadership in promoting low-cost soil and water conservation practices and for his outstanding salesmanship and training abilities.

Buddy was born and lives in Calvert County, MD, where he graduated from high school and married Iris Mae Jackson. Because he lost his father and began raising their first child while in the Army, he was financially unable to return to full-time farming—his first love. Instead, he found a job just as close to the land: soil and water conservation. Buddy is employed by the USDA's Soil Conservation Service.

Mr. Speaker, Buddy has worked with the Soil Conservation Service since 1957. Although he has been based for years in Upper Marlboro, MD, where he worked directly with farmers from Prince George's County, he is presently assigned to Anne Arundel, Prince George's, Howard, and Montgomery Counties. Farmers in these counties have been hard pressed by high costs and low crop prices. As an engineering technician, Buddy helped the farmers of these four counties get back to basics in soil conservation.

The Honorable Barbara Stinnett, secretary for the Calvert County State Central Committee and lifelong friend to Buddy, remembers, from the days that Buddy was in high school, his thoughts were on farming. It seems only natural that he would enter into a field that would provide him with the satisfaction of serving his family and his neighbors. His friendly manner and Christian beliefs have earned the respect of his friends and family, and he certainly deserves the honor he has received.

Buddy King received his award at the ceremonies held in Washington, DC on June 10, 11, and 12. He was one of 45 individuals who were honored along with 14 groups at the Agricultural Department's 38th Annual Awards Program. We are proud of him in the First District and greatly appreciate his dedication and service.●

BERKSHIRE WEEK

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 1, 1984

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform you that this year, the week of August 6-10 has been proclaimed "Berkshire Week" by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. This weeks is always special to me because it recognizes and honors the areas where I have lived all my life.

Berkshire County, for those of you who are not familiar with this part of country, is a region that combines natural beauty with a long and rich history. From atop Mount Greylock, the highest point in Massachusetts (3,491 feet above sea level), one can fully appreciate the splendor of the Berkshires. A rolling, green landscape carpets the region while mountain trails and waterways twist and wind through the numerous valleys situated between the Berkshire hills.

Sportsmen flock to the Berkshires. Some seek the challenge of the many ski areas scattered across the county, others come to enjoy the excellent hunting, fishing and boating facilities that this area has to offer. Whatever the recreational activity, the Berkshires can accomodate it.

The Berkshires are noted for many historic landmarks. The Hoosac Tunnel, one of the first railroad tunnels in the Nation, is located in North Adams along with the famous hairpin turn. In Stockbridge, the Mission House on Main Street reminds visitors of the extensive Indian reservations that existed in the Berkshires prior to the settlement of English and Dutch pioneers. The Hancock Shaker Village, meanwhile, serves as a living example of a lifestyle and religious order based on simplicity, practicality, and excellence in workmanship.

Many famous American writers and artisans have found the Berkshires to be a creative workplace. At the Mount in Lenox, Edith Wharton wrote such classic tales as Ethan Fromme and House of Mirth. It was in Pittsfield where Herman Melville wrote Moby Dick while living at Arrowhead. Sculptor Henry Hutson Ditson did his work at the Gingerbread House in Tyringham. In Stockbridge, the Corner House displays the many masterpieces that Norman Rockwell painted while living in that town. Glendale resident sculptor Daniel Chester French built Chesterwood and created the seated Lincoln for the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, DC. Also, William Cullen Bryant, a poet of the early 20th century, wrote many of his works at his home in Cummington, while Susan B. Anthony, a pioneer suffragette, was born and raised in Adams.

Whether living in or visitng the Berkshires, the area has many activities to offer. First-rate theater events are performed at the Williamstown Summer Theater, Shakespeare and Company at the Mount Lenox, and the Berkshire Theater Festival in Stockbridge. A petting zoo is available for kids of all ages at Springside Park. Museums such as the Blacksmith Museum, the Berkshire Museum, and the Hoosac Tunnel Museum are located on main routes along with various country stores and boutiques selling Berkshire products. In Dalton, the Crane Paper Museum provides a visitor with a history of the company that produces the paper used in making money by the Treasury Department. There is also a fine selection of restaurants from one end of the county to the other. The Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, in existence since 1775, is one of the oldest and most respected country inns in New England. Regardless of one's taste, the fine Berkshire cuisine is diverse enough to satisfy anyone's appetite.

Berkshire County is my home and I am proud of it. The people are of a strong will and a kind heart, and they make my job of representing them all that more enjoyable. I wish them a most pleasant and fun-filled "Berkshire Week." They can be assured that they will be in my thoughts. After living in the Berkshires all my life, I can truly say, "There is no place like home . . ."—Berkshire County.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, August 2, 1984, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

(Legislative day of Monday, July 30, 1984)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Almighty God, we respond to Thee in many different ways. Some deny Thee altogether—others acknowledge Thee but ignore Thee. Some take Thee seriously—others tip the hat to Thee occasionally. Some worship and adore Thee—others could not care less. Some love Thee—others fear Thee. Some know Thee—others feel Thou art beyond knowing. Some see Thee as a living reality—others as an impersonal force.

But whatever our attitude, Father in Heaven, rarely do we think of Thee as practical or relevant to our personal or corporate problems. Help us to understand that Thou art a God who cares—who seeks us—who longs for us. Help us to see that Thou art the source of all wisdom and power—that Thou art an infinite resource available to meet our needs. Forgive our indifference and grant us grace to call upon Thee however great or small our problems. Help us to see in the cross the measure of Your love, Your nearness, Your availability. In the name of Him whose mission was that of a sacrificial servant. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, after the two leaders are recognized, there will be a special order for the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

At 12 o'clock noon, we will be back on the pending business, which is the motion to waive section 303 of the Budget Act in order to reach the agriculture appropriations bill. I anticipate that there will be further debate on that.

In any event, at 3 o'clock this afternoon, without a preliminary live quorum as required by rule XXII, the Senate will vote on cloture in respect to further debate on the nomination of James Harvie Wilkinson to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. If cloture is invoked, of course, the Senate will remain on that measure until it is disposed of. If cloture is not invoked, the Sente will return to the matter before it just prior to the hour of 3 p.m., which I assume will be either the Budget Act waiver or the agriculture appropriations bill.

Mr. President, I anticipate we will be in tomorrow. I will try to be more up to date on that later today after we see how the situation develops. I had announced earlier that we would go to the foreign assistance bill today or tomorrow. That seems unlikely now.

Next week is the last week before the August recess for the Republican National Convention, until after Labor Day. The item most urgently requiring our attention between now and then, other than the matters now before us, is the general supplemental appropriations bill, which has not yet reached us from the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I continue to want to do all or as many of the appropriations bills as we can, but that one in particular.

Mr. President, I will try to have a further announcement later in the day on the situation in respect to today, tomorrow, and next week.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do have some questions I would like to ask in respect to the schedule.

In the event cloture is not invoked today on the Wilkinson nomination, is it the intention of the majority leader to press for a subsequent cloture vote on that nomination?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, probably, but I am not ready yet to make a final decision on that. I continue to hope that we will get cloture today. In any event, if it is necessary to file another cloture petition, I would like to examine the timing before I make a further announcement. I am dedicated also to trying to do the agriculture appropriations bill.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

I have not discussed this next matter with the majority leader and he may or may not want to comment upon it today but may want to think about it. Moreover, he may not have the information. He may want to seek it.

Does the majority leader have any impression as to whether or not the administration is likely to make any recess appointments when we go out in August for the Republican Convention?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have no information one way or the other on that. I will be glad to try to find out, but no one has contacted me on that subject. They always do, but so far I have had no information.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

If there is such an intention on the part of the administration, I would like to express the hope that it would inform the majority leader. If there is such an appointment that would require action before the recess or during the recess, I think we ought to know about it.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have no disagreement with that. As I say, so far, and as far as my memory serves, I believe I have been notified in advance when there would be recess appointments. In this case, I will make inquiry and see what I can find out.

Mr. BYRD. There certainly is no implied criticism in my statement with respect to the majority leader, but there is implied criticism with respect to the administration. If there is to be an appointment, it should be offered for confirmation prior to the recess. And if an emergency exists or is likely to exist that would make necessary any appointment during the recess, I think we should know about it now.

What the majority leader has said is satisfactory as far as I am concerned at this time.

My last question as of now is this: the distinguished majority leader has indicated that there will not likely be an effort to call up the foreign assistance bill today or tomorrow. Does he see the possibility of such action next week?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I do not know yet. I have to find some way to make sure that certain provisions are made for some elements within that bill, or perhaps in an appropriations bill. I make no bones about it. I feel it is urgently necessary that we find a way to provide funding for the programs in Central America.

Maybe we can do that in one measure or the other. That would have a bearing on whether the leadership on this side intends to take up the foreign assistance authorization bill next week.

I will say to the minority leader that time is passing by. I had slotted time for the foreign assistance authorization bill and I believe we are almost certainly not going to be able to put that bill in its original slot. So that would diminish the likelihood that we would have time to take it up before September. It does not, of course, eliminate that possibility altogether. What we can do with certain "must" aspects of that measure in some other manner will have a bearing on when we schedule it or if we schedule it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader, who characteristically speaks with candor insofar as he is informed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader.

POLISH REFUGEE SITUATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I had the opportunity the other day to meet Zbigniew Brzezinski, the distinguished National Security Adviser to President Carter. We spoke of many things, but one element of that conversation seemed particularly worth sharing with my colleagues.

Mr. President, one of the most discouraging events since the beginning of the Cold War occurred on December 13, 1981, with the imposition of martial law in Poland. The extremely encouraging dialog between Polish workers, the Catholic Church, and the government was severed abruptly, Solidarity's leadership thrown into prison, and the Polish citizenry was served unambiguous notice that even constructive dissent would not be tolerated. Since then, Poland's martial law regime has been guilty of countless human rights violations, and the "most Western" state of Eastern Europe has been reined firmly back into the Soviet camp.

The lifting of martial law in 1983 and the announcement earlier this week of a limited amnesty is no panacea. The Polish regime has not fundamentally changed its aims or policies, and its apparent reforms are probably more tactical than substantive—an attempt to trade off political prisoners for major Western economic assistance. Nevertheless, I understand that the President has decided to respond appropriately to this measure and I commend the decision.

Serious problems remain, however, for which the United States and the West must continue to seek redress. One of the most pressing of these is our treatment of Poland's freedom fighters, to whom President Reagan has repeatedly offered assistance. The President has consistently maintained a courageous and forthright stand regarding the Soviet-sponsored martial law regime in Poland. He has provided an important example to other states in both adopting firm sanctions and denouncing the Soviets for the sponsorship of the dictatorship. Despite the President's sharp criticism of the regime's repressive policies and significant human rights violations, our bureaucracy has not kept pace in its treatment of Polish refugees seeking asylum in the United States.

I am told, for instance, that between 1982 and 1984, the INS routinely denied between 71 and 91 percent of Polish asylum requests nationwide. Moreover, it has been inconsistent in its standards for asylum approval and excessive processing delays and difficulties in the reunification of families have occurred. In short, through these and other practices, the bureauracy has lagged well behind the intent of the President in dealing with the many Poles who have sought refuge here from a brutal dictatorship.

Mr. President, I am, of course, aware that President Reagan established in May a special task force to deal with this problem. I understand that the deliberations of the task force are drawing to a close and that its recommendations will be soon forthcoming. In light of the importance of this matter, particularly in light of the President's strong and consistent stance on Poland, I look forward to these recommendations and trust that their implementation will greatly improve the plight of the Poles in this country.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATTINGLY). The minority leader is recognized.

AFGHANISTAN AND SOVIET DEFECTIONS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in this morning's Washington Post there appeared a remarkable account as to why four Soviet soldiers defected from their army units in Afghanistan. Interviews with these four soldiers have shed additional light on the brutality of the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

The soldiers gave as their reasons for defecting, the wanton killing and plundering of civilians, widespread sickness, drug use, savage discipline, and confusion about why they were fighting in Afghanistan. All of these elements have combined to sap the morale of Soviet combat troops. So say the defectors.

As the Washington Post pointed out:

> A steady stream of reports from Afghan freedom fighters and Western correspondents accuse the Soviets of systematically slaughtering civilians during pacification programs.

However, now we have firsthand accounts from Soviet soldiers themselves who could no longer stomach the atrocities and brutality of the senior officers in the Russian Army.

The four soldiers also cited cases of grenades being thrown at—> hated senior enlisted men by young conscripts, brutal punishments of troopers in the field by senior noncommissioned officers, and suicides and murders in the ranks that are covered up by commanders * * *.

The Soviet defectors also stated that drug use was so widespread among the Russian troops that it was unusually tolerated by commanders and fellow soldiers.

Yet, despite this reality in Afghanistan, the Soviet propaganda machinery portrays Russian troops spending their time building schools, clinics, and sanitary facilities to the delight of the Afghans.

Mr. President, the picture these defectors paint of Soviet occupation of Afghanistan is one of repeated atrocities against the civilian population of that country; strong doubts among Soviet draftees as to why they are fighting in Afghanistan; strict censorship by Soviet authorities as to what the Russian people know about the war in Afghanistan; and a decadent, demoralized Soviet Army whose ranks are rife with drug use, insubordination, and disease.

This story should send a strong signal to the world community and to the people of the Soviet Union—especially, should I say, to the Islamic people, not only in the Soviet Union but elsewhere—that the Soviet leadership is one which demonstrates a callous and brutal disregard not only for the innocent people of Afghanistan, but also for the unfortunate Soviet conscripts who are being forced to fight a war they do not accept.

Mr. President, the Post article is one which all of my colleagues, I hope, will read. It should indicate the inconsistency between what the administration downtown says and what it does. In view of the fact that the Soviets took a very firm and obstinate position in refusing to allow U.S. ships and ships of other countries to enter certain waters in the search for the downed Korean airliner some months ago, does the United States not show a side of weakness when our Government allows the Soviets to send fishing ships into U.S. territorial waters?

It just does not make sense in view of how callous the Soviets were in refusing to permit U.S. ships into the area where the Korean airliner was understood to have gone down, in search of bodies, in search of the little black box from the cockpit which would have told much of the true story. In light of the Soviet callousness in that instance, is it not a sign of weakness and would not the Soviets see it as a sign of weakness on our part, a lack of determination and will, when we turn around and hand to the Soviets on a platter—without any request for a quid pro quo and certainly not getting any quid pro quo—fishing rights in territorial waters of the United States?

It does not seem to me that we are standing very tall, Mr. President, to use the President's words of some time back. We are not standing tall when we hand to the Soviets something they very much want—fishing rights off U.S. territorial waters. It is not standing very tall when we do that in the light of the callous disregard for human lives that the Soviets have shown in the downing of the Korean plane and in their ruthless slaughter of Afghan men, women, and children—who, in many or most instances, are defenseless against Soviet might.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article from the Washington Post be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEFECTORS SAY MORALE IS LOW IN AFGHAN WAR

(By Kevin Klose)

NEW YORK, Aug. 1—Four young Soviet soldiers who defected from their army in Afghanistan said here Tuesday that wanton killing and plundering of civilians, widespread sickness, drug use, savage discipline and confusion about why they were there sapped morale of combat troops in the 4½-year-old war.

The four said they deserted separately from separate units last year and were taken in by enemy Afghan resistance groups. They arrived in the United States last week and are being resettled under auspices of the International Rescue Committee (IRC).

Their accounts provide a dramatic, gritty look at life in the base camps and outposts of an army in its first shooting war since 1945. They are consistent with reports that the Soviets were bogged down in Afghanistan before going on the offensive this year.

About 100,000 Soviet troops have been fighting in Afghanistan since the December, 1979, invasion to preserve a shaky Marxist regime in Kabul. They are opposed by fierce Moslem tribesmen with a historic hatred of foreigners. The conflict has been savage from the start.

A steady stream of reports from Afghan "freedom fighters" and Western correspondents accuse the Soviets of systematically slaughtering civilians during pacification campaigns. More than 1 million Afghans have fled to neighboring Pakistan, where the resistance movement, fractured by internal rivalries, organizes support and supplies of arms.

The four men interviewed here were draftees: Sgt. Alexei Peresleni, 20, a Muscovite who was a crew chief in a 122mm howitzer battery; Sgt. Nikolai Movchan, 20, a Ukrainian, who led a grenade-launching unit; Pvt. Sergei Zhigalin, 20, a Russian from the Volgograd region who drove an armored personnel carrier, and Pvt. Yuri Shapovalenko, 19, from Sumi, who operated a rocket launcher.

They cited cases of "fragging" attacks on hated senior enlisted men by young conscripts, brutal punishments of troopers in the field by senior non-commissioned officers, and suicides and murders in the ranks that are covered up by commanders using the official formulation: "Died while performing patriotic military duties."

They said most of their compatriots, draftees paid about three rubles ($4) a month, simply want to survive their two years of active duty and go home.

Western military and intelligence experts believe about 5,000 Soviet soldiers have been killed and an unknown larger number wounded. The four, who possessed only the limited information that an army customarily gives enlisted soldiers, generally estimated the tolls to be higher.

One said an officer told him 100,000 coffins had been shipped to Afghanistan and that they would be filled. One, treated for appendicitis at a military hospital in the Soviet Union, said his ward was filled with wounded troopers.

The Afghans receive limited amounts of arms from Saudi Arabia, China and other nations, including covert aid from the United States. The men said they were told they would be fighting "Americans, Chinese and Pakistanis."

The soldiers said illegal hashish, cocaine and opium are widely used among enlisted men. They said soldiers buy drugs from Afghans with money plundered from the homes of impoverished civilians during armed patrols, or by bartering spent shells, live ammunition and even automatic rifles.

Hashish smoking is most common, they said. But stronger narcotics are available. Drug use is so widespread that it is usually tolerated by commanders and fellow soldiers, they said. Punishment includes confinement in military brigs or harsh military labor camps inside the Soviet Union.

One man said he knew of a case in which a Soviet Uzbek soldier, high on drugs, shot dead a Russian soldier who had slurred his race.

They said drug use is low among officers, who generally drink vodka smuggled by truckers resupplying from Soviet Uzbekistan to the north. When the officers cannot obtain vodka, which costs up to 50 rubles (about $75) a bottle, they make moonshine, the men said.

They expressed contempt for official renditions of their mission fed to Soviets at home by the state-controlled media, which seldom mention combat and picture the troops as spending their time building schools, clinics and sanitary facilities to the delight of the Afghans.

They said mail home is censored to hide where troops are serving and that officers advise troops "not to complain about things because it will only make your parents worry." Officers also tell soldiers to put aside worries about whether they should be fighting Afghans and to concentrate on survival, they said.

The men said hepatitis was a scourge, followed by typhoid fever. Peresleni said the troops, mostly Russians and Ukrainians, drank far more water than recommended because of Afghan heat. Normally, he said half the six-man gun crews in his battery were incapacitated.

Zhigalin, stationed in Kabul, said troops preferred daylight patrols against small hamlets because residents usually fled, making looting easy. Night raids scared the soldiers "because it seemed there was an enemy behind every corner," they said.

One recalled an attempted "fragging" in which hand grenades were rolled into a tent of senior sergeants, wounding one. No one was caught. Another time, senior noncoms reportedly assaulted and killed a young trooper while on patrol.

Movchan said officers told men that parents are writing the government demanding to know "why our children are fighting." Political lectures offered explanations troops don't accept, he said. He quoted comrades saying: "It's a stupid war, not useful to anyone."

Once he said he overheard junior officers blaming the late Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev for "sending us here where we're getting shot."

Soldiers with doubts dared not seek answers from political units "because it's dangerous to say, 'Well, I don't believe it,'" he said. "They are all faithful communists."

Peresleni and Shapovalenko said they were fed up with vicious army life and afraid they would die before their tours ended; they walked away from their units. Guerrillas beat Peresleni because he had no weapon. Zhigalin said he was sent into a hamlet to seize food. He was surrounded and surrendered.

Movchan said that from childhood he had dreamed of living in a free country. The moment he learned he was going to Afghanistan he was determined to defect. He walked away in June, 1983.

IRC officials declined to describe how they and Freedom House, a New York-based human rights group, got the four here. The former soldiers have received refugee parole status.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the Senator from Wisconsin wish any additional time?

Mr. PROXMIRE. No, Mr. President. I thank the distinguished minority leader, and I thank the Chair.

FORMER SECRETARY OF STATE DEAN RUSK ON HOW TO AVOID NUCLEAR WAR WITH THE SOVIET UNION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I recently wrote former Secretary of State Dean Rusk to ask his views on the relations of this country with the Soviet Union, particularly with respect to arms control. Secretary Rusk responded with a thoughtful and detailed analysis of his experience in dealing with the Soviet Union and his judgment on the way we should proceed in the future. Secretary Rusk served both President Kennedy and President Johnson as Secretary of State during a remarkable period of both dangerous confrontation and constructive cooperation with the Soviet Union. How does this wise elder statesman, who has served in the top command of American foreign policy during 8 critical years, view our present relations with the Soviet Union? What does he propose we do to protect our interests and to achieve peace?

First, Secretary Rusk agrees that the prevention of nuclear war must be, as he puts it: "The No. 1 priority for the entire human race." Can we succeed? Can we prevent World War III? Rusk is an optimist. Why? Because, he believes, both superpowers recognize that a nuclear war would destroy both nations. But he is a careful optimist. He warns against the kind of crises he had to endure as Secretary of State in both the Kennedy and the Johnson administrations. Secretary Rusk learned a lasting lesson in the Cuban missile crisis which he recalls as "too utterly dangerous." He warns that unfortunately "such reflections are not passed along from one generation of leaders to another." In other words, some historians and commentators may learn from such an experience. Succeeding Presidents and Secretaries of State—unfortunately, some Members of the Senate—may not

In Rusk's judgment we should avoid being tempted into "playing a game of chicken" with the Soviets. To him that means cooling the level of rhetoric on both sides. Any exchange of insults between our President and his administration officials on the one hand and the leaders of any other country on the other does not help build peace in the world, as Mr. Rusk points out. Such an exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union can push the whole world down the long, slippery slope to a military explosion that could destroy all mankind.

Mr. President, Secretary Rusk reminds us that difficult as it always is to deal with the Russians, and he has had at least as much experience in negotiating with them as any American alive or dead, it is possible to achieve constructive, enduring peace treaties with the Soviet Union that work. He writes:

> Despite the crisis of the Kennedy years, we set in chain discussions which produced the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty of 1963, a consular agreement, a civil air agreement, two important space treaties, a Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and a number of other matters. This effort was continued into the Nixon years with a new Four-Power Agreement on Berlin, the conclusion of the ABM Treaty and certain other points.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, these successes have faded too quickly from our memory. Why were they achieved? For two reasons: First, this country showed strength and determination during the Kennedy-Johnson-Rusk period. Second, the country also showed a willingness to cooperate and to work in the common interest on both countries.

Strength alone is not enough. A cooperative spirit is not enough. We need both. Is it possible to revive that relatively cooperative and successful era? Yes, but we need both the obvious determination to protect our interests and those of our NATO allies as well as the will to work out mutual and verifiable arms control agreements with the Soviet Union. Rusk tells us from his experience that bringing such combined strength and cooperation into play will always be difficult under any circumstances. He tells us:

> The Soviets remain very difficult people with whom to negotiate and there are many reasons, some of which are rooted in the very nature of their own system and their relations with each other, why that should be so.

But we have no choice. We must deal with them. Rusk puts it this way:

> The simple fact remains, however, that whatever we think of the Russians and they think of us, we and they must still find some way to inhabit this speck of dust in the universe at the same time. They and we must never lose sight of that overriding necessity.

With all his experience, Secretary Rusk is perplexed by the same dilemma that confronts millions of Americans. He writes that in his own mind he does not know whether the administration really wants arms control or an arms race. To this Senator that is exactly one half of the biggest question that faces this country and, indeed, the world. The other half of the question also bothers Secretary Rusk. It is whether the Russians want an arms race or arms control.

Finally, Secretary Rusk calls for our administration officials talking regularly with the Soviet Union at all levels. As Rusk sees it, even "pointless" conversations can be useful in understanding each other's "motivations, concerns and interests." Rusk asks that we find ways to "build upon the one thing we share with the Soviet Union; namely, common membership in the human race."

Mr. President, the wise and seasoned suggestions of Secretary Rusk—seasoned by experience, painful, troublesome but successful experience—can and should help guide this body and the American people as well as this administration and any successor.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter from Dean Rusk to me dated July 18, 1984, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA,
SCHOOL OF LAW,
Athens, Ga., July 18, 1984.

Senator WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PROXMIRE: I was glad to have your good letter of July 6 and to know of your great personal interest in the important questions which you posed in that letter. I agree with you that the prevention of a full nuclear war must remain the Number One priority for the entire human race. Throughout human history it has been possible for mankind to pick itself up out of the death and destruction of war and start over again. We shall not have that chance after World War III—there simply won't be much of anything left.

Let me say that I am not among those who assault our young people's morale by all this Doomsday talk going around these days. The simple fact is that next month we shall have put behind us 39 years since a nuclear weapon has been fired in anger, despite the many serious crises which we have had since 1945. I myself believe, without a doubt, that Soviet leaders have no more interest in the destruction of Mother Russia than our leaders have in the destruction of our beloved America.

But we have to be careful. I think that both we and the Russians came out of the Cuban missile crisis perhaps more sober on both sides than we had been before and with a recognition that we must try to avoid such crises because they are too utterly dangerous. But such reflections are not passed along from one generation of leaders to another. It is important that the two sides not be tempted into playing a game of "chicken" with each other to see how far one can go without crossing that lethal line. We have to be careful about the level of rhetoric between our two capitals because there is always the possibility that one side or the other will begin to believe its own rhetoric and do something foolish or dangerous.

During the first two years of the Reagan Administration the level of hostile rhetoric between Washington and Moscow rose very high. It has receded somewhat during the past year possibly because the President had had some second thoughts and perhaps has learned that anger and rhetoric standing alone have no future. It is interesting for me to recall that President Lyndon Johnson did not let the rest of us in his Administration criticize any foreign leader by name whether it was Khrushchev, Castro, DeGaulle or anyone else. If another government started criticizing him personally and by name, he would have me speak to the ambassador of that government and point out that that is not the way to settle problems or build some peace in the world.

We must begin with the recognition that the United States and the Soviet Union are the only two nations who, if locked in deadly combat, could raise a serious question as to whether this planet could any longer sustain the human race. That imposes upon both of us a very heavy responsibility both to our own peoples and to all mankind. We and they share a massive common interest in the avoidance of all out nuclear war. In their better moments, the Soviet leaders themselves understand this. If we can broaden that basis of common interest by finding points of agreement on large and small matters and reduce the range of issues on which violence might occur, the effort should be made.

That continuing search for agreement began immediately after World War II. One can recall the Baruch Plan to eliminate national nuclear weapons, and the invitation by President Truman and Secretary George Marshall to the Soviets to participate in the Marshall Plan. During the Eisenhower Administration we were able to achieve the Austrian State Treaty after hundreds of negotiating sessions and a brilliant piece of "preventive diplomacy" in the Antarctic Treaty. During the Kennedy Administration, despite the dangerous Berlin crisis of 1961-62 and the utterly dangerous Cuban missile crisis, President Kennedy, Vice President Lyndon Johnson and their senior colleagues believed that it was just too late in history for the two nuclear superpowers to puruse a policy of total hostility across the board. Despite the crises of the Kennedy years, we set in chain discussions which produced the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty of 1963, a consular agreement, a civil air agreement, two important space treaties, a treaty on the nonproliferation of nuclear weapons and a number of other matters. This effort was continued into the Nixon years with a new Four-Power Agreement on Berlin, the conclusion on the ABM Treaty and certain other points.

Alongside of these efforts of agreement (which is all that the word "detente" means to me) there have been periodic confrontations between Washington and Moscow. By the summer of 1946, we did not have a single division in our Army nor a single air group in our Air Force which could be considered ready for combat. The ships of our Navy were being put into mothballs as fast as we could find berths for them and our defense budget for three fiscal years came down to a little over $11 billion, groping for a target of $10 billion. During this period of western demobilization, Joseph Stalin tried to keep the northwest province of Iran (the first case before the United Nations Security Council), demanded two eastern provinces of Turkey, supported the guerrillas going after Greece using bases and sanctuaries in places like Albania, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, had a hand in the coup d'etat in Czechoslovakia in 1948, blockaded Berlin and gave the green light to the North Koreans to go after South Korea. These acts were the beginning of the Cold War. We were disarmed and it was not until the 1950's that we began to build up our defense establishment again. Since then we have had periodic confrontations on Korea, Southeast Asia, Cuba and their exercise of their "Brezhnev Doctrine" in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Afghanistan, etc.

There are times when Soviet conduct gets in the way of the search for agreement. For example, on a certain Wednesday morning in 1968 we and the Soviets were on standby to make an identical, simultaneous announcement in Washington and Moscow that President Lyndon Johnson would soon go to Leningrad to open what later came to be known as the SALT Talks. The trouble was that on the very night before making this announcement, Soviet forces marched into Czechoslovakia, and it was necessary for me to telephone the Russian ambassador and insist that he telephone Moscow telling them not to make that announcement the next morning. It is ironic to recall that a few years later any chance of getting Senate approval for the SALT II Treaty was destroyed when Soviet forces marched into Afghanistan. We have had to wait a long time for the Soviet Union to join the human race and work with the rest of the world to try to make some sense out of the human condition. They remain very difficult people with whom to negotiate and there are many reasons, some of which are rooted in the very nature of their own system and their relations with each other, why that should be so. The simple fact remains, however, that whatever we think of the Russians and they think of us, we and they must still find some way to inhabit this speck of dust in the universe at the same time. They and we must never lose sight of that overriding necessity.

I myself am appalled by what is getting to be an insane race in nuclear arms. Although these are weapons which must never be used, the resources which are going into this race boggle the imagination. I am particularly concerned about the prospect that the arms race will be moved into outer space and will be testifying before a committee of the Congress later this month on that subject. I should be glad to send you a copy of the remarks I propose to make to a subcommittee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

I regret to have to say to you that I do not consider that I know in my own mind whether our own Administration wants arms control or an arms race. I have the same problem with respect to the Soviet side under present conditions. Given the magnitude of nuclear weapons already in existence, quibbling about the details of numbers on both sides is almost irrelevant. If the Soviet Union were to lay down upon Western Europe and North America all the missiles which they can direct at those areas, the Soviet Union itself could almost certainly not survive the result of its own nuclear weapons—quite apart from the thousands of megatons which they would receive in exchange. Somehow we and they must break through all this and find some basis on which we can put a halt to this insanity.

Incidentally, I myself do not lose sleep over the possibility of a nuclear war produced by an accident or by some irresponsible action taken by a Kadafy or a Khomeini. We have discussed with the Soviets from time to time the problem of "accident" and the irresponsible action of third parties, and I am convinced that neither one of these would cause the Soviets Union and the United States to embark upon a mutual nuclear exchange which would destroy the civilized community of nations.

Finally, it seems to me that we should be talking regularly with the Soviet Union at all levels of our respective governments. Sometimes there is point in what might be called "pointless" conversations—that is, exchanges of views which are not looking toward the solution of specific problems. They and we should understand all that we can about each other's motivations, concerns, and interests even though we may find fundamental differences between the approaches taken by our two sides. We should try to find ways to build upon one thing we share with the Soviet Union, namely, common membership in the human race. During the coming decades the entire human race will face a large number of issues which are different in scale and kind than any the human race has faced before. I have in mind the unfinished business of preventing World War III, the energy problem, the prospect that man himself can inflict irreparable damage upon this thin biosphere in which the human race must live, the awesome consequences of the continuing population explosion, and a number of other such issues. These problems are of such gravity that they might serve the role of a "common enemy" with respect to which we and the Soviets must reduce our common hostility and find ways in which we can deal more effectively with common problems.

With personal best wishes, Senator,

Cordially,

DEAN RUSK.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY BAR ASSOCIATION: RATIFY THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on June 27, 1984, the Board of Trustees of the Los Angeles County Bar Association resolved:

That the Board of Trustees of the Los Angeles County Bar Association hereby urges the United States Senate to give its advice and consent to the ratification of the Genocide Convention; and that a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Senate of the United States and its Foreign Relations Committee, the Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, the Senators from California, and the American Bar Association.

With this action, the Los Angeles County Bar Association joins a long list of labor, civic, religious, and nationality groups representing tens of millions of Americans that have endorsed the Genocide Convention.

I think we should take a minute to dwell on the term "genocide," because this is an absolutely appalling crime. It is the planned, premeditated, calculated destruction of an entire ethnic, racial, national, or religious group. It is almost always carried out by the government, as it was in Hitler's Germany. It is different from murder and is very hard to prevent. Only with the force of national and world opinion and a formal treaty can we make any real progress against genocide.

The Genocide Convention has two major facets: first, it is a human rights treaty, and, second, it is an international criminal treaty, which is designed to ensure that all nations, consistent with their own constitutions, will do everything possible to punish criminals who attempt to commit the most heinous crime know to man.

This is not a partisan issue, Mr. President. It is not ideological. The Genocide Treaty was supported by Republican Presidents Eisenhower, Nixon, and Ford, as well as Democratic Presidents.

The ranks of the Genocide Convention supporters cross party lines and ideological lines. Conservatives as well as liberals support it.

Why does the treaty have so much support?

Because in their consciences, people know it it right. They know the terrible price we pay when we are silent.

But they also support it because it will serve America's best interests, the interests of our citizens, our voters, and our taxpayers.

The benefits of this treaty are real and concrete.

First, ratification of the Genocide Convention will strengthen our hand in attacking the gross violations of human rights by the Soviet Union and its allies.

Second, ratification of the Genocide Convention reasserts our intention to deal firmly with criminals who have violated the most sacred right known to man.

Third, the ratification of this convention will place the United States in a better position to bring our moral influence to bear in specific cases where genocide is alleged.

And Fourth, there is a moral imperative to ratify this treaty. Domestic statutes regarding murder are insufficient, for genocide is indeed murder but it is more than murder.

It is not murdering one person. It is not the usual crime of murder. It is planning and carrying out the plot to execute everybody who belongs to a particular race or religion.

As I pointed out, Mr. President, most recently the Los Angeles County Bar Association has joined a coalition of 52 other organizations, including the American Bar Association, in support of the Genocide Convention. But there is one organization, Mr. President, that has not acted, and it is the only organization that really counts on this matter. Only the U.S. Senate, only this body, can ratify the Genocide Convention. Presidents have pleaded with us to act on it. There is no role here for the House of Representatives. It is entirely up to this body, the U.S. Senate—not the Los Angeles Bar Association or the American Bar Association or the House of Representatives or the President of the United States. It is up to us.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the names of the 52 groups and organizations.

There being no objection, the names were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILLIONS OF AMERICANS SUPPORT THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

The following is a list of 52 labor, civic, religious and nationality groups which represent millions of Americans that have endorsed the Genocide Convention.

Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL-CIO; American Baptist Convention; American Civil Liberties Union; American Ethical Union; American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO; American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO; American Friends Service Committee; American Humanist Association; American Jewish Committee; American Jewish Congress; American Roumanian National Committee; American Veterans Committee; Americans for Democratic Action; Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith; Baha'i National Spiritual Assembly of the U.S.A.

B'nai B'rith; B'nai B'rith Women; Emma Lazarus Federation of Jewish Women's Clubs; Episcopal Church; Friends Committee on National Legislation; Hadassah, The Women's Zionist Organization of America; Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO; International Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL-CIO; International Rescue Committee; International Union of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO; Jewish Labor Committee; Jewish War Veterans; Labor Zionist Alliance; League for Industrial Democracy; Methodist Church, General Board of Christian Social Concerns; National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women's Clubs; National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; National Board, YWCA; National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice; National Conference of Christians and Jews; National Council of Jewish Women; National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council; National Panel of American Women; Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, AFL-CIO; Ukranian Congress Committee of America.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 12 noon, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

BARNEY W. GREENE—FRIEND TO THE TENNESSEE VETERAN

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, at the end of this week, Mr. Barney Greene, State adjutant and finance officer of the Tennessee American Legion, will retire after 23 years of service. It is with regret that we bid him farewell, for it will be hard to envision the Tennessee American Legion without the able leadership of Barney Greene.

During his 23 years of service, Barney provided active, enthusiastic and compassionate leadership to the over 36,000 veterans who are members of the Tennessee American Legion. As State adjutant, Barney was the chief administrative officer for the Legion responsible for the administration of its programs, collecting annual dues, and serving its members.

At all times, Barney served the veterans of Tennessee with utmost dedication. His active working relationship with the Veterans' Administration helped to ensure that it was responsive to the special needs of veterans. His vigilance meant that Tennessee veterans received their benefits on time and obtained the highest possible quality of medical care from Veterans' Administration hospitals.

Since 1961, Barney has worked closely with the Tennessee General Assembly and the Tennessee congressional delegation to promote the legislative agenda of Tennessee veterans. During my years in the Senate, I have enjoyed our many times together and appreciated the service that he has provided my office in efforts to help veterans. All members of the Tennessee congressional delegation have a greater understanding of the service and legislative needs of veterans, thanks to the efforts of Barney Greene.

Thousands of veterans, disabled veterans, widows and children of veterans all enjoy a better life today due to the untiring efforts of Barney Greene.

All of us wish the best to Barney and hope that his days and years of retirement will be filled with the blessings of good health, close friends, and the care of a loving family.

TRIBUTE TO SHERIFF LOUIS GIANOLI OF MARATHON COUNTY

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in honor of a special individual from my home State of Wisconsin—Sheriff Louis Gianoli of Marathon County.

Sheriff Gianoli has been a dedicated public servant in Wisconsin for more than 20 years. In that capacity, he has not only worked tirelessly for the safety and security of the people of Marathon County, but also has been involved in numerous community activities.

A veteran of World War II and of the National Guard, Sheriff Gianoli has recently taken office as president of the National Sheriff's Association, the largest law enforcement group in the world. Election to this post caps a long and distinguished record with the Sheriff's Association for Sheriff Gianoli. He first served on the board of directors, then on the executive board, and finally was elected seventh vice president. Last year, he was made first vice president.

He is the first Wisconsinite—and, as he says, the first Italian—ever elected to the post of president of the Association, and I'm confident he will excel in this position just as he has always excelled in his law enforcement career.

Sheriff Gianoli has been very active in the communities of Marathon County, especially in trying to curb drug use by our youth. Because of this and other concerns, he is often asked to attend social events of all kinds to entertain both young and old with his unique sense of musical humor as he sings and plays his guitar to the strains of such classics as "Pistol Packin' Mama."

Although he is a Republican, he is so popular among all of Marathon County that Democrats openly support him and, as a result, he rarely gets formidable opposition.

Sheriff Gianoli is married, with two children, and is a good family man. People in the county who have problems often come to him because they know he is a thoughtful, caring, and sensitive person.

Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity today to lend my thanks and the thanks of the people of Marathon County and Wisconsin to Sheriff Gianoli for his years of service for the betterment of our State.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of a June 20, 1984, Daily Herald Wausau-Merrill article, which describes in detail the accomplishments and philosophy of Louis Gianoli, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GIANOLI HEADS 50,000-MEMBER ASSOCIATION: SHERIFF TAKES GIANT STEP FOR ITALIANS

(By Jim Elliott)

Louis Gianoli made it to the top today.

This noon, the sheriff of Marathon County was expected to be elected president of the 50,000-member National Sheriffs Association at its convention in Hartford, Conn.

"I'm the first Italian ever elected president," he said in Wausau before leaving. "The Italian Men's Club of Chicago is pretty excited about it. There aren't too many Italian sheriffs."

According to Gianoli, the sheriffs association is the largest law enforcement group in the world and has a staff of 35 full-time people.

Gianoli succeeds the sheriff of Cook County, Ill., in which Chicago is located. That man is also a lawyer.

"We're an equal opportunity organization," quipped Gianoli, never at a loss for a joke. "Now the groups that can't understand lawyers will have me."

They'll also have, instead of a big city sheriff, one who represents a county in which there are more cows than people. And Gianoli is the first president from Wisconsin.

He became interested in the association from the moment he first took office in 1961 and started going to conventions.

"I consider myself a career officer," he said. "When people call me a politician I resent it. I consider myself a statesman."

That's why, whenever he's gone to a meeting, he's taken along plenty of Wisconsin cheese. When other states or counties had fancy hospitality rooms, which he couldn't afford, Louie passed out genuine cheese to people who were used to the mediocre processed variety.

It made an impression, as did the Wausau depot emblem belt buckles and other paraphernalia he managed to distribute. People remembered Louie Gianoli.

The sheriff will be talking about drug dealers, TV shows, and his view of law enforcement during the coming year.

"One of the greatest burdens in my life is knowing that it (drug abuse) is happening to our young people. I've seen the drug burnouts, families torn apart and a life of crime to support the habit," he said.

He will push to change the federal government's role in drug enforcement. Rather than concentrating on border-patrol programs, he'd prefer to see more grants available to local communities to fight drug pushers.

"We need to have teams out catching people where it's being disbursed," he said.

He also plans to carry on the association's campaign to get TV shows such as the "Dukes of Hazzard" off the air because of the poor image of law enforcement they portray. The association was instrumental in getting Sheriff Joe Higgins ("Bo, you in a heap o' trouble, boy") taken off commercials for Dodge cars.

In speeches, he'll stress the advances that have been made in law enforcement, mainly in training officers.

And he'll probably mention his philosophy of personalized service. That has enabled him to be re-elected Marathon County sheriff 11 times.

"I feel what I do is what's expected of me, not poitical hogwash," he said. "You have to put yourself in the other person's place. Our patrols can do things for people.

"I've been criticized . . . for blood runs (relaying blood through the county). Not all areas do it, and some have said that's not a police function, but I maintain it is."

Gianoli has climbed the association's chain of command. He began on the board of directors, served on the executive board, and finally was on the path to the presidency eight years ago when he was elected seventh vice president. This past year he was first vice president, which is also president-elect.

The association's mission is to support the office of sheriff, and fair and efficient administration of criminal justice. It works through training programs, information exchanges, insurance programs, technical assistance (such as studies of jails or manpower), programs such as Neighborhood Watch, research and lobbying.

DON'T MAKE CRIME A POLITICAL ISSUE

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, as the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee and a coauthor of the bipartisan crime bills that passed the Senate in both the 97th and 98th Congress, I find it preposterous that apparently the Reagan campaign intends to accuse Democrats of being "soft on crime." The President apparently forgets that in 1983 he vetoed the only major piece of crime legislation to come to his desk during the first 2 years of his administration.

The result of the President's veto of H.R. 3963 has been that State and local law enforcement have gone 1½ more years without vitally needed assistance funds to carry out crime fighting programs. The veto also has delayed the effective use of forfeiture statutes which need to be revised. Forfeiture is the best tool prosecutors have to confiscate the assets of drug traffickers and truly put them out of business.

Additionally, the President's veto has left the Federal Drug Enforcement and Interdiction Program in the position where bureaucratic turf battles and red tape continue to hinder effective drug suppression. The latest statistics on drug availability are staggering. Cocaine use has increased by 12 percent in 1983 with an estimated 54 to 71 metric tons—a 19-percent increase from 1982—entering the United States. During 1983, which was when the President was announcing the success of his South Florida Drug Task Force, the Federal Reserve Bank branches in Miami and Jacksonville, FL, reported the largest yearly surpluses of U.S. currency in the Nation $4.4 billion and $1.3 billion, respectively. These surpluses are 550 percent and 91 percent higher, respectively, than the next highest reported surplus. Clearly, these cash surpluses are the result of something other than tourism.

The President's veto not only set us back 1½ years on those important crime fighting initiatives but it has further delayed our whole agenda for bipartisan House and Senate action on crime. It has taken months for Senate and House judiciary leaders to regroup and start over again working on a wider range of crime issues.

Now President Reagan is claiming that Democrats, particularly House Democrats, are not facing up to the crime issue because they haven't passed the "President's crime bill." For the record, let me document the true authors of many of the key provisions in the so-called, "President's Crime Package."

To begin with at least 10 items included in the package come from Criminal Code reform bills that we have been working on for the last 10 years. Three of the most crucial provisions concerning sentencing, bail, and forfeiture statute revisions are the result of Democratic initiatives. The justice assistance provision in the crime package was actually opposed by the Reagan administration in 1981 and 1982. Other issues like assault on Federal officials, destruction of energy facilities and labor racketeering amendments are Democratic bills.

It is misleading and inaccurate for the President to claim that nothing is being done on the crime issue because the House Democrats have not passed S. 1762. I think it is only fair to set the record straight as to what the House has passed in the area of crime legislation.

The first five items I will list have already been signed into law by the President.

PUBLIC LAWS

Public Law 98-292—The Child Protection Act of 1984: To strengthen Federal laws against child pornography (H.R. 2635).

Public Law 98-305—Controlled Substances Registrants Protection Act of 1984: To protect from robbery and burglary of controlled substances those persons who manufacture, distribute, or dispense controlled substances and who are registered with the drug enforcement administration ("pharmacy robbery") (S. 422).

Public Law 98-368—Authorizing the President's Commission on Organized Crime to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of information (H.J. Res. 548).

Public Law 98-127—Federal Anti-tampering Act: To amend title 18 of the United States Code to prohibit certain tampering with consumer products ("Tylenol bill") (H.R. 2174).

Public Law 98-236—Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act: To authorize additional funds for a program to monitor released Federal drug offenders (H.R. 2173).

These next items have been passed by the House and are pending in the Senate.

H.R. 2165—Justice Assistance Act: To provide matching funds to State and local governments to carry out specific anticrime programs; authorizes a rapid Federal response to local crime epidemics.

H.R. 4971—Missing Children's Act: To reauthorize the Juvenile Justice Program, Runaway Youth Program, and establish a Missing Children's Program.

H.R. 5616—Counterfeit access device and computer fraud and abuse of 1984: To provide criminal penalties for counterfeiting access devices and for computer fraud and abuse.

H.R. 5846—Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1984: To amend title 18 United States Code to improve collection and administration of criminal fines.

H.R. 5477—To provide criminal penalties for possession of contraband in Federal prison and revise prison riot and mutiny offenses of current law.

H.R. 5526—To amend title 18 United States Code with respect to escape from custody resulting from civil commitment.

H.R. 5406—Foreign Evidence Rules Amendment Act of 1984: To amend title 18 United States Code with respect to escape from custody resulting from civil commitment.

H.R. 5872—Financial Bribery and Fraud Amendments Act of 1984: To amend title 18 United States Code to tighten Federal laws punishing bribery and fraud in banking and financial industry.

Mr. President, I could go on with this but I will not, because the point I wish to make is; now is not the time to turn the crime issue into a partisan political issue. Chairman STROM THURMOND, Senator LAXALT, Senator KENNEDY, and myself in the Senate, and Congressmen like BILL HUGHES and HAL SAWYER in the House have worked very hard in a bipartisan manner to raise the issue of crime to a higher priority during the last two Congresses. For the President to try and take the general issue of crime and drugs and make political hay by pointing fingers will only set us back again, just like his veto of the bipartisan crime package did in January 1983.

There is much that needs to be done if we are ever to make a dent in the crime and drug availability statistics. The tragedy and grief that those statistics reflect, certainly outweighs the political advantage the President may seek to gain through rhetoric or political slogans.

I ask my colleagues on both sides of the aisle and in both Houses of Congress to work to get truly needed crime legislation passed this year. With both Houses working together we should be able to get the major elements of the Senate-passed package, like bail, sentencing, forfeiture, drug enforcement penalties, justice assistance and a number of the violent crime and procedural amendments enacted this year. For I and my Democratic colleagues in the Senate will not be satisfied until all, and I emphasize all, of these items have been addressed.

If that is done there will surely be plenty of credit to go round for all parties and in both the legislative and executive branches of government.

U.S. ENERGY POLICY: STATEMENT OF SECRETARY HODEL'S SPEECH TO THE WASHINGTON PRESS CLUB

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, recently Energy Secretary Don Hodel addressed the Washington Press Club on our country's energy situation. In his speech the Secretary explained that our energy situation is greatly improved today under the Reagan administration's current National Energy Plan as opposed to 4 years ago. Although I don't fully agree with all aspects of the energy plan, I do believe that we are much better off today since distancing ourselves from the overwhelming regulatory policies of the former administration.

Based on my interpretation of Secretary Hodel's comments, our energy situation is greatly improved because we are moving this country toward energy nondependence. A key factor in this movement has been reducing our dependence on foreign imports of oil.

Our country seeks a balanced and mixed energy resource base ranging from essential conventional sources to renewables. Petroleum, however, is undeniably our fuel of choice. In an effort to become less dependent on petroleum we have tried to cut back on its use. As a result of conservation, improved energy efficiency, and increased domestic production, we have succeeded at becoming less dependent on foreign sources today. Consequently our oil imports in 1983 were down 33 percent compared to 1980 levels.

Along with cutting down on imports of foreign oil, we have diversified our suppliers of oil. It is comforting to know that only 2 to 3 percent of our oil now comes from the Persian Gulf.

Another important factor improving our energy situation is a new reliance on market forces. That is, relying on millions of American consumers to make individual choices in their best interest. The Reagan administration is dedicated to this reliance for it believes individuals are the most effecient allocators of energy supplies and can best decide how to cope with their own energy needs.

While we have improved a great deal in our energy nondependence and security, we must not be satisfied and complacent. During this time of plentiful energy supplies we must continue to diversify our energy sources. Resources such as natural gas, nuclear power, and coal are contributing to our balanced and mixed energy resource system, but not to their potential.

Natural gas pricing must be deregulated so that low-cost natural gas not being produced under current regulations, can find its way to the market. The need for deregulation is clear. At present, regulations are forcing consumers to pay for high-cost, imported natural gas.

Nuclear power is an important energy alternative. However, the nuclear industry has been severely damaged in recent years. This damage primarily stems from the licensing process. Improvements streamlining the extremely burdensome process must occur while still maintaining safe nuclear facilities.

"We are the Saudia Arabia of coal" according to Secretary of Energy Hodel, yet coal contributes only around 20 percent of our energy today. We must expand our use of coal while simultaneously improving the way it is burned, both economically and environmentally.

Although, not yet to their full potential, all these resources have contributed to our improved energy situation. It is clear we are moving in the right direction. Our task now is to continue moving toward a diversified and balanced energy system.

I commend the Secretary's remarks and urge Senators to read them. I think you will agree with the Secretary that we are better off now, with a more sound and consistent energy policy, than we had 4 years ago. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary's remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"KICKING THE HABIT: LESSENING U.S. DEPENDENCE ON OIL"

(By U.S. Secretary of Energy Donald Paul Hodel)

During my 19 months as Secretary of Energy, I have spoken to hundreds of thousands of Americans, emphasizing one important theme: we must move this country toward energy nondependence. A key to achieving this objective is: Kicking the Habit—Lessening our Dependence on Oil.

In recent weeks, much of my attention—and much of yours—has been focused on events in the Middle East. I believe that we, as a Nation, have no choice but to care about the continuing hostilities in that oil-producing region and the effects—both real and perceived—of those hostilities on the United States and the free world.

The United States is the major player in the world energy arena. As such, we have two essential areas of responsibility: (1) our national energy policy; and, (2) our role in the international energy market.

NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

In October 1983, President Reagan submitted to the Congress our National Energy Policy. The policy consists of a goal, and strategies and programs to achieve that goal.

Our goal is an adequate supply of energy at a reasonable price. Although we do not define "adequate" in terms of a specific quantity, it must mean a supply sufficient to meet short- and long-term needs and sufficient to move this Nation ever closer to energy nondependence.

To realize this goal, our strategies are: (1) to minimize federal control and involvement in the energy market while maintaining public health and safety and environmental quality; and (2) to promote a balanced and mixed energy resource system.

We seek a balanced and mixed energy resource base ranging from essential conventional sources such as oil, gas, coal and nuclear, to renewables such as hydro-electricity, solar, wind, geothermal and biofuels, and new emphasis on conservation as a resource.

Achieving a balanced and mixed resource base is critical to achieving energy nondependence.

If available, petroleum is the fuel of choice. But the burning questions are: how much is available; how much can be produced; and, at what price?

Our estimates are that only 3 percent of our known recoverable fossil fuel reserves are in the form of natural petroleum.

Yet, in 1983, oil represented 43 percent of our Nation's energy consumption, and when the closely related natural gas is thrown in, these two resources supplied 67 percent of America's energy. Our forecast suggests these resources will continue to supply more than 60 percent of our energy for at least the next 10 years. Obviously, much of that oil is imported. We are still net importers of almost 30 percent of our oil needs, and our imports are rising. This year, we remain, along with Japan, the largest importer of oil—not in terms of percentage, but in terms of volume.

So, what are we doing to reduce our reliance on costly imported oil and achieve a more balanced and mixed energy resource base?

We have made substantial progress.

As a result of conservation, improved energy efficiency, and increased domestic production, we are less dependent on foreign sources today. U.S. consumption of oil in 1983 was down 11 percent compared to 1980 levels. Consequently, our oil imports were down 33 percent. We have also diversified our suppliers. In 1983, none of the top four countries from which we imported oil shipped through the Strait of Hormuz.

In 1983, OPEC provided 43 percent of U.S. net oil imports, down from over 70 percent in 1977. In 1983, we imported only 1.8 MMB/D from all of OPEC, compared with 1.4 MMB/D from Saudi Arabia alone in 1977.

The United States can take comfort in the fact that only 2-3 percent of our oil requirements come from the Persian Gulf, but 20 percent of the free world's total oil supply (8-10 MMB/D) moves through the Strait of Hormuz. So even if we took no oil from that area, we must be concerned about the reliance of our allies on Persian Gulf oil.

If we as a Nation can expand and diversify our resource base, we will improve our energy security, while making more oil available in the world market to our allies and to the less developed countries which need oil to survive and for economic growth.

The Reagan Administration views energy conservation as an essential component of our mixed and balanced resource system. Every expenditure for conservation which saves energy displaces the need for other resources—conventional or renewable.

I believe that Americans do have a conservation ethic. As a Nation, we have already made significant progress in conserving energy:

Residential and commercial buildings in the U.S. today consume 20 percent less energy per square foot than they did 10 years ago;

Energy consumption per capita has declined by 14 percent from 1973 to 1983;

Energy input per unit of industrial output has declined by 23 percent since 1973; and,

Energy consumption per dollar of gross national product has declined by 11 percent from 1980 to 1983.

These are important steps in the right direction. However, when energy supplies are perceived to be sufficient, we have difficulty keeping our conservation momentum going. The time for additional conservation is now. Let's not wait for some sort of emergency before we get serious in our efforts to save energy.

In addition, we must continue to develop renewables, which will play an increasingly important role in complementing our conservation efforts.

In 1983, renewable energy sources provided about 8 percent of the primary energy needs of this country, and projections indicate renewables will contribute over 9 percent to our energy mix by 1992 and over 10 percent by the year 2000. A one percent increase may not at first sound like much, but when you consider what a large and growing energy system we have in the U.S., you begin to realize that a very high rate of growth is occurring in the renewables area.

Some key developments in renewable energy technologies include:

The cost of photovoltaic generated electricity decreased by 57 percent from 1980 to 1983. Worldwide photovoltaic sales have increased 400 percent and are expected to more than double by 1985;

In wind energy, the number of small companies producing wind machines more than doubled between 1980 and 1983;

The number of active solar building installations in operation in this country has more than doubled since 1980; and

The number of new homes incorporating passive heating and/or cooling technologies has increased by nearly 100 percent since 1980.

In addition to renewing our conservation commitment and expanding our renewable resource base, there are several actions we as a Nation must take to change the way we have traditionally dealt with our conventional energy resources.

We must deregulate natural gas pricing—one of the ways we are seeking to minimize federal control of energy markets. We emphatically believe that decontrolling the price will bring consumer costs down. Right now we estimate that there is between one and three years' supply of low-cost gas that will not find its way to market because federal price constraints are below the cost of development and production. Natural gas regulation is forcing consumers to pay for high-cost and imported gas.

We have a case study to look at as an example. President Reagan decontrolled the price of oil in early 1981, and the results were increased drilling, discovery and supplies, and a 20-25 percent decrease in the real price. We believe that the economic realities of the marketplace will do more to bring down the price of gas than years of frenetic government regulating could ever do.

The danger of "quick fix" legislation has never been greater than now, however. In mid-April, the House Energy Committee reported a "quick fix" bill which could have a devastating impact on consumers and producers alike. We believe that if this legislation—known as the Sharp bill—is passed, wellhead prices will be higher, as will consumer energy prices; domestic gas production will decrease significantly; gas import prices will rise, and oil imports will rise.

This Administration is working hard to pass responsible, sound legislation which will, in the long run, benefit America's consumers.

Nuclear power is an important alternative to our continued reliance on oil. But the nuclear industry has been severely damaged in recent years. No new plants have been ordered since 1978. Many currently under construction are in financial distress. I believe that a primary reason for this distress is the licensing process.

You can visit other countries that are building essentially identical plants to those in the United States. They are using American equipment. They are using American design; in some cases, even American architect/engineers. The only differences are their labor and their licensing process. Other nations can build nuclear plants in 5 or 6 years; it takes 12 to 14 years to build the same plant in the U.S. And believe me, their labor productivity is not that much greater than ours. The difference rests with the licensing process.

We must address this critical problem if America is to have a nuclear component in our energy future—and this Administration believes we must. Last year we introduced legislation which would, we believe, dramatically improve the nuclear licensing process. If that bill passes, we think it will increase public participation and result in at least the same level of safety, if not greater. And it would mean that nuclear plants could be built in 6 or 7 years instead of 12 to 14.

In addition, I announced earlier this month that the Department of Energy will take a series of specific actions to help ensure quality construction of safe nuclear plants. Our goal is to try to build consistent federal policies for programs affecting the nuclear industry. DOE will be ready to participate in providing federal and State utility regulators with better information on which to base licensing and rate decisions. We are undertaking these initiatives at this time to provide encouragement to those who are involved in planning for our energy future.

Coal is another essential component of our energy mix. It is one of the resources that makes us an energy rich Nation today and can make us more energy secure in the future. It can fairly be said that we are the Saudi Arabia of coal. It accounts for over 85 percent of our estimated recoverable fossil fuel reserves—yet contributes only 20 percent or so of our energy today.

The Reagan Administration is dedicated to expanding our use of coal, and stimulating increased exports of all types of U.S. coals. We do recognize, however, that if we don't improve the way coal is burned, both economically and environmentally, intensified pressures to control emissions may create obstacles to the use of this vital resource. As a result, our 1985 budget request for coal research is substantially higher than our request last year. Our increases are directed principally at technologies that permit coal to be burned with minimal environmental impact—environmental research in flue gas cleanup, coal preparation, and other coal cleaning technologies.

We are making real progress in researching ways to burn coal cleanly. Tremendous opportunities exist for coal to play an increasing role in our energy mix without compromising our environmental objectives.

All of the resources I have outlined contribute to our balanced and mixed energy resource system, and thus to our energy security and nondependence. We can feel confident about our energy future, but we must not be complacent. We are vulnerable to oil supply interruptions because of their tremendous potential impact on the world energy market and because of our international responsibilities.

As I mentioned earlier, the conflict between Iran and Iraq continues to escalate, And despite the fact that a minimal amount of our oil requirements come from the Persian Gulf, some of our Western European allies range from 20 to 40 percent dependent and Japan is about 60 percent dependent on oil moving through the Strait of Hormuz. As a result, the President has said that the free world must keep the Strait open.

The Gulf States themselves would probably be the most seriously impacted by closure of the Strait of Hormuz. Virtually their entire income would be affected by their inability to reach the market. The "threat" of such a closure is among those energy emergencies for which we must be, and are, prepared. Contingency planning remains fundamental to our goal of ensuring an adequate supply of energy.

In the event of a supply disruption, the Reagan Administration is committed to continued reliance on the marketplace for price and allocation determination. Federal intervention in the past not only did not work, it actually worsened the situation.

Government controls have historically fouled-up the market. The gasoline lines in the summer of 1979 are examples of shortages created by federal price and allocation controls. Shortages occurred in metropolitan areas, but not in resort areas, because the supply shortfall changed consumption habits and reduced out-of-town travel; under government controls, gas was allocated to resort areas in accordance with predisruption consumption patterns.

Our contingency plan realizes the important fact that market forces—millions of American consumers making individual choices—are the most efficient allocators of energy supplies. Individuals and firms can make their own decisions on how best to cope with an energy shortage—whether it be through conservation, use of alternative fuels, or by other means.

We have, therefore, focused our efforts on:

Filing and maintaining the Strategic Petroleum Reserve;

Removing or reforming economic and technical barriers;

Fostering a closer government-industry partnership;

Promoting public understanding of the need to prepare for energy emergencies; and,

Gathering and disseminating accurate and timely information.

I am pleased to announce that just last weekend, the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR) reached the 400-million-barrel mark—nearly 4 times the level when President Reagan took office.

At its present level, SPR could provide more than 80 days supply if all imports to the U.S. were cut off (in 1980, it was less than 17 days); more than 800 days if Persian Gulf only were cut; and, more than 200 days if OPEC supplies were halted.

That 400 million barrels of oil, of which 290 million has been added since President Reagan took office, provides a cushion I hope we will never need to use. That is, I hope we never have a serious oil supply disruption that would necessitate its use. But we will use it if necessary.

And we will use it early in the event of a significant supply disruption.

When I say early, I mean that when there is a disruption, and we feel it may last for awhile and result in a significant shortfall of supply, we will recommend to the President that we sell from SPR. It will take about 3 weeks to complete the sale process and start oil flowing out of the reserve. Obviously, if the disruption turns out to be minor, we can stop the process. But if it is more serious, then we are on the way, and the world knows we are going to provide a substantial quantity of oil—in excess of 2 million barrels a day—to the market. We can continue that flow of oil for several months, if needed, and at a lesser rate for much longer. I think that would provide a solid stabilizing force while efforts are undertaken to resolve whatever is causing the shortfall.

Let me emphasize that the decision to activate the SPR is the President's. We at the Department of Energy in making a recommendation are not working in isolation. We have a continuing interagency effort involving State, Treasury, Commerce, and others to monitor and analyze an interruption of supply.

The important point is that this Administration's policy is to use SPR early in a disruption and at the most effective rate, which is up to full capacity—currently in excess of 2 million barrels a day.

The United States will not work alone in this venture. We will coordinate with our allies through the International Energy Agency, which is studying how best to use strategic reserves and how much these reserves should contain.

As I have indicated, we believe wholeheartedly in the marketplace. If we are to be energy non-dependent, we must not resort to techniques of the past such as price and allocation controls or more regulation.

But, we cannot afford to rest in our contingency planning efforts. In those efforts, you and I share a common goal: gathering and disseminating accurate and timely information.

Many of the problems which we fear may result from a disruption may be caused by a panic reaction following the first news about it. We believe that panic can be avoided in large part if the public has the facts of the situation. The psychological factor in an emergency situation is the most difficult to address. Our plan to combat those "perceived" problems associated with a shortage is through implementation of a public awareness campaign—starting now, not when it's too late.

We are committed to providing timely and accurate information to the public prior to and during any disruption that may occur. By so doing, we will enable industry, business and American consumers to exercise the judgment and common sense that will prevent "panic" reactions that otherwise could unnecesssarily drive the price of oil to levels beyond what is necessary to balance supply and demand.

I believe you and I must together begin elevating public awareness of the United States' energy situation, and that is why I am here today. We have no choice but to care and be involved. We have no choice but to move America toward energy nondependence. Our lifestyles, our economy, our national security depend upon it.

OPPOSITION TO H.R. 4277—A NATURAL GAS QUICK FIX

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, the Reagan administration's current energy policy focuses on two major strategies: Promotion of a balanced and mixed energy resource system, and minimizing Federal interference in energy markets. Over the past several years this sound and consistent approach to energy policy has restored our energy supplies, and improved our overall energy independence.

Despite this substantial redirection in energy policy, there are still areas where great improvements can be made. One of these areas is natural gas policy. The current price control system for natural gas is in the words of Secretary of Energy Don Hodel, clearly "anticonsumer." Simply stated, producers of natural gas are discouraged from producing the least costly natural gas available. Instead of producing this least costly gas by improving and modifying existing wells, producers are encouraged to seek and develop more expensive types of natural gas. Pipeline companies also have little incentive to buy the cheapest gas from producers since, by law, they can merely pass on added costs to their customers. The only true answer to this problem is complete decontrol of natural gas.

H.R. 4277, if passed, would only exacerbate this already anticompetitive situation. It is a quick fix bill that limits short-term prices by increasing Federal controls and postponing the scheduled phase out of regulations on about one half the natural gas in America.

This bill will also continue to discourage efficient production on our Nation's least costly natural gas reserves by maintaining Federal controls on that gas.

In summary, passage of this bill will result in: Higher costs, decreased production, increased reliance on foreign oil, and a potential gas shortage.

The primary argument for the continued control and regulation of the natural gas industry is that prices would increase sharply or "fly-up" when the NGPA ceilings expire on January 1, 1985. It is the same song and dance we heard before oil deregulation. If the market is allowed to function, supplies of natural gas will increase and prices, after an initial period of adjustment, should go down, as evidenced by oil decontrol. There are three economic factors that support my contention that supplies will increase and prices decrease. Possibly the most compelling reason is the current surplus of natural gas supplies. Under decontrol, this surplus not only will continue but should increase for some time. As a consequence of this surplus, the simple rules of supply and demand would prevent producers from raising prices under decontrol at all, let alone to the levels asserted by advocates of continued price controls.

A second reason for no price "fly-up" is the continued moderation of oil prices. With fuel oil prices at the present level natural gas prices would have to remain competitive with the price of oil, its most readily available alternative.

Finally, there is a major effort by large gas customers to find and evaluate the savings potential of energy alternatives. If the price of gas were to rise steeply these customers would find some other fuel to use. This gives producers and pipeline companies a considerable incentive to be efficient and to maintain reasonable prices.

Although full decontrol may not be a political reality, when dealing with the issue of natural gas we must look to our past success with the decontrol of oil prices. To date the record of energy markets and the economy demonstrates clearly that economic efficiency does not result from Federal intervention and control. The results of deregulating oil prices have proved this. We must realize that when the free market is allowed to function with a minimum of interference it will ensure the right mixture of energy sources. It will also enable us to have a responsive, flexible system that adjusts efficiently to changing circumstances. This bill is not a step in the right direction.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. KASTEN]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I believe the time for the transaction of routine morning business has expired, has it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has. Morning business is closed.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER—AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

(Pending: Motion to waive section 303(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of H.R. 5743, Department of Agriculture Appropriations, 1985)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the motion of the majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE STALLED BUDGET

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, for the sixth time this year, we are being asked to waive section 303(a) of the Budget Act in order to consider an appropriations bill. These waivers have been necessary because the conferees on the first budget resolution still have not reached agreement.

Even though the Budget Act requires the conferees to report back within 7 days, it has been over 2 months since the Senate passed its budget resolution and sent it to conference, and still no resolution is in sight. In fact, there has not even been a meeting of the budget conferees since June 27.

Never in the history of the budget process has a first budget resolution been held hostage for so long. The Budget Act timetable calls for adoption of the conference report on the budget by May 15. It is now August, the time when we should be beginning deliberations on the second, and binding, budget resolution. As things stand now, however, we will be lucky to have even a first budget resolution by the start of the fiscal year.

It seems clear, Mr. President, that further progress on the budget resolution is being blocked by the administration's unwillingness to compromise over the level of Pentagon spending next year. Large differences between the budgets passed by both Houses are nothing new. But conference committees have always been able to effect a compromise in the past. This year, however, those who support the administration's Pentagon spending plan appear to be prepared to jettison the entire budget rather than compromise their point of view. The orderly procedures of the Congress—procedures established to organize and expedite the business of the country—are ignored and bypassed in order to promote zealously held views with respect to Pentagon funding.

Nor is the budget conference the only conference being held hostage to the administration's rigid insistence on its defense budget. The conference on the defense authorization bill is also deadlocked, because the administration would apparently rather destroy the product of weeks of debate on both the House and Senate floors than compromise or accept political embarrassment, if that is a fear on the part of some.

Mr. President, the processes by which we have long governed ourselves are being stood on their heads. The long-term interests of this institution are being sacrificed in order to defend the administration's programs and its short-term political interests.

I hope that the administration will allow the Senate and House Republican conferees in connection with both of the foregoing measures to work their will and not stand in the way of a compromise on the budget resolution and defense authorization. Let the conferences get back to work.

What is at stake, Mr. President, is more than just the Pentagon's budget for next year. What is at stake is the integrity of our institution and its long tradition of debate and bipartisan compromise. What is at stake is the Budget Act itself, and the ability of Congress to exercise its constitutional power of the purse in a responsible and orderly fashion.

During its 10-year history, the budget process has often been controversial. But few would dispute the urgent and continuing need for the discipline it seeks to impose. The central purpose of the Budget Act is to provide the Congress with a framework for evaluating the impact of its individual spending and taxing decisions on the economy as a whole—and for making choices among competing demands for scarce resources. It has never been more important that we make those choices wisely and deliberately than it is today.

If the budget process is allowed to be destroyed in order to prevent those choices from being made in a bipartisan spirit and in a spirit of compromise, we will do ourselves—and, ultimately, the Nation—a grave disservice. The Founding Fathers gave Congress the power of the purse. With that power comes the responsibility to exercise it wisely. That is a responsibility which we will abdicate if we continue on our present course.

I commend the distinguished Senator from Florida, the ranking member of the Senate Committee on the Budget. His is a principled stand. I hope that Senators on both sides of the aisle will support him in that effort. The budget process and the committee process are being emasculated because of the obstinance of the administration in its refusal to compromise on the Pentagon budget.

There is room for compromise. I think that the national security is the first priority always, but if the support of the American people for defense funding is not to erode, it is important that the waste and mismanagement, which have been recently brought to light, be brought under control. When that is done, a reduction in the rate of increase in Pentagon funding will provide a stronger defense than we presently have. But if the administration insists on throwing money at the problem, which means that some of the moneys go down a rat hole, then the support of the American people for a strong defense will ultimately erode. And while that is happening, of course, the budget process by which Congress can discipline itself in the matters of spending will have also been cast aside and will be a victim of the administration's shortsighted obstinacy.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE DELAYS

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I was sitting at my desk, and I heard the distinguished minority leader, for whom I have the greatest respect, talking about the need for hurrying up conferences with the House, particularly, as I understood it—and I may have misunderstood it because of the difficulty sometimes in hearing over the loudspeaker—the conference between the House and the Senate on armed services, and he asked that the administration—President Reagan—make concessions.

Mr. President, it is not Mr. Reagan who is holding up the conference between the House and Senate on armed services. I cannot prove this, but I have every reason to believe that the Speaker of the House does not want a conference report until after the election. I hope I am wrong.

Our two committees have conferred together. I know, for over 20 years, that many Members of the House feel almost exactly as we do about the necessity for having in this country a strong military. We usually disagree on very small things. In fact, I report to the Senate—if my chairman, Senator TOWER, has not done so already—that in the nuts and bolts area of these two bills, we are in great agreement. Adjustments have been made on both sides.

Mr. President, we have spent nearly 1 month in conference between these two committees, and in 1 month we have never talked about ammunition, about ships, about aircraft, about guns, about the pay for the troops. We have talked about nothing but things affecting foreign policy.

I have been around this business long enough to know that the Armed Services Committee is not supposed to be engaged necessarily in foreign policy. That is the prerogative of the President of the United States and committees on foreign policy in both Houses. But I do not want to hear the President or the administration blamed for holding up this conference, when the holdup comes from the obstinacy of the House—and I do not say the House committee. I think it comes from above, from Mr. O'NEILL.

We are held up, frankly, on one point, and that point has to do with the MX. While I am not a particularly great believer in the MX, nevertheless, the Senate has passed by one vote and the House by three votes the approval for the MX missile. So it is the position of the Senate that we are trying to defend.

The language of the House called for the right of the House only—one House—to negatively vote a veto on the MX. What we were trying to argue was that we would be willing to recede to the House and agree to a double veto, a positive-type veto in both Houses, but they would not give up on this.

On the four major points having not much to do with armed services, we have yielded and they have yielded. We have almost written off the words on the surface launch cruise missile because it is not applicable. We have made what I consider to be—and I think most of the members of that committee feel to be—an acceptable position on the ASAP, which is the offense to develop weapons that we can use to interfere with the operation of Russian satellites, should they ever be used for war purposes.

I will be honest, Mr. President: I cannot understand how any person serving in the Congress of the United States can vote against research and development on weapons to defend our own freedom and to defend our own people. A rather disturbing and dangerous situation has come about in this whole Congress, and I do not know why it has come about.

Mr. President, I am sorry that the minority leader left the Chamber, but he will see my remarks in the RECORD; and if he wants to discuss this matter, I will be glad to discuss it further with him.

I am just as sorry as anybody else about the—I will call it mayhem which our inability to reach an agreement is going to cause, when we have to have continuing resolutions, one after another, to run the defenses of this country. That does not make a bit of sense.

If the Budget Committee and the Appropriations Committee have to prepare a bill on armed services for us to debate, we are going to have a lame-duck session, and we are going to stand here day after day after day and night after night, hanging ornaments on that Christmas tree. Every State in the Union will have something special, with a special tinsel. This is an election year, and they will hang it on that bill, and we will wind up with a piece of legislation that will not be a lot of help in defending the freedom of our country.

Mr. President, I do not envy the Budget Committee being in the straits in which they are. I have never honestly believed that the Budget Committee and the authorization process can live together. I may be wrong. At first, I thought the budget process was one of the finest ideas that had ever been introduced in this body and the other body. But when the authorization committees have to wait until February, until now, to make decisions, I do not think that is in the best interests of the country.

For example, my Tactical Warfare Subcommittee could have had a complete report out by the end of February, but I was not allowed to. I kept being told, "You cannot do it; you cannot hand figures out until you know what we are for."

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I am happy to yield.

Mr. CHILES. I wonder if the Senator understands that under the Budget Act there is nothing that requires the authorizing committee to wait unless it is authorizing entitlements. And I do not think the Armed Services Committee is authorizing entitlements, so there is nothing in the Budget Committee Act that requires the Senator's committee to have to wait.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I could not agree with the Senator more, unless we want to act on our own and submit figures that might be approved or might be disapproved.

Mr. CHILES. The Senator has been here so much longer than I have. But during the time that I have been here it seems to me that the authorizing committees have more often than not authorized more than ultimately was appropriated. So I always felt that authorization was one function, that we will authorize what you may spend up to a certain number of dollars; you may buy up a certain number of planes, but the appropriating committee is not bound to spend all of that.

So, for the life of me, I cannot understand why this authorizing committee is complaining or saying they have to wait.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The Senator is absolutely right. I am not blaming the authorizing or the Budget Committee. I think the authorization process is slowly going by the boards.

I think every Senator in here who serves as chairman of a committee or chairman of a subcommittee will agree to that.

I would still like to see the budget process work. I wish to do everything in my power to make it work.

But the problem we are facing in this hassle with the House of Representatives is not a budget committee. I merely got the Budget Committee in it because I know if we do not come to an agreement that the Appropriations Committee aided by the Budget Committee will come up with a military bill on which we will hassle and hassle all after the election.

Mr. CHILES. I will say again to the distinguished Senator from Arizona the problem is the Budget Committee has been unable to come to a decision with a conference committee report. We are supposed to do that before we pass any appropriations bill. We have never gone beyond June before without a conference agreement. As I see the problem the reason the Budget Committee has not been able to reach agreement is that a decision has been made by the White House, in conjunction with the leadership of the Republican majority, that they want to make sure that the authorizing committee and the Appropriations Committee determine a defense number beforehand.

Now, that is contrary to the act, but it seems to me that is the problem.

The Senator said that he would wish to see the Budget Committee act. Did he know that in our conference we have only met four times over a period of months, and none of those meetings have lasted much over 1 hour.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I realize that, but I might point out to my friend from Florida that we are still waiting for what we call the numbers.

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. GOLDWATER. It is not going to make all that difference if we get some agreement between the House of Representatives and the Senate. The numbers will pretty much fall in line. That does not bother me so much.

I just wanted to come to the floor to make the statement that in all of our deliberations between the two bodies, we have never felt the hand of the administration. I wish we could have felt the hand, frankly.

The Senate did yield on our own $2 billion to the House of Representatives. They wanted $296.4 billion; we wanted $299 billion. So we came down to $297 billion, and I think we could have reached an agreement on that figure. I do not think that would have been a big problem.

The problem as I outline here is one point, their adamant position taken overwhelmingly, I might say, by the House of Representatives, and they have to represent the House of Representatives just as we have to represent the Senate, that there can only be one vote on a veto and that would be a negative vote by the House of Representatives and I think on something as important as our defense both bodies should have a hand in the veto. That is my point.

I did not come on the floor to argue whether the Appropriations Committee is right or the Budget Committee is right, or whether the authorization is right or wrong.

I merely touched on those in passing because I watched over the years that I have been here the development of the Budget Committee, my enthusiasm for it, and the later discovery that there are difficulties that I think that they will iron themselves out.

Mr. CHILES. The Senator said something about the Budget Committee that piqued my attention. I listened to his other points, but I noticed he also talked about a lameduck session. Let me say I want to join with him in saying I hope we do not have one. I do not look forward to coming back. I have not felt over the years those have been healthy sessions. But I notice he said that if we do that there will be all those baubles for the Christmas tree and I think he is right. He has noted there were so many years when that happened.

Again I point out to him if we had a budget resolution that set the total level of spending that would keep those baubles off the Christmas tree.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I would be so much in favor of that that I cannot tell the Senator. As I say, we are waiting for the numbers, not that it is going to do this or do that, but we wish to know, Can we buy F-15's or can we buy so many ships, can we spend so much money on tanks? That is the problem, and the problem really does not amount to a whole lot when we get to arguing between the subcommittees of the House of Representatives and the Senate. We know that if we bring a bill back here, and I hope that we do bring a bill back here, that the numbers are not going to be a problem.

Mr. CHILES. I agree with that. I was interested when the Senator said that the conference committee had been meeting over the last month and he said they settled most of the other differences. Have there been quite a few meetings of the conferees? Have they spent quite a few hours on this?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I say we have settled between the subcommittees that met on an informal basis, the staffs, the elected Members, as I say, on nuts and bolts issues. In my Subcommittee on Tactical Warfare, we are not in great disagreement with the House of Representatives, but we have never been able to get the House of Representatives or the Senate in a position to say, "Let us vote on the number of F-16's or the number of F-15's." We have to first eliminate those four major blocks at the top, the chief of which is the MX.

Mr. CHILES. But the conferees have been working over a period of time to try to work out all of these differences.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The conferees have worked at the clerical level and along with Senators on the problems of research and development, on the problems of strategic, tactical, naval, personnel; in other words, if we could get rid of this one stumbling block I think we could finish the conference in a matter of 2 or 3 days at the most, but I do not see any possibility of that happening when I have a strong feeling that the leadership of the House of Representatives does not want any decision made until after the election. I can understand that. If we had not had the White House for a number of years, and we had a candidate we felt had a chance, I think the reaction would be pretty much as we are running into over here. We are not going to get judges appointed. We are not going to get members of important agencies appointed. That is politics as I understand it, and I do not raise a particular fuss about it except in this instance the security of our country I think is far, far more important than who is elected President or who controls the House of Representatives or who controls the Senate. I do not think that the continuing resolution is a wise way to go.

Mr. CHILES. I join with the Senator from Arizona because I also do not think the continuing resolution is a wise way to deal with that.

It seems to me we should go back and say the first thing in the puzzle is supposed to be the Budget Act then go ahead and approve a budget resolution. Then the authorizing committee would be free to go forward. I think it is noble restraint that the Armed Services Committee has decided we would like to have that total number, we would like to work with it. I think that is a good restraint.

The law does not impose that restraint, the Budget Act does not, but I think it is good. I think it makes it all the more important, especially for the Appropriations Committee, that we get a budget out of here and we know what the numbers are. I think it might help solve some of these problems.

As the Senator from Louisiana was saying yesterday, every time he saw a conference committee that ultimately could not resolve its problems, he finally had to say, "We do not agree with you, and you do not agree with us, but we have to split the difference and go somewhere in between."

Well, if you had a defense number today of $294 billion, as Senator DOMENICI proposed 5 months ago, I suspect it would be a lot easier to solve the problem you are talking about.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, my purpose in coming to the floor was not to debate the subject of the appropriations or budget. I merely wanted to point out, as I think I have done, that the administration has not had a hand in this. I sometimes, as I say, wish they could have taken a position that would have made it completely easy for us to say to the House we need it. But we are hopeful that we can come back.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, as a member of the Budget Committee and as a member of the Armed Services Committee, I have been listening with great interest to the discussion between my good friend from Florida and my good friend from Arizona. I just want to say that I believe my colleague, my experienced colleague, from Arizona, who I think has been on the Armed Services Committee ever since he has been in the U.S. Senate, and that is a very distinguished career, has basically laid out what the problem is.

I am a member of the conference committee between the House and the Senate on the Department of Defense authorization bill. He has quite clearly spelled it out.

The whole hangup, the only real important hangup on the major matters of confrontation between the House and the Senate on the Department of Defense authorization bill has to do with the MX. We spend entirely too much time in this body attempting to affix responsibility for the lack of moving ahead in a whole series of areas.

My reason for rising, then, Mr. President, is not to attempt to affix responsibility but to add one caveat, if I might, to the explanation given by my friend from Arizona.

Yes, the MX is the major hangup. And before I say what I am about to say, I think the record should clearly show that this Senator from Nebraska, a member of the Armed Services Committee and the ranking member on the Strategic and Theater Nuclear Forces Subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee that has first jurisdiction over our nuclear deterrent, originally supported the MX missile when it was proposed for multiple protective shelters; or, to put that another way, I supported the MX as a reasonable deterrent under our triad theory of defense and deterrence, so long as that MX missile was not a sitting duck target—I say again, a sitting duck target—by the Soviet Union.

I switched from my support of the MX on that day, either October 1 or October 2, when the present administration upset, turned upside down, the plan for the MX missile as proposed and developed by two or three previous administrations, their military chiefs and all of the planning processes in the Pentagon, because on that day it was decided by the administration to put the MX in vulnerable Minuteman holes.

Basically, as I understand the development of the MX—and it started long before I came to this body—it was the fact that they thought that we needed a deterrent because our Minuteman II and Minuteman III silos had been targeted by the Soviet Union to accept two warheads from the Soviet Union in the event of a surprise attack. I think our planners at that time wisely decided that that had such an adverse effect on our deterrent that we could not accept that; hence, the MX missile. It was decided that we should build MX. It was decided that we should make it movable so that it was not vulnerable, and that made a great deal of sense.

But with that decision on October 1 or October 2, 1981, the decision was made to put that 10-warhead missile, that new $20 billion baby, back in the same vulnerable hole that essentially was the reason that we decided that we needed a mobile missile in the first instance.

With that, that was my conclusion. And well-intentioned people, sincerely concerned about the improvement of the defense of the United States of America, as this Senator, do not agree with me. I could be wrong, but at least that is my conclusion.

Now, suffice it to say, Mr. President, the hangup in the Department of Defense authorization bill is somewhat similar to the hangup that has occurred in the budget process, and may about to be occurring in the appropriation process in both bodies, both the House and the Senate. And, when I addressed the Senate yesterday, I said that I felt that the whole process here was beginning to deteriorate.

Now, it seems to me that we should also understand another facet of the hangup in the Department of Defense negotiations now going on between the House and the Senate. As I said, this authorization process could move ahead—and I agree completely with the Senator from Arizona—if we could resolve the MX difficulty.

We have been successful, Mr. President, with the cooperation of the Members on the House side, in basically eliminating the "fencing" language that I thought was terribly inappropriate in at least one version of the Department of Defense authorization bill that came out of the House. That essentially was a proposition that we would leave up to the Soviet Union and their actions, in a sense, a veto over whether or not we went ahead and built and deployed the MX missile. Now I have said before that I am against the MX missile as presently programmed. Nevertheless, if it is the will of the majority of this body and the other body that that missile be deployed, then I think we should go ahead and deploy it and certainly not leave the decision to be based primarily on what actions the Soviet Union do or do not take with regard to arms control negotiations.

It seems to me that whether I agree with the MX missile or not is one thing. But I have confidence in the President of the United States that he would not act irresponsibly in that area. Now, many of my colleagues here and many of my colleagues on both sides in the House of Representatives do not necessarily agree with that.

One of the sad things about the conference so far, it seems to me, is the fact that—and I do not know who is responsible, but it has to come, I think from either the White House or the Department of Defense—they object to some kind of a caveat in the authorization bill that would say that both the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives would have an opportunity to vote sometime next year—and the date of April 15 is customarily mentioned—as to whether or not we want to proceed with the MX deployment.

Now it has been the position of some, a position that I do not agree with, but it has been basically the position of the majority on the Senate side in this conference that we do not want to give in to that; that we only want to go ahead and authorize this and leave it in place, leave the authorization for the MX to proceed on schedule only if one House has the right to overturn that.

The House of Representatives objects to that. What we are really talking about, Mr. President, is whether after the first of the year, April 15, before or after, there should be or should not be a subsequent vote in both in the House and the Senate in an approval mode as to whether or not the MX should move forward.

The parliamentary trickery, or misunderstanding, or options, depending on your point of view, are simply this: That if, for example, we require a vote by one or both Houses, then that veto could be vetoed by the President of the United States, if he so desired. Then it would come back to the two bodies or one body, and one-third of the U.S. Senate, or one-third of the House of Representatives, a minority, indeed would have final say as to whether or not we proceed. That is the hangup.

Let me say in conclusion, in my attempt to try to clarify the difficulty that we are having in this conference, that I think it is generally agreed by a vast majority of both the House and the Senate Members on the Armed Services Committees of both the Senate and the House that the MX missile, because of its many shortcomings, is losing favor very rapidly in both bodies by both Democrats and Republicans alike. I do not think this is necessarily a partisan issue. I suspect that even the, sometimes called, more hawkish members of both the Armed Services Committees in the House and Senate probably recognize that for all intents and purposes the plan to deploy 100 MX missiles is as dead as the proverbial doornail. It comes down to a question now as to how many and how fast we are going to deploy the MX, and in what numbers.

Therefore, I think it would be far better, if indeed we kept the production line "hot" as was suggested, I believe, in the amendment, which lost after a tie vote, offered by the Senator from Florida; if we had some kind of a proposal like that, and give the House and the Senate both a chance to work their affirmative will on this matter after the first of the year. I do not think that will be done, at least with the loggerhead situation that we presently find ourselves faced with in the conference. Nevertheless, it is not one-sided. There are some legitimate concerns in so many areas.

I am disappointed that we are not meeting right now because as long as we are meeting with the House of Representatives there is a chance of a breakthrough. There is a chance that we could get the key players together, recognize that there are some legitimate concerns, and that it is not necessarily appropriate that we go down that line to ensure 15 to 20 more MX missiles and the full-scale push forward for the MX missile in the terms of 100 of such that has been proposed by the administration.

I simply say again that I suspect that reality when it sets in will make us all realize that that is not going to happen. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks by the Senator from Arizona. I appreciate what the Senator from Florida is trying to do in focusing attention on something that has escaped the attention of most of the Members of both bodies; that is, the budget process, which is supposedly designed to set some limits, and at least begin to get our fiscal house back in order so that we could begin to reduce the interest rates that are causing serious disruption in many segments of our economy today, until we get with it, until we have the courage to bite the bullet and address that, I think that we are going to keep wandering in no-man's-land, so to speak, with regard to the functions that we have and the responsibility that we assumed when we came here to the U.S. Senate to represent our State and our Nation as a whole.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CHILES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska. I know that he has worked long and hard on both of the committees, the Budget Committee and the Committee on Armed Services. I know he has always been a champion for defense, and the concern that he has in regard to the efficacy now of the MX missile is one I happen to share. I supported it through all of the research, development, and early testing. I felt—and feel today—that we needed a follow-on to make sure that we keep a strong triad. I support the concept of triad. I think it is a very reasonable one. I want to see this country safe.

We have miscalculated in many instances about how long it would take the Russians to catch up and were aware that we thought we had an advantage. We miscalculated it in MIRV and MIRV'ing. We miscalculated it in their aiming accuracy in the strategic missiles, and now we think we have some advantage in submarines, and the missiles that we have on our triad and Polaris submarines. I hear a lot of people say, "Why do we not just depend on that?" We do not know how long we will have that advantage. I think we cannot rely on just one leg. We do not know how long we can rely on the bomber leg. So having a land-based missile system is one that has been crucial to the United States. And since the Russians achieved the greater accuracy with their huge throw-weight, we had to do something to make sure that we would have some kind of a survivable missile. That, of course, was to be the MX in some kind of a deployment mode that would make it survivable.

But from the day the decision was made to put that missile into the old Minuteman hole is the day that this Senator from Florida began to wonder what in the world have we done? What in the world are we doing spending for this kind of missile? It is a very destabilizing missile. Its only real use now in a vulnerable hole is almost to be a first strike weapon. It means that the Russians would have to view it that way.

So many of us wanted to see us either come up with a more reliable form of basing mode, recognizing there are all kinds of political problems in doing that, or getting on with another missile like Midgetman, and try to determine if that is the direction in which to go. So I think there is a very legitimate argument as to what we do with MX.

The Senator from Florida had an amendment that I attempted to put on the armed services bill, when it was on the floor. That amendment failed on a tie vote. What the Senator from Florida was trying to do was to go along with what the Senator from Arizona has said. How can we not do the research and development that we need to do to protect the country? So I continued all of that, and even continued the ability to have the production line ready and going. But I did not add additional missiles this year on the basis that we need to really determine whether Midgetman is viable; can we speed it up, can we bring it online. How many MX's in these vulnerable holes do we believe we have to build?

I come at that from a budgetary concept as well, and, hopefully, a strategic concept, because if we put all our eggs in that basket, I cannot say to myself that we are improving the triad by putting MX back into the Minuteman silos.

I do not think we are. I think, if anything, we are creating a more destabilizing situation. If we have a President that has the gumption to say we may have to make a State unhappy by putting it there, then that is one thing. It may be easier for me because they are not looking at my State right now. I know that is a great problem if you come from the States in which they were talking about putting those missiles.

But those are the tough decisions. But I think sooner or later we have to recognize that either we are going to put MX in a more viable mode or it is going to be killed. If it is not this year, it will be next year.

I come to that conclusion, and if I come to that, then I would like to save a few billion dollars while we are doing it until we make that decision. Go ahead and do the research, do the flight testing, do the development, do everything that is necessary other than to say, "We are just going to throw another bundle out the window until we do decide."

Mr. GOLDWATER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I apologize to my friend from Nebraska who also was on his feet.

I think what the Senator has said should serve as a very accurate warning, particularly when we realize it took the Vice President to break a tie vote in this body relative to the missile, and the House only passed it by three votes. I would say out of 435 people to come up with a three-vote lead is not conducive to thinking it will go on forever.

I would say, and I am inclined to think the Senator would agree, that sometime between now and the first of the year, if a lameduck session is held, or even if it is not held, the subject of the MX missile will be coming up again.

I have been listening to this for so many years I cannot remember. In fact, a young general officer came over to my office the other day and he said, "Do you remember, when I first came to you I was a major and I was trying to sell you on the MX and you were not quite buying it?"

I said, "I still have that opinion, but now that you are a general officer, I may have to give you a little more respect."

But there are questions, for example, about the small missile that theoretically can be moved around on trucks or on a railroad. That is going to be a very difficult thing to sell to the people of this country. Do you want a convoy going through Miami ready to shoot? No, you do not want that.

I think the original idea was a very good one. They came out to my desserts, where nobody lives, and they were all ready to build the silos and plant the missiles when they decided they needed water for 30,000 people. We do not have water out there for one dog.

That sent them to Nevada. Nevada did not like it either.

Wherever you want to place missiles, I do not care whether they are MX's or anything else, there will be problems.

Mr. CHILES. It is like a nuclear waste dump being placed somewhere.

Mr. GOLDWATER. That is correct. We have a problem here that has to be solved. Frankly, I lean more strongly to conventional weapons to enable us to be ready to fight and win a war than I do to us having a great collection of nuclear weapons. On the number of warheads, for example, we say we have 8,000. Well, you do not reload a Minuteman or an MX like you reload a 30-caliber rifle. It takes about 12 to 24 hours to put the new head on, get it set, tell the head where to go and hope it gets there. By that time you are lucky if you have a silo left.

I just wanted to point out to the Senator that I agree with a lot of what he said and a lot of what my friend from Nebraska said.

The future of the MX is a very cloudy one. If I were an MX, I would start venting my oxygen.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Once again, Mr. President, it has been my privilege to listen to the wisdom and experience of the senior Senator from Arizona. He has been a fabulous member of the Armed Services Committee and always tells it like it is. That is why I admire him and respect him so much, although we do not agree on everything.

Let me respond to something said by the Senator from Florida with regard to where the MX missile goes.

I think it is no secret in the Senate that at least some of the 100 processed MX missiles will go in Minuteman II and III silos in my State of Nebraska, the Warren Air Force Base out of Cheyenne, Minuteman II and III coming across the line from Wyoming into Nebraska.

There are some people who are opposed to the MX missile being placed in Nebraska, I know. That is not this Senator's position.

I would be opposed to the MX missile plan as outlined by the administration on October 2, 1981, whether the missiles were being placed in Wyoming, Nebraska, Miami, Chicago, or Washington, DC., or Timbuktu. It does not make so much difference where they are placed. My position is that it makes no sense to build that weapon and put it into any vulnerable silo, wherever it is.

To put it in another fashion, it is a $20 billion boondoggle forced on us by the Department of Defense.

Second, I would like to say that there has been a great deal of discussion, much of it classified, in the Armed Services Committee and the subcommittees with regard to the so-called Midgetman. Certainly, I want to emphasize what the Senator from Florida brought out. This Senator, and I believe every member of the Armed Services Committees in both the House and the Senate agrees, feels that we must keep the strength of our triad.

That is why this Senator, unlike some of my colleagues, supports the B-1 bomber. I think 100 B-1 bombers, no more, as the Defense Department is now talking about going beyond that, adds to our penetrating ability for the next several years, as far as the territory of the Soviet Union is concerned. But even when it can no longer be a penetrator because of recent technical advancement, it could play and will play a very vital role in our overall defense needs.

So the triad has to be protected. The question is, How do we make the triad the strongest it can possibly be with the amount of money that we have to spend?

The Senator from Arizona has wisely brought up the fact that if and when we can bring out a Midgetman, and that is still a question, how do we deploy it?

The conventional mode of deploying that originally was to have it based on rails or trucks on military bases or Government-owned land.

One of the reasons that we hear so much today about the Midgetman may never work because the people in Miami, FL, do not want that driving up and down the beach into Key Biscayne is a valid one. But I believe that is another false argument being used time and time again to slow down, if you will, the possible deployment of Midgetman so that they can ram through the MX missile above all cost, with or without reason.

I feel that we might be able to move the Midgetman up and help to fill the gap, if there is a gap. I am strongly supportive of that. I made a suggestion recently that I think we will be going ahead on. That suggestion is that as of now we do not have any studies to know what presently owned military bases and Government-owned land that Midgetman, when and if developed, could remain on and still be invulnerable to a Soviet first strike.

It seems to me, with the vast amount of land that we have, not only in prime military bases but also Government-owned land in the United States of America, there certainly must be ample places that we could deploy a Midgetman in some movable mode without the possibility of running it up and down the interstate highways of America and not locate anywhere near Miami, FL. I say these things just to add, maybe, some clarity to a confusion that I think plays all too much of a part in our overall planning and defense strategy today. Planning is important, I am a part of that; I am proud to be a part of it. I think we make strides, but that does not mean I think we should write a blank check to the Pentagon on everything, certainly not the $20 billion MX missile fiasco that I am convinced will do very little to add to our nuclear deterrent.

We do not hear the Soviet Union complaining today, do we, about the missile? That is the least of their worries. It should be a worry to the American taxpayer that is going to be soaked to the tune of $50 billion if we move ahead with it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I wish to take just a few moments to review what our situation is on the floor today. Yesterday, the distinguished majority leader sought recognition. He made a motion. He had the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee on the floor. He sought to waive the budget resolution to allow it to be in order for the agriculture appropriations bill to come to the floor of the Senate for consideration. That is the way. We routinely handle appropriations bills but some years back—in 1973 or 1974—we decided that we had to change the way we were doing business, because we were passing a number of separate appropriations bills without any idea of how much they would add up to.

No one was ever adding up the amount of money we were spending on those bills. No one was ever deciding in any year how much we had to spend, or how much our revenue was going to be. So we found ourselves, every year, running a deficit, every year getting further and further into the hole.

Worse than that, Mr. President, we found ourselves starting new programs. It was rather easy to start a program. If a problem were recognized in this country—and there was no shortage of problems—someone could design legislation, come to this floor or the House, and say, "I am starting a program to cure this particular problem. It is only going to cost $5 million this year."

No one looked at the fact that we were building a formula into that program that would guarantee irresistible growth. All of the problems that we have now, or the vast majority of those problems—programs that we cannot pare back—if you look back into legislative history, you will find that we thought it was only going to cost a small sum of money.

We had a discussion yesterday on kidney dialysis and its cost. When we first started talking about that program, we said it would be $230 million. It has now exceeded $2 billion.

How can we talk to people and say, if you need a kidney transplant, the Government will not help you pay for that, but if you happen to have a kidney problem, the Government will take care of that. If you have emphysema, we have not taken care of that, but kidneys we will treat you. If you are going to have a problem, you will be better off if you select kidneys rather than something else. That is just one example.

We decided some years back that we had to have a budget act. We decided we needed a Budget Committee, and a Congressional Budget Office to analyze the numbers. We were going to start at the beginning of the year before we did anything else and decide how much money would be coming in, and how much we expected to spend to run this Government. If there was not sufficient money coming in to do that, we would either have to ask the Finance Committee to devise new taxes, or add to the deficit.

For the first time, Mr. President, we had a national debate through the people's elected Representatives on the nature of our priorities and how we should spend our money. We were to pass a budget resolution. That budget resolution was to set the blueprint for the spending committees, especially the appropriating committees, establishing how much money they should spend.

Well, we have seen that program work every year since. More years than not, we had a budget in June.

We had our spending blueprint. We had the guide for the Appropriations Committees on how much they would be able to spend. So we were not going to do business in the old way any more without regard to our financial capacity. Finally, we were saying, wait a minute, there are only so many dollars that we have to run this Government, so we have to ration those dollars, we have to set some priorities. That is what the Budget Act was about.

This year, it seems to be different. The distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], whom I so greatly respect and who has been such a strong force in this Budget Act, said yesterday this is a "very different year." I certainly agree with him. I think one of the major reasons is that this is one of those years that is divisible by four. It is a Presidential election year. It is a year in which all of the Congress and a third of the Senate also run. It is having a substantial effect.

Mr. President, this year we do not have a budget resolution. The House has passed one, the Senate has passed one. We went to conference some months ago. But that conference has never produced a product. That conference is supposed to work out differences between the House and the Senate, and come up with something that is a final figure. It has failed to do that.

Why has that happened, Mr. President? Well, I do not think it has happened because our differences cannot be settled. No; I think we do not even have the will to try to settle those differences. We have one major sticking point. That sticking point is the total number we are going to spend on the military.

The Senate has passed a number of $299 billion that we shall spend for defense. The House has passed a number of $287 billion. So we have a $12 billion difference that we took to conference.

This is not the first time that has happened, Mr. President. We went to a conference with a difference of over $12.5 billion one year; we resolved that. We have seen House and Senate conferences go with different numbers on taxes, different numbers on what we should spend on highways, on education, and every other program. If the bill was there, Mr. President, we have always been able to reconcile our differences. Sometimes we had to ultimately throw up our hands and say if there is no other way to decide it, we shall split the difference, halfway in between. Sometimes, one side has been able to persuade the other that the numbers should go a little further to one end than it should to the other end. This time, Mr. President, that has not happened.

I think it has not happened because there simply has not been the will. We have only met four times. Over those last months that the conference has been in session, only four meetings have been held. Two or three of those meetings lasted less than an hour. Only one went any period of time over an hour. All of the other differences basically have been worked out at the staff level; we have not even had to go in and argue them. We have had some terrible arguments over little programs before and all of those have been worked out. We are hung up only in the number for military spending.

What has the House done? I am a creature of the Senate. I usually think that we do things right; I always blame the House when things have gone wrong. The House, we have to say this time, Mr. President, has offered to split the difference. They did that early on; they said, we will split the difference between what we have and what the Senate has. They set the split at $292 billion.

They have also agreed to split the assumptions about inflation in defense. They will split those assumptions between the Department of Defense number and the level expected by the Congressional Office of the Budget.

What has been the offer of the Senate? The Senate has said, "Mr. President, we will not compromise on our defense number. We will not move one inch."

Mr. President, that is done, of course, by the majority of the Senate which is under the control of the Republicans. When we debated that same budget resolution, we had an amendment that would have provided for defense at $291 billion, a 4-percent growth rate. I might point out, Mr. President, that is 4 percent growth over and above inflation. So if inflation is going to be 5 percent this year, that means it would be 9 percent growth, but at 4 percent real growth. We had a good debate on that in the Senate, but it is interesting to see where the overwhelming vote is on this defense number we are now hung up on in the conference. This Senate tied on that 4 percent number. The vote was a tie. Exactly half of the Senators voted for 4 percent, exactly half of the Senators voted against it. Because it was a tie number, the amendment failed.

But that is how close we were in the Senate. At $291 billion we had a tie in the Senate, and the House has already offered us more than that. Yet we are hung up with no budget resolution because the majority now says that figure has to be $299 billion, the figure that comes from the Rose Garden. That is the figure that comes from the White House. That is the figure that we have to march to now because there is not going to be any change in that number.

The Senator from Florida considers himself a strong supporter of defense. Over the 14 years I have been in the Senate, I have voted for every defense authorization act, I have voted for every defense appropriation bill. I do not want to see this country weak under any circumstances, but part of this country being strong is to be strong economically, Mr. President. If we are not strong economically, all of the hardware we buy will not do us any good because we will simply crumble. If we continue these deficits of $180 billion plus, we will not be strong economically. The interest on the national debt is over $110 billion this year, the fastest growing program in all of Government, bigger now than all of our health costs, half of what we are paying for defense. All you have to do is look at the projections and you see that in the next 5 years interest will cost us more than we are now paying for defense.

That is the kind of thing we have to worry about, Mr. President. That is why we need a budget resolution. That is why there has to be some restraint on spending, and yet we see the intransigence that keeps us from even meeting in the conference committee because the Senate will not move off of the $299 billion figure.

Mr. President, the law says there will be a budget resolution. The law says we will not pass appropriation bills without a budget resolution. I say we should follow the law. If we are not going to follow the law, why in the world should we be worrying, as the President is now demanding, about a constitutional amendment to have a balanced budget? He says that is what we need to get us out of this quagmire. Mr. President, I voted for that constitutional amendment. I supported that constitutional amendment. But this country will be broke, bankrupt, before there is any opportunity for us to pass, the States to ratify a constitutional amendment. Once passed, it will take some time to become operational. And even then we will still have to do what should be done now.

This President, who says, "I am demanding that the Congress pass this constitutional amendment so that we can have a balanced budget, so that we can get some restraint on spending," is saying to the House and the Senate Republicans, "Do not follow the Budget Act. Do not follow the law you now have on the books to help you hold down spending. Do not comply with that act but give me another act. Give me another act."

Well, Mr. President, I think some of us are beginning to realize we are becoming part of the coconspiracy to destroy this Budget Act, if we sit by and watch appropriation bill after appropriation bill pass without any budget act. This time, Mr. President, it happens to be a hangup on a defense number. Under a new administration, under a new President, the same dispute might be over one of the domestic programs, the dispute may be over some spending program for some special interest group out there. Should the President be able to call that tune? Should he be able to tell his party to disregard the law? I say no.

We have established a process after much, much debate, after recognizing the way we were going was not working.

Now, for goodness sake, let us not disregard the very law that we set to provide a control on spending. How do we do that? Mr. President, I think we have to start by reeducating the Senate. Sixty-four Senators were not here when we passed the Budget Act. It seems that some of us who were here have forgotten the lessons learned. So I say that we should not be waiving the Budget Act. I say that we should not be passing appropriation bills while we do not have a Budget Act. Why in the world won't the leadership tell the members of the conference, "Go back, get a resolution."

Yesterday, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana talked about what the Finance Committee had done. He talked about the Finance Committee's, handling of the Deficit Reduction Act, which was a part of the effort to reduce our spending, to provide some new revenue. He said they met all night long, not one night but several nights. Day after day they stayed in meetings hammering it out. He said that in many instances people said, "I will never move on this particular area," but after you keep people up 24, 48 hours, that "I will never" starts changing to "I don't want to" or "I wish I didn't have to."

Mr. President, that has not happened to the Budget Committee—four meetings over a period of months, most of those meetings lasting just a few minutes. We have not been under any constraint or any pressure to do anything. No one has asked us to do anything because we have somebody down the street saying, "Don't change, don't come to a solution on this, don't move off of that number of $299 billion."

For that reason, there is no will to do anything.

Obviously, there has to be some counterforce. As long as you can pass all the appropriation bills, as long as you can disregard the Budget Act, I guess it will happen. Mr. President, I hope that some of us will now say, "We have a law. We are going to honor that law. We are going to try to see that there is a spending blueprint and that spending blueprint should be the budget resolution."

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CHILES. I will be delighted to yield the floor to the Senator, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am prepared to accept the floor and to speak, but I want to ask my colleague from Florida, who is the ranking minority member of the Budget Committee, whether it is not the fact that the House and the Senate are violating the provisions of the law which provide that if the House and the Senate conferees are unable to agree on a budget resolution after 7 days, they must report to their Houses, recommending all matters in agreement and reporting all matters in disagreement. Is it not the fact that we are not acting in conformity with the law?

Mr. CHILES. I must say that the Senator is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Is it not the fact that the ranking minority member of the Budget Committee, as well as all those who work with him on this side of the aisle, have indicated constantly that we believe that we should conform with the budget resolution and that his actions on the floor today, as well as my own, are trying to say to the majority leadership, "You have an obligation to be lawful and legal and for your acts to conform with the laws as we have enacted them in the past"?

Mr. CHILES. I think my distinguished colleague is absolutely correct in that.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I know that the Senator has been here a good many years. I have before me a chart indicating that the Senate passed conference reports on the concurrent budget resolutions in 1977 on May 13, in 1978 on May 15, in 1979 on May 23, in 1980 on June 12, in 1981 on May 21. Here we are in August, and we still have not brought this matter to a resolution.

Mr. CHILES. In every other year since we have had the Budget Act, we have had a first concurrent resolution in place before the end of June, and in most instances earlier than that.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Is it not a fact that there actually are members of the majority party who will privately indicate that they would like to conform with the law as enacted, but that their hands are tied, and that they are in an embarrassing position because that great advocate of balancing the budget who sits in the White House has indicated that he would not be happy if they would proceed differently from the manner in which they are proceeding at the present time?

Mr. CHILES. I think that is also correct.

We do know that the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee recommended a number of $294 billion for defense early on. Yet, we now see the majority on the other side of the aisle locked in at this number of $299 billion and unable to move, even though the House has offered to come to $292 billion. So, literally, the players are in the same ball park with the chairman of the Budget Committee. I think a majority of the Members on that side of the aisle were satisfied with that number. But the tune is being called at a different place.

Mr. METZENBAUM. What we are really finding in this body and in Washington and throughout the country is a President who uses the White House press conference and television to indicate that by enacting a balanced budget resolution, somehow he will wave that magic wand that will balance the budget. The distinguished ranking minority member of the Budget Committee and I know that it will not do that.

I want to address my colleagues on the issue of a balanced budget resolution and the situation in which we find ourselves at the present time.

I think it is the height of absurdity that the President of the United States and a number of Members of this body on the majority side are pushing and are prepared to use parliamentary devices to cut off debate on a so-called balanced budget resolution which was up in the Judiciary Committee for consideration today. However, they are not willing to come to the floor, and the President is not willing to act from the White House, to do that which has to be done if we are going to balance the budget.

You do not balance the budget by enacting a balanced budget constitutional amendment which would then have to be submitted to the States for ratification. That might take 1 year, 2 years, 5 years, or 10 years. But in the interim, this country would continue to operate with $200 billion a year deficits.

The real problem is that President Reagan and my colleagues on the majority side are not willing to do that which has to be done to balance the budget.

As a matter of fact, we recently passed, with great trumpets blaring and with lots of excitement and enthusiasm, the so-called downpayment on the deficit. It came out of the Finance Committee with $50 billion over a period of 3 years. The trumpets blared and the thunder roared, and the lightning could be seen from on high. What a wonderful thing it was that we had passed this downpayment of $62 billion, to be picked up over a period of 3 years, when we will amass something like $600 billion in deficits.

The fact is that the flutes, piccolos, and the violins were also playing—for the special interests. They were playing sweet music for that crowd that picked up $29 billion in tax giveaways that were included in the same bill.

For no logical reason under the sun, that bill made it possible for some of the biggest corporations in this country to have canceled—and I literally mean canceled—their obligations to the U.S. Treasury in the sum of $13.2 billion. They owed that money. They carried it on their annual statements as being owed. It was called deferred taxes—deferred so that they might use the money to improve their exporting position; deferred because those were profits they had made while they were exporting goods overseas.

As a consequence of those exports and in an effort to stimulate those exports, they passed the bill known as the DISC legislation, which provided that that portion of the profits from their exports could be kept intact in the United States, with no taxes paid on it. It was a deferral, and it would become payable only when they terminated the corporation.

Well, they terminated the corporations, or are about to terminate the corporations, and are required to terminate the corporations under this Nation's obligations under GATT, the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs with some of our economic partners throughout the world.

So, knowing that they were going to terminate, we saw the Finance Committee bring to this floor a bill that included $13 billion in cancellations of the taxes owed by those DISC's.

There was another provision in that bill which nobody talked much about, and that was the provision to cancel or terminate the pending tax cases having to do with commodity dealers who had joined the political process and became involved in playing the game of politics just a few years ago, when they realized that some of their deals really were not looked upon with approval by the Members of Congress, some of the objective groups that were reviewing our activities.

So there were about 4,000 cases pending and another 11,000 that were in that line to be brought by the Internal Revenue Service against the very small group of commodity dealers. What we were talking about is something in the area of $300 to $500 million. Because of politics, pressure, that bill canceled or terminated the right of the IRS to proceed in connection with those cases.

I have previously been on the floor of the Senate and talked about the fact that the insurance industry told this Congress what it had an obligation to do with respect to balancing the budget and did so with paid advertisements, told us that we had to bite the bullet and we had to meet our responsibilities, but failed to include in their ad that the very legislation they were advocating that we pass provided $1.4 billion in relief for the life insurance industry.

We live in a country where some people who have special lobbyists are able to get by without paying their fair share of taxes and as a consequence we have difficulty in balancing the budget. We have major banks that pay 2-percent taxes while the working blokes pay 20-, 25-, and 30-percent taxes.

When you try to do something about that, those who would advocate passing a balanced budget constitutional amendment are the last to be willing to stand up and be counted.

The President, who saw fit recently to make much of the fact that his opponent in November had the courage and the good judgment to speak out on the need to have more revenue if we are going to balance the budget, failed to acknowledge at the same time that he, that is, President Reagan, had during his term of office increased taxes $31 billion on people who are less able to pay them, telephone taxes, gas taxes, and medical deductions, casualty deductions, cigarette taxes, liquor taxes; but all of that the President very conveniently forgets when he talks about his opponent talking about taxes. As a matter of fact, it goes much beyond the $31 billion.

Do I have to refresh the recollection of my colleagues that it was President Reagan who advocated a 5-percent surtax on income taxes which would be unfair and regressive and also advocated a $5 a barrel tax on oil which would have brought into the Treasury $150 billion between the 5-percent surtax and the oil tax.

Incidentally, the President backed off of both of those items when Congress indicated that they were not willing to just put more taxes on average working people.

He had another tax that he talked about, a minimum tax on corporations. That made some good sense because we now have something like 19,000 corporations in this country making a profit, in some instances a very good profit, and paying no taxes at all. In fact, we know the case of General Electric that made something like $1.6 billion and received a $100 million tax refund.

Realistically speaking, the President some time ago advocated a minimum tax on corporations and then, when some of his friends in the business world indicated they were opposed to that, he backed off.

As a matter of fact, there were 18 Senators, all of whom might be considered part of the right wing in the Senate, who wrote a letter to the President and said:

Dear Mr. President: * * * we are gravely concerned that by 1985 as many as half of all corporations may be paying no corporation income taxes at all. It would be a mistake to allow such a situation at a time at which all citizens should be asked to assume a fair share of the burden.

Those 18 Senators had an opportunity to vote for just such a minimum tax and, of course, they did not do so. But I think that the Members of the body ought to be reminded, and maybe some of them who signed that letter forgot about it, and so at this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the letter dated December 9, 1981, addressed to President Reagan, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, December 9, 1981.

Hon. RONALD REAGAN,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are aware, as you are, that the combined projected deficits for fiscal years 1982, 1983, and 1984 now total almost $425 billion, and that this defict explosion is primarily due to the current recession. We believe that this situation requires an imaginative extension of your Program for Economic Recovery. We freshmen Republican Senators are anxious to work with you for constructive change in your January budget proposals.

We urge you to consider a fiscal policy which has as its goal a quick end of the current recession and the reduction of the projected deficits to ensure that subsequent recovery will be vigorous and permanent. Such a policy should include:

(1) Genuine reform in entitlement spending, the largest single share of federal expenditures, to stem the extraordinary growth in outlays in these programs;

(2) A cap on discretionary spending—those programs which have already been severely cut back, at roughly the 1982 levels;

(3) The utmost effort to eliminate waste and encourage efficiency, while supporting a growth in defense spending only at a rate that can be justified by meeting the most stringent test of serving undeniable national security needs; and

(4) No delay or diminution in scheduled personal income tax reductions, but provisions for tax revenues at approximately the level of your original recommendation by closing tax loopholes such as the so-called "tax leasing" provisions and providing for tax equity.

For example, we are gravely concerned that by 1985 as many as half of all corporations may be paying no corporation income taxes at all. It would be a mistake to allow such a situation at a time at which all citizens should be asked to assume a fair share of the burden.

We stand firm in our conviction that decisive action must be taken, under your leadership, to meet a very real challenge. We have made significant progress, but it is only beginning.

Sincerely,

Senators James Abdnor, Mark Andrews, Jeremiah Denton, Slade Gorton, Paula Hawkins, Bob Kasten, Frank Murkowski, Dan Quayle, Arlen Specter, Alfonse M. D'Amato, John P. East, Charles E. Grassley, Mack Mattingly, Don Nickles, Warren Rudman, and Steven D. Symms.

(Mr. GOLDWATER assumed the Chair.)

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, now we find ourselves today talking about a balanced budget resolution. We cannot balance the budget if we are going to give away the hydropower of the country as we agreed to do just a few days ago. We cannot do it if we are going to pay for all of the new dams in this country and all of the irrigation projects of this country and not expect the people who are going to get the benefit to share part or all of that burden. We cannot do so if we are just going to give away money to every special interest group. Somewhere along the line we have to call a halt. It is one thing to go out and make speeches; it is another thing to come here to the floor of the Senate and vote the courage of your conviction.

We are not going to solve the problem with a constitutional amendment.

Now we do have a law by which we try to police ourselves. We indicated that we wanted to look the whole process over and take a look at the total picture and then we would pass a budget resolution. And that we did by law, and we bound ourselves to conform with the law.

I hear the President talking about passing some criminal law package that went through the Senate and why does the House not do it? It is just as criminal for Members of the Senate to refuse to abide by the law as it is for common criminals to fail to abide by the law.

We are not abiding by the law. And that is all this issue is about.

The CBO has projected crippling deficits of $1 trillion over the next 5 years, and interest rates are reaching upward in an ominous fashion. Millions of American jobs are being sacrificed to a trade deficit which is likely to hit $100 billion this year. Every national economist worth his salt is telling us that deficits will throttle the recovery. The American people themselves are crying out for action on the deficit, and we stand here once again watching the congressional budget process come to a screeching halt in the Senate.

Just like last year, the President has stepped into the budget process with disastrous results. He can buy all the television he wants and talk about balancing the budget, but his actions speak louder than all the television ads that he can buy. Instead of taking a responsible position, instead of saying to Congress, "Get to work in that conference and come up with a balanced budget package," he does not say that.

Instead, he chooses to derail the whole budget process because he will not budge on his defense number.

Now let us be realistic, and let us be honest with ourselves. We are holding the line, contrary to what the President would have the American people believe. We are holding the line with respect to human service programs. We are holding the line with respect to feeding people who do not have funds to feeds themselves. We are holding the line with respect to programs to take care of dependent children. We are holding the line and cutting back on States so much that almost all of them have had to increase their taxes. We are holding the line across the board with respect to all issues, except two. One is defense spending, and one is the increased deficits are running up the interest bills of this Nation to a point beyond belief.

The President has chosen to derail the whole budget process because we will not budge. He is intransigent. To this President a trillion dollars of debt is obviously the lesser of two evils. What does he care what the deficit will be in the future that our children and our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren will inherit? He does not seem to be the least bit disturbed about the fact that interest rates continue to rise, and every day when they rise, it costs the Federal Government that much more.

But the scapegoating Congress has been this President's most frequent refrain. What about those $200 billion deficits? Congress' fault, the President says. And the tax cuts? Oh, he takes credit for that. And the trillion dollars of debt these tax cuts will cost? Congress' fault, the President says.

And what about defense? He made the Nation stronger, notwithstanding the reports that we are now receiving that the Nation indeed is not stronger. And the $400 billion that the military buildup will add to the deficit? Congress' fault, the President says. What about the balanced budget? Oh, we will solve that all right. We will pass a constitutional amendment.

We do not need to pass a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. The President has been in office since the beginning of 1981. Why has he not ever submitted a balanced budget? He promised he would. He committed himself publicly to the fact that he would, but he has not. And now he says, "Oh, that is Congress' fault." But Congress proceeds on the basis of the budget that the President submits, and we work from there.

What about the recovery? Oh, he is responsible for that; yes, sir. And the bitter recession that preceded it? That is not his fault; that is Congress' fault, the President says.

I do not know about anybody else in this body, but I for one have had it with the President's refusal to accept responsibility.

Mr. President, the buck has to stop somewhere. It stops with you. You had a strong concept of Presidential responsibility as a candidate in 1980. As a matter of fact, at the end of your campaign in 1980, you made a television address, and you said, "Mr. Carter is acting as if he had not been in charge for the past 3½ years, as if someone else was responsible for the largest deficit in American history and as if someone else was predicting a budget deficit for this fiscal year of $30 billion or more."

I just want to change a few words. Mr. Reagan is acting as if he had not been in charge for the past 3½ years, as if someone else was responsible for the largest deficit in American history, and as if someone else was predicting a budget deficit for this fiscal year of $170 billion or more.

Is this the same man who, as President, has presided over deficits totaling $692 billion for his first term, $9,000 for every household in America? Is this the same man who, if reelected, will end up accumulating more national debt by 1987 than all previous Presidents from George Washington to Jimmy Carter? Is this the same man who has brought this country to the brink of debtor nation status? Believe it or not, it is.

But let us all remember the Presidential refrain, "It is all Congress' fault." Congress should—must—comply with the laws as relates to the whole matter of balancing the budget, as relates to the matter of conforming with the law that we have enacted pertaining to the budget resolution.

We are not conforming. That is what this debate is all about. And all the talk and all the speeches are not going to change the fact that Congress ought to conform and obey the laws which it has heretofore seen fit to pass.

I see my distinguished colleague from New York on the floor. I think he is ready to address this issue and I have no problem in yielding the floor in order that he may have it, although I may wish to return to the floor at a later point to expand more fully on the subject.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I wish to thank my distinguished colleague for giving me this time to speak when he has not yet expressed the full range of his own thoughts and concerns on this matter. I listened to him with great attention and with complete accord.

The issue before us, Mr. President, as the distinguished Senator from Ohio has stated it, is nothing less than whether a Congress that makes the laws is going to obey them?

In the Budget Act of 1974, the Budget and Impoundment Act of 1974, we passed a law which binds our behavior; and this year we chose to break it. And the persons who have chosen to break it will not even respond to the fact that they have done it. Witness the fact there is not a single Member of the majority on the floor, and there is none present, save the distinguished and venerable presiding officer, the Senator from Arizona.

It is as elemental as this: a Congress that makes the laws is surely bound to abide by the laws it makes. And we are not doing that.

The first budget resolution was required to be on this floor and adopted by the 15th of May. It was not, in consequence of which appropriations bills are not in order, and the only way to do so is to waive the rules, which is to say to ignore them.

A measure to waive a rule in an exceptional circumstance is surely in order. A measure to waive the rules with no intention of abiding by the rules seems to me out of order, seems to me at the very least inappropriate.

Mr. President, we are faced with a crisis of this institution. The crisis was brought about by an agreement by the majority in the early weeks of this administration, to dismantle substantially the Federal fisc, to so reduce revenues that the hated social and international programs of the previous generation would become impossible in the future. That, to some considerable degree has happened, but the groups got carried away and they so reduced revenues as to make it impossible to run a solvent Federal Government.

If we were a corporation, we would be in chapter 11 bankruptcy. If we were a lesser nation, we would be in the hands of the International Monetary Fund. It is a fact, as the Senator from Ohio stated, we have become a debtor nation, refusing to make the necessary judgments about the present; and we are postponing them to the future. We are borrowing moneys which future generations of Americans will have to repay.

It is a problem, and we are the first, I hope, to recognize it. My beloved friend, as I say, the venerable Senator from Arizona who is presiding at this point, cannot easily respond for himself, and I hope he will not mind if I put a rhetorical question to him even so. Would he imagine the day when the Democratic Members would be asking for actions to reduce a Federal deficit that had reached levels unknown in history? The highest deficit in this history of the United States was under President Ford in 1975. This deficit was brought about by the built-in countercyclical measures of the structure of the American Government, the payments for unemployment insurance and such like which were a successful discovery, if you will, of economists in the 1930's and came to be accepted by all parties.

The deficit we face this year is not a deficit of a sharp recession and countercyclical measures. We are in a state of very rapid economic growth, albeit growth from a very low base. The first effect of this administration policy was to put us into the sharpest recessions of the 1930's. In December 1982, steel was being produced at 29 percent of capacity in this country. You have to go back to 1932 to find such a level. We have a deficit which is an intended and deliberate deficit, a deficit proposed to us in a period of expansion. Remember, the President has never proposed a balanced budget to this Congress. He has never asked us to spend a nickel less than he has proposed, nor would he allow us to raise taxes. He has consistently said that any such measure would be vetoed, and he has consistently proposed ever larger deficits.

In his first thousand days in office, the national debt increased by half. Before this decade is out, almost half the personal income tax will be required to pay the service interest on the debt. The personal income tax, Mr. President, is overwhelmingly a tax on labor—85 percent of it is withheld from wages. Interest on the national debt is overwhelmingly a reward, and a return to capital.

If you want to see the politics of this country divided along the class lines of the late 19th century, which the mining towns and the bankrupt farms of the West knew so well, and the labor of sweltering factory towns and the great foundry towns, in the Northeast knew so well, just take half of the tax collected on labor and hand it to capital. Then say after all, the alternative was taxing ourselves to pay for our Government, the Government we wanted and perhaps needed at the time.

We do not have to borrow. We choose to borrow. Borrowing is a choice made in an economy perfectly capable of paying for its Government, and with no ground at any time for stimulating that economy. We learned yesterday that some of the leading indicators had fallen off and an economist said "Thank goodness." We are over heating. Interest rates on the public debt are at three times their historic level, and will continue to be until inflation begins starting up again. There is not a responsible economist in this Government or in this country who would think that we need to stimulate an economy by borrowing $200 billion a year, and yet we do it as a matter of policy, by a party incapable of meeting its responsibilities.

Mr. President, the first test of a Government is its capacity to say no. The first test of a majority is the test of its capacity to govern it, and its ability to say no. "No" to whom? No to those who would have to give more or get less from the Government in order to pay its way. The majority led by a President who has been unwilling to do that. They have not had the elemental sense of their responsibility to govern which is to pay in our time for what we consume in our time.

They have chosen instead to borrow, borrow, and borrow; not as an economic device to stimulate the economy, nor an economic device to stimulate production and employment, but as a political device to avoid the realities of the present and let another generation face them after those who are responsible are long gone.

In the history of this country, we have not seen such an avoidance of elemental responsibility, and from the very same ones who preached it for so long in the face of a wholly different form of cyclical financing. It is not cyclical financing. This is generational financing. The next generation will pay for the consumption of this generation, and it is an altogether different matter. It is the policy of the weak, and the irresponsible.

Once you have committed yourself to such a policy and its implications begin to be understood, something else occurs, Mr. President. Something else occurs. You begin to deny reality once reality sinks in; if not to yourself, at least to others. We have seen such an event here in the Nation's Capital following from the Employment Act of 1946. In that act, the Congress provided that there be a Council of Economic Advisers to the President of the United States, that they adivse him on what was seen as the new economics and the new capacities to manage the business cycle, which had been the great scourge of industrial nations, just as famine, drought, flood and such had been the scourge of the agricultural nations.

The chairman of that council was to be put there as a representative of the economics profession to report to the Congress each year, to the President on the state of the economy and the prospects for the achievement of full employment and production, or whatever variation of that definition.

This report was sent to us by the President once each year, and starting in 1947 we had a series of ever more valuable, accurate statements which came to be models around the world of what a Government could learn about its economy, and teach itself and its people about dealing with it.

President Truman faithfully adhered to that with the appointment of Leon Keyserling; and ever more capable men appeared under President Eisenhower, Arthur Burns, our distinguished Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Germany; under President Kennedy, immensely talented men as Walter Heller, still active; under President Johnson such distinguished leaders as the subsequent director of the Brookings Institution, Mr. Okum; under President Nixon, that absolutely incomparable, gentle and wise economist, Paul McCracken; late under President Nixon and President Ford, Herbert Stein, one of the most knowledgeable monetarists and all around economists in our country.

Under President Carter, Charles Shultze, of the Brookings Institution, as fine an economist as the Nation knows, a political economist in the highest sense of that word. Indeed, the tradition was continued in the first appointment of President Reagan, and in the second appointment by President Reagan, the second appointment being, of course, Martin Feldstein.

But then that economist began doing his professional duty. He began saying what he thought was the case, faithful to the canons of a profession, not a science—no one claims that—a profession, a body of information. Some compositions can be tested. Certain forecasts can be made and reviewed. Some data are better than others. Some measurements are being learned as we go along. We have always been very good at measuring things in this country.

Martin Feldstein was known to say:

> Mr. President, you cannot have these deficits without putting the next generation into a condition of indenture and jeopardizing voluntary price stability, interest rates and production in this generation.

In this year's economic report, the dollar is 32 percent overvalued against the basket of OECD currencies; which is as if—all other factors being equal—that everything exported from the United States has a 32 percent export tax on it and everything imported—all other factors being equal—has a 25 percent price discount. Why? Because of the policies made on the floor of this Senate. Not the floor of our automobile plants; not in the fields or our vineyards. We make this decision and we make it in response to a President's policies.

When that economist began to say things that he thought were not welcome, it began to be known that he was not being listened to.

We learned this morning in the Washington Post by Hobart Rowen, a fine columnist, that in his whole tenure as Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, Dr. Feldstein never once met alone with the President. They did not allow him to be alone with the President.

I have sat in the administrations of two Republican Presidents and Cabinets. The idea that Arthur Burns would not be left alone with the President of the United States is one that makes one fear for the institution.

Martin Feldstein is gone now. Who is the new Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers? If there was a member of the majority on the floor right now, I would like to ask, but I see the empty seats continue. They might know who is. But, of course, they would know that none is. They might have some inkling who it might be, but, of course, they know that none will be until the November election.

Do you know why? Because the administration will not allow within its ranks an economist capable of telling the truth as economists see it. They have banished from their ranks any truth tellers.

So, Mr. President, I am going to do something here that a noneconomist ought not to do, or would be wise not to do. It is a free country. You may make as many mistakes as you wish, I suppose.

I am going to forecast for you what will be the forecast of the administration in the next 5 fiscal years, which will be forthcoming on Tuesday.

On Tuesday, Mr. President, we will get the midsession budget review. We should have had it long ago. We did not. For the same reason we should have had the budget resolution long ago but we did not. We were not going to get such a midsession review as long as Martin Feldstein was in this city. They had to wait for him to leave. They are typing it up right now somewhere in the Office of Management and Budget. I assume they are. It is Thursday. They will want to get it printed over the weekend and release it Monday morning, Tuesday. Or perhaps tomorrow, even. It will be well covered.

It is meant to revise and update the forecasts of the original budget.

Mr. President, as I recall the original budget sent us this year, I do not recall it very well, but it had a half-life of about 4 days before the Budget Committee had it. Some do not know it, but the Budget Committee has met this year. As a member of the committee, I can attest to having been to at least three meetings—brief meetings, but they did occur.

The idea of taking up the President's budget was a point of departure, which was abandoned immediately. Just as the Secretary of the Treasury arrived after the economic report of the President was out, he advised us to tear off the first four or five pages of the President's message and throw away everything that Martin Feldstein and his two professional associates had written. They said, "Do not pay any attention to economists. Do not pay attention to numbers." Make believe and borrow. Make believe and borrow. That is quite enough.

Now they are going to have us make believe and borrow even more, believing, particularly, that there will be less borrowing.

How do I mean, Mr. President? As I said, I will make the forecast.

In February, the President's budget estimated that the deficit for the fiscal year 1985 would be $180 billion. I speak from memory, but I am fairly confident.

The 1983 deficit had in fact been $195 billion and so we saw it going down.

One of the reasons the President's budget had a half-life of 4 days was that the Congressional Budget Office promptly said this was absurd, the estimates of interest rates, of productivity, of inflation rates, and such. It simply could not be squared with anything known to an economic model in use at this time. They came out with a much higher projection. As I say, on at least the three occasions I believe the Budget Committee met this year and the one thing we did agree on was to pay no attention to the President's forecasts.

On Tuesday, there will be new forecasts. At the risk of intruding on other professions and other fields, I hereby forecast that the 5-year projections that will be made public Tuesday will show the Federal budget deficit declining to $105 billion by fiscal year 1989. If I were more radical or risk taking in this position, I would predict $95 billion. I do not exclude $95 billion, but I predict that it will be $105 billion.

That will show a long, steady decline, prices stable, interest rates dropping, productivity growing, trade expanding—all those things that are not going to happen. They are not going to happen, Mr. President, because of the deficits we are encumbering this generation with and the one to follow. But they will show it anyway.

Why will they show it, Mr. President? Because there is no one who can give the President advice. There is no one who can walk out of his office and meet members of the press who will say, "Do you agree with that forecast and do what he says?"

Now, there it is, Mr. President, after all. That is why there is no Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors. There is not going to be. Why have somebody down there telling us things that we do not want anybody to know about?

I predict a running down, I would say they will probably start at around 155 for this year and run on a straight line down to 95 to 105.

May I adjust my current forecast, Mr. President? I forecast a deficit on Tuesday for 1989 as being between 95 and 105.

Mr. President, I am going to make not one but two forecasts today with the indulgence which is always shown me by my chairman of the Intelligence Committee, my friend of so many years, the presiding officer [Mr. GOLDWATER]. I hope he will allow me two forecasts today, for a day when he is not officially silent.

I am also going to forecast what will be the projections of the Congressional Budget Office. You can say what you will for the absent majority—not simply silent but vanished—in this body. When Dr. Alice Rivlin, a distinguished economist of the Democratic disposition had finished her second term, and the time in the normal course of things had come to give other persons a chance to be Director of the Congressional Budget Office, Dr. Rivlin returned to the Brookings Institution, and was replaced by an equally eminent, equally qualified economist, Dr. Rudolph Penner, then of the American Enterprise Institute—a body associated with a Republican political disposition in these matters, professional in them as is Brookings professional, but given, even so, a general political disposition.

Rudolph Penner succeeded Alice Rivlin, and a finer choice could not have been made. If these words should reach him through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I should like him to know that this Democrat thinks so. I am now going to forecast what he will forecast to us, because it happens, Mr. President, that, on the same day, the midsession review of the budget will be coming forward, and the Congressional Budget Office will also make its forecast of rates of interest, employment, exchange, productivity, and budget outlays and revenue that are associated with it.

I shall make the forecast that the CBO will estimate a budget deficit by fiscal year 1989 of $250 billion or more—$250 billion or more on a rising curve, Mr. President. It could be curvilinear; I shall not suggest I know that much about what will be in their calculations. I know nothing of their actual calculations.

In any event, it will be a steady rise from the $160 billion that they will project from this year. They project a worsening situation.

Then, Mr. President, in this particular forecast of the forecast itself, the Nation is going to have to choose between two forecasts. And this body conceivably might even consider choosing the professional judgment of its own Congressional Budget Office, headed by a respected conservative economist—not conservative in economics, but of his particular political disposition—he is openly and honestly of that nature. And the silent and missing majority here will have to ask, will they take the word of the Congressional Budget Office that things are going to get worse and grievously so? Or will they take the word of an administration that has decided not to listen to economists but make up its own fairy tale for the next 5 years—a fairy tale that would not have been allowed were Martin Feldstein still in office? That is going to be a test of our seriousness as a Senate.

It is often asked, where is this place that is a deliberative body? Where is the missing and silent majority this afternoon? Well, they are not listening to me, and I can understand they would not wish to do so. Will they listen to Rudolph Penner and the Congressional Budget Office, I ask? I shall be here perhaps at this hour on Tuesday afternoon to see if anybody wishes to rise and respond.

Mr. President, we are doing more than an injustice to our own law and a violence to our own economic principles. We are mortgaging a generation of Americans. We are putting our industry into a set of disadvantages it is likely not to recover from for another generation. At this very moment, what is it that is exported first from a country? The things that it discovers first. What it discovers others can produce or reproduce.

What are the markets that we would be gaining this very year, this very decade, that will continue for generations, but we will lose because of the price of the dollar? Who will gain markets in this country that will go on for generations that are lost because of the price of the dollar? And where does that price come from? It comes from the deficits we incur on this floor.

That absent and silent majority does not want to hear that. But a generation will grow up in this country which will remember, which will know it and remember and, perhaps, Mr. President, not forget.

This is the majority that talked about the size of government and the need for growth. Let us have a little comparative data of 3 decades, Mr. President. In the 1960's, real growth in this country averaged 4.2 percent per year and the Federal budget averaged 18.7 percent of gross national product: 4.2, 18.7. In the 1970's, real growth averaged 3.2 percent per year and the budget averaged at 20.2 percent of GNP. In the 1980's, so far, and we are into the 1980's, real growth has averaged 1.8 percent and the budget has grown to 23 percent of the gross national product.

How is it done? Through taxes? No; through borrowing. Borrowing from Americans, yes, to some extent; more and more borrowing from persons abroad. More and more of those interest payments which will take up half of the personal income tax by the end of this decade will be going to Europe, to Asia, to the Middle East. Because we have not been willing to do our duty. We have not even been willing to face the fact of what that will be. We have not even wanted to know what would be our duty supposing we had any intention of fulfilling it.

The simple fact, Mr. President, is that we have not passed a budget resolution. Our law and our rules require us to do so. We are capable of doing so. The majority has the votes to do so. They asked for the power to govern. Will they not govern? Will they not even come to this floor to hear that they are unwilling to govern?

This is a large matter. This is not a factional thing, it is not a regional thing, not a passing thing. We are putting this country into bondage for generations and the persons doing it will not even hear the facts. They will not allow themselves to confront the facts of what they are doing.

That is weakness, Mr. President. I would not want to call any individual in this body weak, but it is possible to speak of the weakness of this body.

What does it say of a people who will not let the facts be presented to them; an administration that will not have a Chairman of a Council of Economic Advisers lest he tell them something they do not want to hear, a majority absent and silent that will not hear us. Mr. President, I have been standing on the floor for some time now. I would have been happy to yield to any member of the majority who wished to come here and ask me about what I have said, argue otherwise, present different views. Neither I nor any of my colleagues previously have been wishing to avoid debate. We have been standing here asking for debate. I hope we have not been too strong in any words we have used. But, yes, I am prepared to incite to debate but I do not find anybody in sight.

That is a terrible pun, Mr. President, but the alternative is to grow rancorous and I do not want that. But we would like to debate the matter. We would like to hear the view of that silent and absent majority. If they wanted to run this Senate, why are they not here where these most important issues are being debated? Why will they not come to the floor and answer our questions? The very same reason the administration will not have the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers to give answers. They do not have answers or the answers they have they do not want to give. They will feel reassured on Tuesday when, if my forecast is right, the Office of Management and Budget will get together enough happy times forecasts to see that there is a straight line declining deficit such that by 1989 it will be down to a large deficit, largest in history still, the largest previous to this administration, but one that could be said to preclude any need to do anything more than tinker on the margin of revenues and expenditures, outlays and revenues. That will be contradicted by the Congressional Budget Office, if I am not wrong, but they will choose the happy scenario. It is a formula for ruin. I do not have to speak in the presence of a man who has served his country in wartime so well to say there is one certain formula for defeat in combat, and that is to avoid unwelcome information. There is one mark of a true commander who says "bring me the bad news first." But there is no one on that side of the aisle who appears to want to hear any bad news. I wonder if they are prepared even to hear good news should it come along. There is a kind of cognative dissonance that has extended upon the majority. They cannot believe they have done what they have done, and therefore choose to think they may have done something else altogether, or perhaps, if they just went away it would go away. It will not, Mr. President. They have gone away from this Chamber. The facts remain. And those facts are an indictment of our stewardship and our leadership. We do not become Members of this body, the U.S. Senate, to act as if nothing can be done if a President will not do it. If the President will not do it, we can do it. We should in any event do it first.

We are talking about laws, and this is the body in which they are made. But a silent and no longer wholly absent majority declines to do so.

Mr. President, the generational price that will be exacted for the irresponsibility of this group, all of us, will be paid over such a long and painful time, paid very possibly at the price of the preeminence of the United States of America among the free nations of the world. Let us not have any question in our minds, that if we tell ourselves, and we should, that that preeminence has arisen from the validity of our ideas and ideals, it is even so the case that it could not have come about in the absence of an economic preeminence which made possible a preeminence of ideals and of arms. And to lose that economic preeminence we will surely lose the others. When we have done it, a generation will look back to what was happening on the floor of the U.S. Senate in these days, just as in Europe scholars look back wondering what did they do wrong? They know that at times of crisis they avoided facts. At times when there were present among them men and women who would tell the truth, who had a gift of prophecy or a special extra element of courage to face those facts, that they chose not, they chose to leave the Chamber, they chose to go to sleep with happy dreams. They believed in the forecast of fortune tellers. I will say to you, Mr. President, that what we will hear from the administration on Tuesday will not be the work of professional economists forecasting the future. It will be the work of fortune tellers telling us that the future will be fine. If you prefer that kind of fantasy, if you fear facts, you may expect a grievous and long and painful aftermath.

Mr. President, I have kept the Senate for some time on this matter. I hope that I have not been abrasive. I have tried to be open. It seems to me anything less would be a dereliction of my responsibility.

Mr. President, I see that the hour of 3 o'clock is approaching, at which time it is my understanding that a vote on a cloture motion is to take place. Thanking the Chair for his characteristic indulgence, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. MATHIAS. I make a point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We will have to think that out with the Parliamentarian. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

(Mr. HECHT assumed the chair.)

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The clerk will continue to call the roll.

The legislative clerk continued the call of the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—WILKINSON NOMINATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have a unanimous-consent request to propound that I hope will not be objected to which I believe accomplishes a good purpose and will permit the Senate to move on. I have discussed this with the minority leader and a number of Senators on both sides of the aisle. I believe the arrangement I am about to describe in this unanimous-consent agreement is eminently fair and practical.

First, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the cloture vote to occur at 3 o'clock today be postponed to occur on Thursday, August 9.

Next, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for the Judiciary Committee to hold a further hearing on the Wilkinson nomination beginning at 10 o'clock on Tuesday, August 7, with the specified witness list as follows:

Justice Powell; Edward Schmults; Jonathan Rose; Frederick Buesser, Jr.; James Howard; John Lane, Gene Lafitte; Stewart Dunnings; James Hewitt; Timothy Cook; and the nominee, James Harvie Wilkinson; that the hearing will not consume more than 1 day.

And that on Thursday, August 9, at 2 o'clock, the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of resuming debate on the cloture motion, with the time between 2 o'clock and 3 o'clock to be divided equally between and under the control of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and the distinguished Senator from Masschusetts, Senator KENNEDY.

I further ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that at 3 p.m. on August 9, no other rule of the Senate to the contrary notwithstanding, the Senate proceed to vote on the cloture motion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, at that time, if cloture is invoked, at the conclusion of that vote the Senate proceed immediately to vote on the Wilkinson nomination.

Mr. President, that is the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader has stated the request in a way that comports, I think precisely, with the outcome of negotiations that have been going on in this matter.

In those negotiations, several Senators on my side participated. Among them were Messrs. KENNEDY, LONG, BOREN, EXON, CHILES, DECONCINI, and I think there were others. But out of those negotiations came the agreement which we indicated to the distinguished majority leader that we could enter into and he has stated the agreement as we had intended to develop it. There is no objection on this side that I know of.

I congratulate the majority leader, and I congratulate all Senators, and there were various Senators on the other side of the aisle who participated in these talks. I think the talks have ended on a way that provides the Senate an opportunity to conduct additional hearings, to have a cloture vote and, if cloture is invoked, to vote up or down on the nominee without further debate.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I think there was an oversight by the Senator. He said at the conclusion of the cloture vote that we proceed to vote on the nominee. I am sure that he meant in the event cloture is invoked.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I think I said that. If I did not say that, I modify it so that that condition is included.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the distinguished majority leader and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for their judgment and their statesmanship in arriving at this conclusion. The Senator from Louisiana voted for cloture. There are others of us who voted for cloture who, nonetheless, felt that, in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee and the majority leader were willing to have an additional hearing and had proposed an additional hearing, it would be only fair to those of us who were supporting their position that we be privileged to see what the hearing might develop before being asked to vote on cloture again. That, I think, sets the stage for all to have a chance to explore their points of view, for those of us who are not on the committee, and give us an opportunity to be better informed when the final vote comes on this matter.

I really think it is a happy solution. I hope that the results of this hearing will help to bring out the facts to support someone's point of view to the extent that there will no longer be any quarrel about whether we should invoke cloture or not and that the whole matter would be moot. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I would make one inquiry about my own request. The request provided that the Judiciary Committee would be authorized to hold a hearing beginning at 10 o'clock on Tuesday. I am assuming that would authorize the committee to do so, notwithstanding that the Senate may be in session at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the majority leader? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank all Senators.

Mr. President, I would like to especially thank the minority leader, the Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Massachusetts, the two Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Maryland, and most especially the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator THURMOND, and also Senator SPECTER from Pennsylvania. I have seldom been involved in negotiations on a difficult and sensitive matter in which more goodwill and reasonableness were shown in arriving at this arrangement. I think it is a good arrangement. I congratulate all Members for their participation.

Mr. President, under the order previously entered, the vote which was to occur today by unanimous consent also provided that the mandatory quorum be waived. I am assuming that that provision would also apply as of August 9, since we are postponing the vote that would have occurred today. Could I inquire of the Chair if that is correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I just want to express my appreciation to the majority leader and to the minority leader and to our other colleagues for what I think is now an entirely satisfactory solution and resolution of this issue. I express appreciation to both of them for their help and assistance. I think it is in the interest of the Senate and of the nominee.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I, too, thank the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I just wanted to express my thanks to the majority leader and minority leader and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. It seems to me this agreement will enhance the reputation of the U.S. Senate as a place where fair treatment can be expected and accorded. I think the procedure that has been outlined is fair. It is fair to the nominee, it is fair to the Senate, and it will be fair to all parties. I congratulate the majority leader and the minority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am most grateful.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER—AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, could I inquire of the Chair now as to the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question before the Senate is the majority leader's motion to waive section 303 of the Budget Act for the consideration of H.R. 5743.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am reluctant to do so because I am afraid that the suggestion may be realized by making it, but in the off chance that somebody else has something to say about my poor motion, in order to give them a chance to arrive on the floor, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, regarding the motion to waive, I am getting calls from my farmers. They do not understand all of this talk about the budget resolution. They would like to get the agriculture appropriations bill passed.

Farmers all over this country need this measure. They do not understand why we are on the floor spending a couple of days just marking time, with a lot of debate, with a lot of rhetoric, and not many farmers in my State want to debate the budget process. They would like to debate the appropriations bill. There is a lot of money in that bill for farmers all over this country. I want to express my support for the farmers of Kansas, Florida, New Mexico, Nebraska, and all those other States that are being deprived of getting action on this bill because some feel it is necessary to hold it up with a debate that does not mean much in any event.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I wanted to bring to the attention of the Senators that the Committee on Appropriations is meeting now to discuss the supplemental appropriations bill. One of the items just agreed upon was a committee amendment which will be offered to this appropriations bill that is going to be the next item on the agenda if the motion to waive the Budget Act is agreed to.

Since it is a matter that was discussed by many members of the Committee on Appropriations as a matter of some urgency, I thought I would bring that to the attention of the Members.

The subject of the discussion was the fact that there are a lot of farmers around the country who feel the need for a guaranteed loan program that would permit refinancing of existing loans to help overcome problems associated with bank examiners' identifying loans that once were considered sound and are now considered problem loans.

We have in this bill that the committee is bringing to the Senate $650 million in a guaranteed operating loan program designed to relieve that problem. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. HUDDLESTON] offered in committee an amendment to add $150 million that would be made available in this fiscal year to help refinance problem loans. The committee has just instructed that an amendment be offered as a committee amendment to this bill making available the $650 million immediately upon enactment of this legislation.

I point that out, Mr. President, just to indicate that this and other provisions of the agriculture appropriations bill are important because they fund programs that are designed to help meet the food and fiber needs of the Nation and to support our agriculture sector, which is one of the most important industries in America today.

I know that the concerns being discussed under this motion to waive the Budget Act are very legitimate and very real. I do not intend by my remarks to criticize in any way the discussion which has been held, nor do I criticize the fact that there may be more discussion of the budget process and the problems caused by the failure of the Congress to agree to a budget resolution. But I do want to point out, Mr. President, that an interminable delay in the consideration of this agriculture appropriations bill could result in some serious problems around the country. Therefore, I would urge that we try to bring this discussion to a close and bring the bill up for consideration. If there are changes that need to be made in the bill, let us discuss them.

I would hope that we could approve this agriculture appropriations bill, go to conference with the House, and submit it to the administration in the hope that it could be signed by the President. The fact of the matter is that the administration supports the passage of this bill. It is within the subcommittee's 302(b) allocation under the budget resolution that has been passed by the Senate. If the supplemental appropriations bill now before the Appropriations Committee is passed, this fiscal year 1985 bill will be $292 million below the funding level of the agriculture appropriations bill in fiscal year 1984. It represents restraint, but it also represents sensitivity to the needs of agriculture and to the activities that support agriculture.

Mr. President, I might also point out that there are a lot of funds in this bill relating to nutrition programs, such as the Women, Infants, and Children Feeding Program and the School Lunch Program.

The beginning of the fiscal year is October 1. It corresponds fairly closely with the beginning of the school year.

It would certainly be of benefit to school districts and to State and local governments as they are planning their budgets for this next school year if they could have some idea—some degree of certainty—as to the funding levels for these programs for next year.

I am just pointing out a few of the things that occur to this Senator, Mr. President, which could create problems if we drag out this bill for very long.

As I said before, I am not criticizing in any way whatsoever the discussion that has taken place, and the fact that there are some very real concerns being raised and addressed under this motion to waive the Budget Act. I do feel, however, that it is important to point out the fact that if we do continue to withhold consideration of the bill on its merits and do not act on it, we may be causing some problems around the country.

The programs funded in this bill will have a significant impact on individual States. For instance, there is approximately $900 million for the State of Florida in this bill, I have been told; some $755 million for the State of Tennessee; $345 million for the State of West Virginia. I could provide figures for each State if time permitted. All of the programs in this bill are programs which are operated for the benefit of citizens of each State.

I am hoping, Mr. President, that we can move on to the consideration of the bill. I wonder if there is any way the Senator from Florida could let the Senate know when we might take this bill up or get to the bill on its merits. I have been asked by several Senators today, "When are we going to get to the bill?" I do not know. I don't know that anybody knows. Maybe the Senator from Florida knows. It may not be important for anybody to know. I do know that there are persons who are trying to decide whether to make plans for the weekend, or next week, or even tonight. If we can get to the bill, Mr. President, I think we could conclude consideration of the bill within a few hours.

I know there are several amendments that we will have to consider when this bill comes up. There are some amendments that the Senate can go along with with little or no discussion. Others we shall have to resist because we do not want to pass a bill that is going to provoke a veto. We are confident that if this bill can be passed without any substantial additions to the funding levels, the bill will be signed by the President, and we can see these programs funded.

I see the Senator from Florida on the floor, Mr. President. I do not mean to try to get any kind of commitment, but I wondering what his thinking is now about how much more we need to discuss the motion. There have been a lot of points made. A lot of Senators have come to the floor and talked about their ideas and their problems with the budget process. We all agree there are some problems. How long does the Senator think we have to talk about it in order for us to understand the problem?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. I thank my distinguished friend from Mississippi, Mr. President. I want to reiterate, as I said yesterday and earlier today, I think this is a good appropriations bill. I think it helps the country, it helps my State, it helps a lot of programs. I think it has been constructed with a lot of thoughtful consideration.

I think the distinguished Senator from Mississippi is a hardworking champion of agriculture. He certainly works hard trying to determine where these dollars should be spent. I think he has a hard-working ranking member in Senator EAGLETON. I have the pleasure of serving as a member of his committee. Under his stewardship, I have enjoyed that service. He certainly has been kind to me as a Senator from Florida and also considerate of my views on the operation of the Nation's agricultural programs.

He can ask me questions about, and I shall be happy to answer them. I was in the Appropriations Committee this afternoon during the discussion on the problem with regard to loan funds. I understand there are $650 million in this bill right now. My understanding is that the money cannot be released until October 1. The committee today determined to vote a committee amendment providing that up to $150 million of those funds could be expended now or just said the fund could be expended now.

I also know the Senator from Kentucky wanted to amend the supplemental bill and say that $150 million could be spent. The Senator from Kentucky said that was because the supplemental bill would be available sooner. There was some discussion in the committee about the supplemental and which bill would pass first.

Some people ask me what I am trying to do. I do not have any grief with the supplemental bill. It is a 1984 bill. We have a 1984 budget resolution. Because there is a resolution for 1984, the argument I am making in regard to there being no resolution this year is not valid, so I would not try to make that argument on the 1984 supplemental bill.

If the Agriculture Committee or the Appropriations chairman or the leadership decided they wanted to pull this bill down and move that supplemental bill today, they would not have any problem from me, since it is a 1984 bill. It was also noted that if the supplemental went first, this same amendment to provide $150 million could be put on that bill. So I do not think there is any way we are holding up this particular matter.

I do not have any problem with that. The concern I have, after making clear I do not have any concern with the merits of this particular bill, is that the law of the land today is the Budget Act, and it gives us a certain timetable that we are supposed to abide by. It tells us that November 10, the President submits his current services budget. The 15th day after Congress meets, the President submits his budget. On March 15, the committees and joint committees submit reports to the Budget Committee. On April 1, the CBO submits a report to the Budget Committees. On April 15, the Budget Committees report the first concurrent resolution on their budget to the House. On May 15, the committees report bills and resolutions authorizing the new budget authority. On May 15, Congress completes action on the first concurrent resolution of the budget.

That is the schedule set forth in the law. In past years, we have not always met all the dates on schedule. I point out to my friend from Mississippi there is a problem since the law provides no remedy if one of those dates is not met.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. Yes, I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. According to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the supplemental which is now being considered by the committee, is over the budget request. It also exceeds the amount provided by the House in the supplemental. I wonder, and I think other people are going to wonder, what difference it makes that that is an 1984 bill and that that relates to fiscal year 1984, and that we already have a budget resolution. If it is over the budget, why is there such a concern about there not being agreement on the budget resolution for this year?

Is it not true that that Budget Act has been disregarded in so many different ways that it has really become a kind of joke?

Mr. CHILES. Of course, I say to my good friend, the Members know it is over the budget, the President is going to know it is over the budget. There is a number there that sets the level and the President could say, "I am vetoing this," if it is over the level. Members can make up their minds when that bill comes to the floor whether they are going to vote for it because they know there is a number there.

But we have no number and no guide for this year. So when the Senator from Mississippi says we are within the allocations I must remind him, those are allocations that have not been passed by both Houses. They have not been reported back to the Senate as the Budget Act requires after the budget resolution is passed. They are something that the chairman of the Appropriations Committees of one party have decided they are going to abide.

The President has decided. It is an ad hoc arrangement, but it is not following any structure that we have set up under the law. It seems to me that if we are going to set a standard to measure ourselves against, we need to follow it.

I know there is a concern out there on the part of farmers who need to get these loans. Why do they really need to get them? They need to get these loans because the interest rate is so high. And the interest rate is so high because we are running such a high deficit in this country. Unless we find a way to deal with the deficit, we will be putting supplementals on forever trying to help our farmers because that interest rate will eat them alive, and it will continue to eat them alive. Sooner or later you have to say either I believe in this and will try to do something about the deficit or, regardless of the fact that we have a process, we do not have to follow it.

It is important that we get all the appropriation bills out, but it seems to me it is equally important that we get a budget resolution. I had a great discussion yesterday with the ranking member of the Finance Committee, the former chairman, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. He pointed out how long and how hard the Finance Committee has worked to do their part on the deficit reduction package. They met overnight on more than one occasion; they met hour after hour. He said they went in there with certain people saying, "I will never do this; I will never change on this particular item." He said that after you get people in a room and keep them there 24 or 48 hours, "I will never" changes a little bit and they weaken a little bit; they start coming together.

I say to my friend from Mississippi we have had four brief meetings on our conference. No one is now urging that conference to go back and meet. I do not see that on any "must" list before we get out for the Republican National Convention or before we get out in adjournment. I do not hear from Pennsylvania Avenue that there is a need. I hear from Pennsylvania Avenue that there is a need that we have a balanced budget constitutional amendment, but I do not hear there is a need that we follow the law we now have, which says we are going to set limits on spending by our Appropriations Committees and no bills will be in order until those limits have been set.

What has happened to our discipline? How do we get anybody's attention on that? I say to the Senator from Mississippi—and he probably knows this already—I have a lot of people on this side saying, "What in the world are you doing? Don't do it on this bill." And maybe this is the wrong way to do it. I do not know, but I do not know how else to do it. I do not know how else you are going to get somebody in leadership to say, "Wait a minute. We have to resolve this thing; get in that room and do it." There seems to be some magic in one figure for defense of $299 billion. It is sacred and is rolled into stone. Between me and the Senator from Mississippi, I do not see how in the world that figure can be held anyway. The House ultimately has to initiate the defense appropriation bill or a continuing resolution. It seems to me ultimately you have to deal with a Democratically controlled House that is not going to go at a figure of $299 billion. But for the White House, there is some magic in that figure, and I do not know what it is. Maybe the Senator from Mississippi knows. He asks why is there any holdup or when could it be changed.

What is so magic in this figure that the Budget Committee cannot complete its work until the Defense Appropriations Committee marks up at that high figure, until the defense authorizing committee marks up at that high figure? I do not understand that. I do not understand what the reason for it is.

When you ask—and I think this is the bottom line—when could we get to a vote, I wish we could get to a vote this afternoon. The Senator from Florida has never been in this position before. I have been in the Senate 14 years. I have never stepped on this floor and tried to hold up anything. I have had a lot of things that were important to me personally or I had some grievance over what somebody was trying to do, but I never felt any of those things were so important to me personally or my State that they warranted the device of unlimited debate. But I have to tell the Senator I am totally frustrated because we are not following the law we have on the books.

I happen to have had something to do with the authoring of the Budget Act. I remember those bleak days before we had it when we started all of these new programs and got ourselves into a lot of trouble. I know that there was a valid purpose for this act. I have grave fears that the whole act will be scrapped if we allow this to continue the way it is, because you have some people down the street who decide they do not want to compromise or they have already compromised with some Republicans and they do not have to deal with anybody else.

That frustrates me. It frustrates me because I think the Budget Act is worth something. If it is worth saving, then maybe it it worth somebody trying to stop the parade for a while. Now, as for how long to hold it up, if the majority leader came on this floor today and said, "I am instructing the Budget Committee to get with the House and they are to stay in constant meetings with the House until they report back a budget to us," I am gone. I am off this floor. I do not have anything more to say.

When can it be done? It can be done in the next 10 minutes, in the next 30 minutes as far as I am concerned. But, on the other hand, if we are going to have a situation in which nobody cares about the Budget Act, or it is one of those things we get around to at the end of the year after we finish defense appropriations, I will say, under that circumstance, I think we are going to be here somewhat longer.

There are other processes to get the Senator from Florida off his feet, and I do not have any illusions about how long I can continue this. But I do have a feeling, and my conscience tells me I have to try. I have to try for a while if it seems we are going to abandon the Budget Act, if it is going to be cavalierly treated, if we do not have anybody even willing to say that a conference committee is supposed to resolve differences.

There happens to be a difference on defense. What will it be next time? If we set some kind of a precedent and say we are going to take the range, the high and the low of the House and the Senate, where in the world is that going to lead us in domestic spending. We are trying to get some kind of handle on spending.

I say also to my good friend from Mississippi I do not have any magic number for defense spending. I have no number. I am not locked into any number. Whatever the House and Senate conferees can come up with in the range of $299 billion to $287 billion, that is all right with me. That is all right with me, whatever they come up with within that range, if we can report back a budget resolution, if we can say to the Appropriations Committees, "Here now under the law is the budget resolution. Set your allocations. Set them the way the law says. Report those back to the Senate as the law says."

Let us not have an ad hoc situation around here in which the President and the majority party over there decide what allocations are going to be, what bills will be signed, and which will not be. I think we operate under the law. The majority still has a lot of room under the law. At any time they can produce 51 votes; they can pass anything around here; but at least they will do it under the rule of law and not under the guise of a rump agreement that has been entered into down the street and says: "That is all we have to do, and we are doing right, so don't worry."

It worries me what kind of precedent we are setting for any future President who may have a different agenda, who may be concerned with different spending priorities and is going to set those particular priorities, rather than this President, who I am sure, in his own mind, is going to hold the line on spending on most items. Defense does not happen to be the one, but on everything else he is ready to hold the line. It seems to me that we have to be ready to do it on all. That is what the law is about. We are going to set a pattern, and we are going to follow it.

(Mr. GORTON assumed the chair.)

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator giving me a full answer to my question. I am not sure I know what the answer is, except that we continue to point out problems in connection with trying to abide by the terms of the Budget Act.

We know that those problems exist, and I know that every Senator is concerned about trying to find some way to impose a greater degree of restraint or discipline in the budget process.

I know of no Senator who is for abandoning the effort to find a better way to deal with the ever-increasing growth in spending and trying to set out a plan during the course of the year that projects what the revenues and the spending needs of the country should be. I think we all share that.

I sympathize with the feelings of the Senator from Florida that a better job should be done. I remember the passage of the Budget Act, too. I was in the other body, so I was not here to have the benefit of the debate in the Senate. In the other body, the chief concern seemed to be the impoundment authority that the Chief Executive was using in the withholding of the spending of money.

The fact was that the President back then, whether you agreed with what he was doing or not, was causing a great deal of discipline to be followed in the expenditure of funds.

Mr. CHILES. I say to the Senator——

Mr. COCHRAN. I still have the floor, Mr. President.

I recall that in those days, when the Democratic Party controlled both the Senate and the House, it was standard procedure for there to be an appropriation of funds over and above what anybody would say would be needed for a lot of programs, just to see what the President would do: Would he veto the bill or sign the bill and then withhold the expenditures? But Congress knew that one or the other would occur. It was intentional in those days for there to be rampant appropriations, with no regard whatsoever for any kind of discipline.

So one reason why the Budget Act was passed—not the only reason, but one reason that got a lot of attention then—was that this would end the President's power to impound funds. He would have to spend what Congress said he had to spend to fund these programs. If he did not want to do that, there were certain procedures he had to follow. He could propose that appropriated funds be rescinded, or he could propose that a spending program be deferred for a period of time. Congress then had opportunities to react to those proposals.

That may have been an improvement. But, taken in its entirety, the Budget Act does not cause a greater degree of spending restraint in the Federal Government. Since 1974, which was when the act was passed, there probably has been an accumulation of more deficit than there has in the entire history of the Federal Government.

When the Budget Act was passed, it was lauded and praised by persons in both bodies as a way to impose a greater degree of restraint. We were not going to have these runaway deficits of $5 billion and $10 billion, or whatever they were in those days. We were going to get a handle on spending, be able to look at the entire Government in one document, and set out categories of spending.

Since then, much to my dismay and to the dismay of the Senator from Florida and others, we have seen the tendency of Members of Congress to use the budget resolution to trigger votes on controversial issues, one after the other, trying to cause line item changes when we were really talking about categories of spending.

It has been a shame that the process has not worked. I do not know that it is the fault of any one person. I know that many Members in both Houses have worked hard to make the budget process work, and make it an implement of restraint, so that we could look at the entire financial obligation of the Government in one document, and consider how the resources of the Government ought to be allocated in a more sensible way, rather than the piecemeal bill-by-bill appropriation approach.

So, while I share those concerns and those fears, I hate to have this bill singled out. The agriculture appropriations bill is tied up on the floor, holding up funding for the Women, Infants and Children Feeding Program, the Food Stamp Program, and the School Lunch Program, to name a few. Those who are planning the budgets for the next fiscal year, trying to decide how much money should be appropriated by State legislatures or allocated by school boards for the various functions at the local level, are not going to know how much money is going to be available from the Federal Government for these programs. That could put a strain on them. That is one problem I foresee, and there are others, which I mentioned a moment ago.

While I applaud what the Senator is doing in terms of focusing attention on the problems of the budget process—the fact that we need to do a better job; we all agree with that—I hope that, having made that point and having discussed it as fully as it can be discussed, we can now vote for or reject the motion to waive the Budget Act on this bill and proceed to the appropriations bill. I hope we can do that, Mr. President.

I yield the floor.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the distinguished chairman. I just want to make a couple of comments, and then I would love to yield the floor to the Senator from South Carolina. He has been on the Budget Committee since its inception, helped write the act and certainly knows what we were concerned about. He has had an overriding concern that we try to reduce spending here and try to live within our means.

The Senator from Mississippi talked about his experience in the House when the Budget Act was passed and that the major driving force there was to get the impoundment legislation. I agree with that. I think that was the carrot a lot of people went for, and we had the stick in there to try to enforce some kind of spending restraints. The carrot was this: Look, we are going to do something about impoundment.

I think the Senator from Mississippi remembers that the impoundment lawsuits generated during the Nixon Presidency were ultimately won by Congress. The President did not have the impoundment authority.

So I think we were trying to regularize the process of whether a President had the right to impound, to rescind, or whether he was just "holding up."

The Senator from Mississippi made another point. I know how many important things are in this bill. But I also know that when you start talking about infant care and about the WIC Program, they are victims more than anyone else, with the interest rates we have. The children are always caught more than anyone else. If we say that we are going to abandon any discipline on spending restraints and are going to pass a bill and give them some money, we are giving them a little handout from the Federal Government. It is very little help. They see the light bill go up; they see the garbage collection bill go up; they see the cost of clothes go up. They buy everything. Everything they buy is paid for by the week, on a loan.

They got a loan with the consumer finance, and they got a loan here, and they are paying extra money at the grocery store for their credit and interest. And interest is eating those people alive.

If we do not face the need to hold deficits and interest rates, I can tell the Senator that we are not doing any great favor for those people by saying that we are rushing through a program.

The Senator also asked why do we not get on with this? I wish I could say to the Senator from Mississippi that I thought I had made a point, but I have not seen any point being made yet, to tell the Senator the truth. I have not had anyone tell me, "We want you to get back into the conference on the budget; we want you to resolve this difference with the House." I have not had anyone say we are going to go forward with this.

What I am hearing now is: "We have to get this bill out and then I hope you are not going to raise any objection on the next one, military construction. We have to get the next one out and have to get the next one out, and we will worry about that budget thing down the road. We will take care of that. Do not worry, Lawton. We are going to take care of that. Before we leave here this year sometime, we are going to take care of that."

But that is not the law. That is not what the law says. That is not spending restraint. That has no purpose. We might as well pack up the Budget Committee and do away with it under those circumstances.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I join the distinguished Senator from Florida, the ranking minority member of our Budget Committee, on this occasion to support him because I am confident that he is here as a matter of conscience.

As the former chairman of that Budget Committee and one who helped enact the legislation and fashion the discipline and, with a continuing overriding interest in the continuance of the process, I can see very readily why Senator Chiles has taken the floor.

We are not in opposition or confrontation to anything in the agriculture bill. Certainly, there is no greater supporter of this legislation. Having been in on the creation actually of women, infants and children feeding, food stamps, and the other valuable programs contained in the bill. I have no opposition to its passage. It's critical and important to our agricultural community.

But somewhere, sometime, as the Senator charged with the keeper of the purse and keeper of the conscience and talking intelligently and trying to talk persuasively on the fiscal affairs of our Nation, with the runaway deficits that we have, the distinguished Senator from Florida is fulfilling a very important duty and performing a magnificent service for us here in the Senate.

We only hear the little tidbits and the asides in the national news media, and they never have made an attempt to cover our fiscal affairs in any intelligent way. I say that advisedly.

There has to be a discipline. Ordinarily, it should come from the Executive himself.

I have been the executive of a State. I had served 10 years in the legislature, so I knew good and well that you could not wait for a consensus, and in our house there were 124 members and 46 members in the State senate, to bring out a fiscal plan. Certainly, at the time when we needed revenues, if I as Governor, as the Chief Executive, did not lead the way and set the discipline, it would never develop.

I could have ducked that responsibility.

I did it, however, with great hostility amongst friends in the legislature and advisers who said it was politically stupid, but the opposite has been proved. We succeeded in raising revenues by only one vote.

We got a triple-A credit rating and South Carolina by being fiscally responsible has attracted more industry on that one point, more jobs, more opportunities for minorities, for the disadvantaged, for the locked out.

I would say if there is one single act that I could go back and point to that has done more to help us economically develop the pie—that was my expression that I was not going to cut the pie in different sections or pieces, but I was going to add more pie—it was the fiscal discipline and we did that at that particular time. Responsibility we used to discharge our duty.

Here I have seen that occur in Congress. I have seen it occur before with respect to the Executive himself, Lyndon Johnson, in 1968.

We were met in the appropriations markup conference with George Mahon over on the House side. It was December 1968 and President Johnson was very much concerned that he would turn over a budget that was not balanced to his successor, President Nixon. You remember the fiscal years used to begin in July.

We got together and we were on the phone with Marvin Watson, getting permission to cut this one and that one, and we cut some five billion odd dollars. And we gave what—a balanced Federal budget in 1969. That is the last time in our history that it has been balanced.

To get a quick understanding why it has gotten unbalanced, it is the old political game.

Our distinguished colleague, the former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in 1971 was running for President up in New Hampshire, and he gave them a 15-percent increase in social security benefits, and since he knew more than all of us about the financing of the Federal Government and particularly the Social Security fund itself we followed along with Mr. Mills at that particular time.

So then came candidate President Nixon running for reelection and the same old one-upmanship game that we played here the other night on the floor of the Senate—that is no new game—I saw that again in the election year 1972. President Nixon said: "He will give you 15 percent; I will give you 20 percent."

So we had a 20 percent increase in Social Security benefits. He outbid Mr. Mills. The Executive led in the other direction, away from fiscal responsibility.

Let us swing quickly, because I do not want to take too much of the Senate's time to when we as Democrats were able to persuade the President, which I hope the Senator could persuade the Republican majority to do, because I do not think we can change this President. I think you folks can lead the way. I think that is our only hope on the Republican side of the aisle because I know the Senator from Mississippi is fiscally responsible. I know our distinguished majority leader, HOWARD BAKER, is fiscally responsible. I know Mr. DOLE, the chairman of the Finance Committee, is fiscally responsible. And they are ready to work, and we could go down the list.

When we had the responsibility, I say to Senator COCHRAN, in 1980 President Carter running for reelection put a budget out on the floor that just could not carry. It was too much spending. It caused too big a deficit. We had gotten down in the $40 billion range, and deficits were going to exceed the $66 billion range that President Carter inherited, going up to $75 billion or $80 billion. The bond market went into the depths and everything else of that kind.

So, there we were around the clock, with the leadership from the House of Representatives and the Speaker, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee over there, and the Budget Committee; on the Senate side with Senator Byrd, our leader, and we got around on Sunday night until 11 o'clock at night, and does the Senator know what we came up with? Memory is very short.

We said, "Mr. President, resubmit your budget."

And the President on March 30 of that year, 1980, had to resubmit a budget so we could all maintain our credibility and generally hold on as now history has proved. We held that deficit for that particular year, 1981, down as President Carter left office there in 1980-81 to $57.8 billion, right at $58 billion, which was less than the $77 billion he sent to the Congress in his original budget submission.

So we did not run away with the deficit and the discipline started over here.

But, now, there was a play on Broadway—I think it was Pajama Game—where they sang the song, "Anything You Can Do I Can Do Better,"—or maybe that was the late Ethel Merman. Excuse me.

I think it was she. There was another play there, as well.

But we are playing the same style of one-upsmanship here. We have run away with the process.

I saw it break when, as the ranking member, having started out with President Reagan in good faith, it was I who went to Senator DOMENICI, who was taking over, and I said, "PETE, you don't even have the staff and you and I have been trying to cut the spending. We used to have the Hollings-Domenici amendment to cut. Let's just draw this up into a reconciliation package for your President to approve, and I will have my staff, which is a Democratic staff, draw up the $35.4 billion spending cut."

Then we turned it around, of course, to the Domenici-Hollings resolution to start off President Reagan and this administration with the spending cut. They then came down with the so-called Reaganomics program and that really put the skids to us all. I do not say that in a pejorative sense. I have learned otherwise; we have learned otherwise.

Henry Bellmon, who was then the ranking member when I took over the Budget Committee in that late spring of 1980—you remember that Senator Muskie went up as the Secretary of State—we were meeting in a room over there in the building with the entire congressional CBO, Dr. Alice Rivlin and her team. But, more than anything else, they asked in the financial minds of the country. Otto Eckstein was alive at that time; Larry Klein, of the Wharton School of Finance; Herbert Stein, of the University of Virginia; Walter Heller; Allan Greenspan—five former chairmen of the Council of Economic Advisers for Republicans and Democrats; Barry Bosworth. You have them all, 27 around the room.

They were trying to project for the year 1981. In their projection, it began to look darker and darker—higher unemployment, high inflation, and other gloomy projections.

I said to them, I broke in and I said, "I have been listening here all morning long. I am now the chairman of the Budget Committee but, more importantly, I am a candidate for reelection. If I go back home and tell my folks back home how important I am"—I studied my humility under Mendel Rivers who used to run the Armed Services Committee. Mendel would come back and say, "My Army and my Navy."

So if I came back home and said, "My budget," they would say, "Well, get rid of that man. He don't know what is going on up there in Washington. He's got the whole thing broke and in the red."

So I said, "I'm not a financier or an economist, but I am willing to listen. What would you do to get this whole thing back on track?"

And around that room of the 27 men and women, they agreed, No. 1, they said, "Stop all the tax cuts because right now they will be inflationary."

You had a plethora of tax cut proposals out on the floor in the summertime there. You had our good friend Senator LONG who reported out a $55 billion tax cut by a vote of 18 to 1. You had the candidate Reagan tax cut, you had the candidate Carter tax cut, and you had KEMP-ROTH. Every politican, Republican and Democrat loves tax cuts.

These respected economic leaders, however, said, "Senator, let's hold up on those tax cuts. Get us by the election and whoever is the President in January we can have a tax cut on the supply side, for business only, as we did it in the sixties."

Supply side is no George Gilder or KEMP-ROTH or President Reagan initiative. We primed the pump under Franklin Roosevelt. We had it again in earlier years. Jack Kennedy came in, in 1962 with the investment tax credit depreciation allowance for business only. He waited 2 years, until 1964, to trigger in the across-the-board individual income tax cuts. You cannot put the demand and the supply together. They said that if you tried that, you are going to cancel yourself out and you are going to have more inflation and it is not going to take effect. We listened.

If you only look at the second concurrent budget resolution for 1981—a little green book—I was asked how much of a tax cut were they talking about—$15 billion. Bob Giaimo and I finally got the number down to $16.1 billion, what we projected.

I had to get out on the floor, as a candidate, and stonewall tax cuts. It was not popular, but we stonewalled. We beat them all. I got reelected and President Reagan was there.

Instead of holding it down to $15 billion a year over 5 years, or $75 billion, the rest is history—Reaganomics. We went up to $750 billion in tax cuts and then heaped upon it $1.6 billion in increases in defense.

Now, that is where we are all of a sudden getting these $200 billion deficits. The chickens have come home to roost, Mr. President, which brings us here to the process itself. The process itself really got off track after we, as a "Gang of 17," had met together in that summer of 1981-82, looking at that particular budget. We were trying to find a package to project out for the years of some $429 billion. We were all there and we had been meeting and everything else. At one point, we finally got the Speaker, Speaker O'NEILL, to agree to go along. Our friend Dick Bolling was there representing the Speaker in a $400 billion package. I said, like George Aiken had said about Vietnam: "Let's declare victory. This is as close as we are going to get" and that is when it turned. And your administration and mine—we only have one President—they did not want an agreement. They cut it off and then everything became impossible.

I said, "This crowd here just doesn't want to agree at all." Who can estimate over that period of time whether we were accurate on 400 or 429? Then they went into their posturing about social security and had the high-level meeting out here in the President's Room with the President, the Speaker, and all their groups. And they agreed to disagree. Then they came back.

David Stockman went right down the hall here with the distinguished majority leader and sat in there and they called in our Republican colleagues off the Budget Committee one by one: "What do you want? Now, no amendments." And they marched them through in a drilled fashion, gave them what they wanted. And the camaraderie, the understanding, the give and take, the discipline of doing a good job went out of the window.

When we went back into the Budget Committee—and we stayed there late at night. We went in there for 3 days and 3 nights and had zero amendments. The majority would not accept any. They had all agreed to stonewall all amendments and pass the blooming thing out.

When we came to the floor, it was only the Senator from Tennessee, and you will remember his amendment on the railway employees. There was only one exception and they just stonewalled all the other amendments.

So this Executive—and I am not saying that if I were the Executive I would not have tried the same thing—learned how to take over the budget process, so that as of this year we now have the distortion whereby, instead of passing the budget resolution out here and conforming both the revenues and the spending cuts to the particular resolution, we first got the revenue measure with the Finance Committee. And now this afternoon the administration, the White House, is calling on your Republican majority and saying, "Stonewall and don't do anything. Don't even discuss defense because what we want to do is get that defense figure through by both authorization and appropriation. Then, when we get that, we will conform the budget resolution to the actual facts."

Now, that is the exercise we are going through, and it is blasphemy. You know it and I know it. I know the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and the others around here do not want to talk publicly about it. But that is exactly what we are doing.

So the Senator from Florida is saying that if this is the way we are going to do it, we just might as well forget about the budget process because we are just going to ramrod and hold everybody. As long as we have a locked majority without a conscience on budget matters, the President himself can go out around the country and say, "Oh, all we need is an amendment to the Constitution so that we can get a balanced budget."

But back here in Washington he is saying of the one instrument, namely the budget resolution, to hold the lid on spending: "Kill it; bottle it up; don't agree; don't meet; walk in and walk out." And that is exactly what has happened.

They ought to be ashamed of themselves. That is what is going on. So it is not whether we consider women, infants, and children getting in the agriculture bill or whether we are worried about feeding people here in July. They are going to get their money. You and I know that. They are not worried. We will all be looking after that.

But if we do not raise this point, if the distinguished Senator from Florida does not raise the point here on the budget now, when is he going to do it? After Labor Day when we come back? It will all be gone. It will all be done with. He is trying to save the process that has worked. No; we have not limited spending because of this situation we have gotten ourselves into.

We have done away with the budget process, and we are playing one-upmanship. We did a lot of cutting of spending, but the increases which have come along both in defense and interest payments are killing us. Interest on the debt is the fastest growing section in the budget—and tax cuts, those loopholes. I will never forget in handling this particular budget where in 1968 we had loopholes or what we call tax expenditures totaling $38 billion and the expenditure for defense was $68 billion. That was in 1968; easy to remember. This present year defense has grown from $68 to $265 billion. I heard a figure used this morning by Senator DOLE on his little radio program of $280 billion something. I do not think it is that high. I think $265 billion is the accurate figure. But tax loopholes, or tax expenditures, during the same period have grown to $328.7 billion.

We have ripped more hemorrhages into the economic and revenue fabric of this body politic than you can possibly imagine. We have been falling over each other; like last week and the other night—just walk in here and spend. You and I on the Appropriations Committee are trying to find loan guarantees for farmers who are good farmers. It is no fault of their own. They are playing the game by the rules and everything else. They need those loan guarantees of somewhere around $600 million that we cannot put in that supplemental bill. But just last week we can spend $5 billion already for next year. Why? Just to get the vote. That is all it was. It was a bride. They are saying we want that. The President comes along, and what does the President say? The President says that at the rate we are going we do not know that the young people of America will be able to get their benefits from Social Security. President Reagan says that Mr. Mondale then says you cannot be "savaging" Social Security; "savaging." They know how to use those emotion provoking words. They are all good actors. So he says that for the press. Reagan switches around entirely. During his press conference he says what I meant to say is I am going to give you an increase next year whether you deserve it or not.

So the Democrats, with our distinguished friend from New York, come on the floor. He said he is going to give it to you next year. We are going to give it to you tonight. "I move $5 billion." We spent 5, 5, and 5; $15 billion, in fact, on the increase of inflation and otherwise. It is going to be nearer 17 billion bucks. We spent 3 months around here to find $50 billion in revenues. But in 5 minutes $17 billion of it has gone out of the window, and we wonder why the market is like it is and why the people have no confidence in us. Right now the Social Security fund is taking $17 billion from general revenues.

I quote Senator LONG's staff who runs this Social Security Program on the Finance Committee. Last year we took $22 billion. It is costing us $17 billion to cover the shortage. We do not have a fiscally sound fund but nobody wants to put that in the RECORD and tell the recipients the truth in America. Our distinguished friend from Mississippi makes the fight on fiscal matters because he is fiscally responsible. Perhaps the Senator from Florida would want to get a live quorum, let us talk it out, and see if we cannot have the majority finally get some kind of discipline and some kind of understanding to stop this one-upmanship.

We are spending like madmen here. If you cannot beat them, join them. The whole idea is not how to cut the deficit. The name of the game here is how to spend the deficit. That is what everybody is going to play. I am going to get in the game, too. There is no reason to sit on the sidelines. Everybody is spending the deficit for what they want. It is the setting of high priorities. We do not have to worry about money. We have all the money we can possibly use. Just add to the deficit.

So I would hope what the Senator from Florida is saying would be taken to heart. All we want is the majority leadership on the Budget Committee to get off that high horse of stonewalling on defense and talk as reasonable, sane, prudent men, as mature Senators for the United States, and walk in, sit down, and once and for all say, "Let's reconcile this amount," or whatever it is, so we can get out a budget resolution. I happen to think the budget resolution has some very, very liberal projections with respect to inflation, interest costs, and so forth. I did not vote for it because that has been bothering me—the way we have been projecting just to get by. But at least let us hold the process together until another day when we finally get a day of reckoning.

I do not know anything that is going to bring us to our senses better than an election for the people of America to understand that it is all going to be taken care of next year. Our ticket is saying it is going to take more revenues. It is going to take some spending cuts. It is going to take some revenues. It is going to take holding the line on entitlements.

That is why neither side has credibility and particularly in the light of our activity last week when we came with no authorization, repudiating what we at least had gotten a little bit of credit for. We had a Social Security settlement that showed some forbearance. We promptly threw it out of the window in light of the November election trying to bribe the senior citizen vote, one side saying the other is callous, hard on the senior citizens, "savaging" and all of those kind of things when we all know it is just a one-upmanship game like Roman bread and circuses. We are spending the fruits of the next generation in order to get ourselves reelected. I hope the people of America will listen to Senator CHILES and what he is saying. I hope some of these good, conscientious Republican friends who are with the Budget Committee will get away from those directions politically given from the White House. They are put in an embarrassing spot. They do not even discuss it. They walk in the budget conference and say, unless you are going to agree totally to our defense figure, then we are not going to discuss anything.

They are pleased with that stance. That is what is particularly annoying. They are satisfied with that particular stance because they are saying we are fooling them. What we really want to do is get the President's defense authorization through, and his defense appropriations. Then we do not mind about continuing resolutions, after-the-fact kind-of-budget resolutions, everything else, and then whatever is spent nobody will know the difference by November. It cannot take that quick an effect. We will just go ahead with deficits, and look out for the next year.

How do they do that? There is only one reason. That media up there lets them get by with it. If that media came to me, shoved that microphone under my nose and said "Governor"—I am walking down the capitol steps now in my own State capitol. I am trying to compare what goes on in Jackson, MS and what goes on in Washington, DC, I say to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi. And if you walk down the capitol steps or if I did in Columbia, SC, Jackson, MS, and they put that microphone under your nose, and said, "What do you intend to do about the $200 million deficit," say in Mississippi or South Carolina, which would compare to the $200 billion deficit we have at the Federal level and you reared back and said, "Well, wait a minute here. This is an election year, you know. We have a lot of political costs to get anything done in an election year. But after my reelection we are going to get together a bipartisan group, and we are all going to get together and start working on this." And one of those reporters at the State level would immediately say, "Governor, there is not going to be any reelection for you unless you do something between now and November." That would be the worst of politics. The local press would blast you. The local media would blast you. They would run you off the capitol steps with that kind of politics. That would be the worst politics in the world. But it sells in Washington. It is a sad thing to say. It sells up here. That is all you need to know. That crowd up there covering the stories thinks that is grand. "He gave them a smart answer. Let us go to the next thing." Nobody is saying or doing anything about it. No one writes the story.

Let me ask, since no one else is around, and I am beginning to enjoy this. I have Hubert Humphrey's disease. I will never forget his wife saying, "In order for a speech to be immortal, it cannot be eternal." So I am not going to make an eternal appearance.

But it seems to me that we could be doing better. Maybe I ought not to get into that particular field of the budget now because I have said enough here this afternoon. We ought to really try our dead-level best. A lot of people have become interested. Let me tell you the good. If you look at the amounts, and I remember on the Appropriations Committee we had no idea what we were spending. How have we done good? We do now have a backdrop. I just come out of a State-Justice-Commerce Subcommittee. We spent afternoons and evenings, and afternoons and mornings. And we finally got $26,000 below the figure given by the President trying to hold that line.

There it has worked. We have been given a budget amount, and if we had all been given an amount that we agreed on, it would work there. It has been working. There is a conscience around here, if we can only correlate it and bring it to bear on the floor of the Senate as the Senator from Florida is trying to do.

I know as a legislator that we have cut up the Presidential aims. They used to always cut out impacted aid for education, knowing we would put it in. They would always cut out the amount for the veterans, knowing we would put the amount in for the veterans. They would always hide things within the Defense Department, a 2-percent insurance cut. That is, they increase the defense budget 2 percent knowing it would be cut so they would get the amount they wanted. We found that actually documented.

We have done away with all executive gimmicks.

The sad part is that we know the President has not submitted a budget that anyone in conscience in this Senate could present for a vote. That is a sad thing to say.

This year the President's budget was presented on the House side. The vote was held and it was defeated by something like 427 to 1. JACK KEMP was the only one they could find in the 435 membership over there who could offer it.

No one in the Senate has had the audacity to present that budget. It is out of the whole cloth. It gave no guidance.

Similarly, last year and the year before, I moved the President's budget. All 12 members of the Budget Committee on the President's side voted no against the President's budget.

The distinguished President has yet to introduce a budget that we can offer in the U.S. Senate.

So these are the things that we ought to be talking about, and not a balanced budget amendment. What has been the practice here in the National Congress? What have we done to fashion this? Do we not get any satisfaction from doing a good job? Are we all going down the pike on this same old idea of just get a poll, identify with it, and say: "I am concerned," and to heck with doing the job?

That is what the Senator from Florida as our ranking member on the Budget Committee is trying to do this afternoon, to call on the conscience of the membership to somehow, some where, some way bring to bear their sincerity and genuine feel about their particular job and not just march in and say: "You either take our figure or forget it," knowing they do not want a budget or a budget process. They want to get by with their particular bills. Thereafter, if a resolution can be conformed to the fact, then go ahead and conform the resolution. But do not put the facts on now. Do not say: "Let us have any spending limits, because we do not want the limits; we want to get our amounts, particularly on defense."

It is a sad thing.

I commend the Senator from Mississippi for doing his job with agriculture. He is trying to get his bill passed. I know he feels this point was raised on his particular bill. But it is the end of July and the first of August and we are about to leave.

Some where, some time, there has to be a conscience and there has to be a responsibility or there is no reason to be a U.S. Senator. That is the way the Senator from Florida feels. In a timely fashion, with too much time already having passed, certainly not after Labor Day when we come back, he is raising that point now for our colleagues to hear and see if we can do something on this budget to maintain an orderly process.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. COCHRAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, it is, I think, ironic that the point we are making today about the lack of restraint and controlling spending is being made on a motion to waive the Budget Act to get a bill that will be $292 million below the spending level of 1984 if it and the 1984 supplemental bill are approved by the Senate.

I know that point has been made earlier, that this is not the reason why this bill has been singled out. This bill is within the budget allocation of the resolution which had been agreed to. There is no complaint being made of that by the Senator from Florida nor the Senator from South Carolina, who just discussed the process and some of the difficulties we have all witnessed in observing the budget process—the gamesmanship which has occurred, not just downtown with the administration but also on the Hill.

I can recall during the time when President Nixon was serving in the White House—and President Ford, too—that it was something of a game for the Congress to see how much they could put into a bill—how much was needed to trigger a veto. That was the question. The issue was not how much was needed to fund a program at an appropriate level of activity.

I can remember sitting over in the other body and observing Members engaging in a conversation designed to provoke the administration into vetoing a bill. I can remember that the Older Americans Act was one that was always picked out to fund at such excessive levels that if the administration tried to spend all the money that was allocated for those programs in that year, they could not physically do it unless they took buckets of money and just sort of poured the money out into the pipeline somehow. There was no way in the structure of many of those programs to deal with the funds that were being appropriated.

So there would be vetoes. Then the dialog and the rhetoric that followed would be of one accusing the other of being fiscally irresponsible, and the other would supposedly be insensitive to the needs of the elderly and the poor.

It got completely out of hand. We all know that. That is not a secret. It is ironic, though, that it is at this point during the legislative year or the appropriations process when we stop to make the point that there has been a lack of restraint, that the budget process has bogged down, for whatever reasons. I do not disagree with the fact that there is a problem. It is a very, very serious problem. This Congress and this Federal Government has to do a better job of meeting the challenge to restrain spending, to appropriate only those amounts of money that are really necessary, to try to stop the ineffective and inefficient use of Government money, and to get Government under control.

I certainly applaud the efforts being made to reach that goal, and I will support whatever effort is being developed, whatever new reforms can be brought to the Senate for that purpose.

Having made those points and having identified that as a serious problem, I think we ought to move on to the consideration of a bill that provides funding within the allocation that has been prescribed by the committee and within the levels that everybody, I think, would consider to be reasonable. The funding in this bill for the next fiscal year will be below the funding of those activities this fiscal year. This bill is an example of responsibility, in my judgment. Each member of the committee ought to be congratulated for the effort that has been made to work to see that the funding levels in this bill are reasonable, that they do reflect restraint, and, at the same time, demonstrate our sensitivity to the needs that we are trying to meet with the funding levels.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will receive a message from the President.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Chirdon, one of his secretaries.

Mr. CHILES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. DANFORTH]. The Senator from Florida.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER—AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, maybe we ought to open that message right away, because that may be the answer to our dilemma. If that message were to say: "I really think the committee ought to go forward with the budget resolution and I instruct you all to get off this dime and follow the law that the Congress has set to restrain spending," by golly, that would just be wonderful news and we could let the distinguished Senator from Mississippi pass this good bill and go about our business.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the message is not that. It is simply a nomination sent to the Senate.

Mr. CHILES. I am disappointed, because I had hoped for the Senator from Mississippi that we would be able to resolve this thing and go forward.

Was that a nomination for a new chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers?

Mr. COCHRAN. No, Mr. President, the Commodity Futures Trade Commission.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I had hope springing forth. I think every time I see the door open that there will still be hope that we can get on with this process.

I certainly agree with the Senator from Mississippi that we ought to be passing these appropriations bills. A lot of people have worked very hard in the committee to try to get these bills ready. I certainly want to see them passed. But when we talk about this particular bill, I congratulate the Senator from Mississippi that it is under the targets. I think that is very good. But I think what we finally decided back in 1974 was that we could not just decide that everybody would do right and that all of us would try to restrain spending. We realized that we had to try to invoke discipline.

We needed to invoke that discipline because we were starting programs that had formulas that ran on and ran into billions of dollars. We were not responsible in the way we conducted ourselves and that is why we came forth with the Budget Act. That act was to enforce that discipline upon us.

Now, if we say on any one appropriation bill, well, we have done right on this so we do not need the discipline at the end of the year, of course, we are going to see the entire year go by. It is already August. We have no budget resolution; we have no blueprint for how much we should spend for the entire year. Congress has not put its final stamp of approval on what the level of spending should be. So what happens to our discipline? Is it gone. It is out the window.

I think if it were not the agriculture bill, if it were the Labor, Health and Human Services bill, I know how many good projects would be in that. We would be dealing with education, we would be dealing with handicapped children, we would be dealing with job training, we would be dealing with research, with cancer—my goodness, everything in the world. And I am sure again we would say the subcommittee is within its formula, that the President has agreed to it, that the majority party has agreed to it and, therefore, we should pass this bill.

The same thing would happen when we got to the military construction bill, something that is very necessary for the country. If it were so necessary, we might have an authorization bill, and we do not even have an authorization bill. But we shall still have that appropriation bill. There would be a lot of people who would say, "Wait a minute, we have to have that. That is important. Do not let this little fight over the Budget Committee hold that up."

When I think back to the time that we first passed the act, I can imagine what Muskie and Bellmon would be doing on the floor of the Senate had we gone to August without a budget resolution. It makes me cringe. It makes me cringe at the fact that the Senator from Florida waited this long. It makes me ashamed of myself that I waited this long, because those fellows would not have waited.

They would have been on this floor raising 14 kinds of sand and something would probably have been done long before now. But the Senator from Florida just sort of lay back and said, "People are going to do right around here. I have confidence in the people that they are going to do right."

I had confidence as we went through June. I had confidence as we went through July. It is August; my confidence is gone. It is all gone now. I do not have any confidence.

I realize now that the Senator from Florida has sat on his duty, has not carried out the role that Henry Bellmon would have carried out as the ranking member on the Budget Committee over the years he was here, and certainly has not carried out the role that Senator Muskie would have carried out while he chaired the committee.

We have had discipline and we have enforced it up until this year. That discipline has broken down this year. I do not know why. As the Senator from New Mexico says, it is a very different year. I guess we have had a year under the Budget Committee which was divisible by four before, as this one is. I cannot remember exactly what happened in that year. That would have been 1980, I guess. But we did not have this kind of problem. Again, we had one in 1976. But somehow, we got through those years.

I am confident we can get through this year because the only thing we have to do is, really, just go sit down and resolve one little number. When that number is resolved, then we have a plan, then we have a blueprint. Then we shall be able to determine where we are going.

Until that is done, Mr. President, while I have been derelict, and I have, and while I have not carried out the duty that I should have done, and I have not, I am going to be the spirit for a while here of Henry Bellmon and Ed Muskie and try to do what they would have done long before now to try to see that we get that act and that we set it down.

I think maybe part of the problem is that 64 of the Senators were not here when we passed the act. Maybe that means that they do not know what the Senator from Mississippi knows and what the Senator from Florida knows, why we had to have this discipline, why we needed to try to control ourselves.

The Senator from Mississippi raised an argument that many people have raised before in my State. I am ranking member on this Budget Committee and if it is such a great committee, how come it has a $180 billion deficit now? The deficit was peanuts beforehand. I scratch my head a lot about that and think a lot. The answer I can come up with is that most of the problems today are from the programs we created prior to the time we had a Budget Act, prior to the time that we had a blueprint to look at what some of the programs are going to cost us. I also take solace from the fact that I do not see us starting any new grand and glorious programs such as we started in those past years. So I think, overall, there certainly has been a purpose to the act. I think that is the reason that we should continue the act.

Having said that, Mr. President, knowing those 64 Senators were not here in 1974, it may be that we have to take them to school. I would hope that the 36 who were here would help that, and I am delighted that they have been helping since we started this yesterday. But I guess we cannot expect miracles.

We cannot expect overnight that 64 people will understand, because it took us some years to pass the Budget Act, in order to realize how important and how necessary it was. Even from the time that we started drawing the act itself, I expect it was about 2 years from the genesis of the idea in 1972 until we got it passed. So I am an optimist. I know that Rome was not built in a day, so maybe it is going to take a little while before that 64 will understand the importance of the act.

We know when we start the year we need to follow these processes; there is a reason for following them, and unless we follow them, we are going to get ourselves in trouble. Then hopefully when the Senator from Mississippi comes in with a bill as good as this one, it will go through this Senate just as quick as a whistle because of the prior work that has been done in regard to the bill. I know that he has a bill which is well under the allocation and certainly would be very beneficial to agriculture. I look forward to him being able to move that bill.

Hope was springing in my heart again as the majority leader walked in; I thought maybe we had a message from on high that we were going to resolve this crisis, but I guess we may need to wait just a little longer before we have that.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the Baker motion to waive section 303(a) of the Budget Act for consideration of H.R. 5743, an act making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, as reported.

Senators Howard Baker, Ted Stevens, John Heinz, Chic Hecht, Strom Thurmond, Charles Mac Mathias, Mark Hatfield, Mack Mattingly, Bob Kasten, James Abdnor, Alfonse D'Amato, Pete Domenici, Jesse Helms, Paul Laxalt, Bob Dole, Thad Cochran and Arlen Specter.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this cloture motion, of course, will ripen into a vote Monday next, assuming we will be in tomorrow. And we will be in tomorrow. We will be on this debate on the motion, if that is useful. But if there are other matters that we can do—and there are a few other things that might be worked in—then the leadership on this side is willing to consider that. But we will now have a vote on cloture on Monday. I will attempt to negotiate with the distinguished minority leader a mutually convenient time for this vote. Otherwise, as Members know, the vote will occur on Monday 1 hour after the Senate convenes after the establishment of a quorum pursuant to the provision of the rule.

Mr. President, I am ready to go into a time for the transaction of routine morning business——

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, might I say to the distinguished majority leader that the Senator from Florida would not have any problem with taking up other matters tomorrow, if that appeared to be convenient, other than appropriation matters.

Mr. BAKER. I appreciate that. I have no desire to cut off anybody from speaking, but otherwise what I plan to do is put in a quorum and as soon as the minority leader reaches the floor we will probably go into morning business.

Mr. CHILES. Did the Senator assign a time for this cloture vote on Monday?

Mr. BAKER. No. Mr. President, that would require unanimous consent. I will consult with the minority leader on that. But otherwise, it will occur 1 hour after we convene on Monday.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I wish to announce there will be no RECORD votes in the Senate today.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business until not later than 5:30 p.m., in which Senators may speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have a few items that I have cleared for action by unanimous consent. The first is S. 1177 and the budget waiver to accompany it. If that matter is cleared for action by the minority leader, I will be able to go forward with it.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Chair indulge me for a moment?

Mr. President, there is no objection.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1072, which is a Budget Act waiver.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 418) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 1177.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 418

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 1177, entitled "A bill to amend title 4 of the United States Code to complete the official seal of the United States." Such waiver is necessary to allow the authorization of a sum not to exceed $15,000 to enable the Secretary of State to cut a die and make appliances for making an impression of the reverse of the seal to complete the official seal of the United States.

GREAT SEAL ACT OF 1983

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1032, S. 1177, which was referred to in the Budget Act waiver just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1177) to amend title IV of the United States Code to complete the official seal of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1177

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Great Seal Act of 1983".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Continental Congress, on June 20, 1782, adopted the design of the Great Seal of the United States consisting of an obverse and reverse side, however, only a die for the obverse side was cut and has been in use since September 16, 1782;

(2) the Act entitled "An Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and eighty-five, and for other purposes", approved July 7, 1884 (23 Stat. 194, chapter 332) appropriated funds to cut dies and make appliances to make impressions for both the obverse and reverse sides of the seal, however, only a die for the obverse side was cut; and

(3) the will of the Continental Congress and the United States Congress to cut dies for the complete seal has never been fulfilled. There exists a die and appliances only for the obverse side of the seal.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of State shall cut a die and make appliances for making an impression of the reverse of the seal to complete the official Seal of the United States.

SEC. 4. Section 41 of title 4, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 41. Seal of the United States

"The obverse of the seal heretofore used by the United States in Congress assembled, together with the reverse of such seal as adopted in 1782 by the Continental Congress, is declared to be the seal of the United States."

SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

RESOLUTION HONORING U.S. OLYMPIC ATHLETES

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have a resolution in respect to the Olympic athletes which I send to the desk on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] and the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], and I ask that the resolution be placed directly on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is with great pride that I introduce a Senate joint resolution today honoring our Olympic athletes. As always, our Olympians are representing our country with excellence and determination. The Congress, through this resolution, shows them how proud we are of their performance in the 23d Olympiad.

From Athens, Greece, in 776 B.C. to the modern era, the Olympic tradition has been one of competition and human excellence. Although the spirit of the games has not changed drastically, the size and scope of the games have. In 1896, when the modern Olympic games were founded, only 10 nations and 285 athletes competed in the games. Today more than 100 nations send over 6,000 athletes to compete.

The Olympic creed accents the spirit that accompanies the games:

> The most important thing in the Olympic Games is not to win but to take part, just as the most important thing is not the triumph, but the struggle. The essential thing is not to have conquered, but to have fought well.

Athletes from every country have accomplished a dream even to participate in the games, and for that they should be proud.

Since the first modern Olympic games held in 1896, the United States has continued to perform exceptionally. In fact, the Olympic motto, "Citius, Altius, Fortius," which means, "swifter, higher, stronger," fits the U.S. team like no other. Up to the games in Los Angeles, we have accumulated more medals than any other country in the world, with a total of 1,625. Also, the United States holds the record for the most gold medals. This is an incredible feat and Americans everywhere should be proud.

Especially significant to this summer's Olympic games is their location. America's team is being given the opportunity to perform at home, it should prove to be a very memorable experience for both the athletes and for all Americans. We also must not forget America's performance in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia. Our athletes reached new levels of success in Sarajevo, winning more medals than at any other winter Olympic games.

Our athletes' spirit and excellence is a reflection of both their excellence and America's excellence. For this we should all be very proud and salute them.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I say to the minority leader that there are nominations on today's Executive Calendar that have been cleared for action on this side of the aisle. I inquire of the minority leader if they are matters that he is prepared to clear as well. If he will advise me of the ones he has cleared, we will see if we can propose a group of nominations that might be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on this side, the following nominations have been cleared for action: Calendar No. 913, on page 4 of the Executive Calendar; the nominations beginning with Calendar No. 915 on page 5, going throughout the remainder of that page; through all of page 6; through all of page 7; through all of page 8; through all of page 9, and through all of page 10.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering the nominations just identified by the minority leader.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first nomination will be stated.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are considered and confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the votes by which the nominations were confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Chirdon, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Acting President pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting a sundry nomination which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

(The nomination received today is printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 1 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives was delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5798), making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the executive office of the President, and certain independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. HOYER, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. LONG of Maryland, Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. MILLER of Ohio, Mr. RUDD, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. CONTE as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 6028. An act making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes.

H.R. 6040. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, without amendment.

Senate Joint Resolution 272. Joint resolution recognizing the anniversaries of the Warsaw uprising and the Polish resistance to invasion of Poland during World War II.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following measures were read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, without amendment:

S. 1249. A bill to add a representative of Indian tribal governments to the membership of the Advisory Commission of Intergovernmental Relations (Rept. No. 98-569).

By Mr. HATFIELD, from the Committee on Appropritions, with amendments:

H.R. 6040. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 98-570).

By Mr. DOLE, from the Committee on Finance, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

H.R. 4280. A bill to amend the Employee Retirement Income Securtiry Act of 1974 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to improve the delivery of retirement benefits and provide for greater equity under private pension plans for workers and their spouses and dependents by taking into account changes in work patterns, the status of marriage as an economic partnership, and the substantial contribution to that partnership of spouses who work both in and outside the home, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a technical explanation of H.R. 4280 as reported by the Committee on Finance be printed in the RECORD.

SENATOR DOLE

TECHNICAL EXPLANATION OF H.R. 4280, THE RETIREMENT EQUITY ACT OF 1984, AS AMENDED BY THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

I. SUMMARY

1. Periods of employee service taken into account under pension, profit-sharing, and stock bonus plans

Maximum age conditions.—The bill reduces from 25 to 21 the maximum age a pension, profit-sharing, or stock bonus plan (pension plan) generally can require an employee to attain as a condition of becoming a participant in the plan. Additionally, a plan is not permitted to ignore service after age 18 for purposes of determing the vested portion of a participant's benefit. The bill also makes changes to the maximum age conditions for employees of certain educational institutions.

Break in service rules.—The bill provides that, in the case of a nonvested participant, years of service with the employer or employers maintaining a pension plan before any period of consecutive 1-year breaks in service are required to be taken into account for participation and vesting purposes after a break in service unless the number of consecutive 1-year breaks in service equals or exceeds the greater of (1) 5 years or (2) the aggregate number of years of service before the consecutive breaks in service.

In addition, the bill provides that, in the case of a participant in certain plans, years of service after a break in service must be counted for purposes of determining the vested percentage of the participant's accrued benefit derived from employer contributions before the break in service unless the participant incurs at least 5 consecutive 1-year breaks in service.

Maternity and paternity leave.—The bill provides rules relating to crediting of service for cases in which an employee is absent from work because of maternity or paternity leave. Under the bill, certain hours of absence (up to 501 hours) on account of pregnancy, birth, adoption, or certain child care are taken into account in determining whether a break in service has occurred under the participation and vesting rules.

2. Survivor benefit requirements

Under the bill, a defined benefit or money purchase pension plan is required to provide automatic survivor benefits (1) in the case of a participant who retires under the plan, in the form of a qualified joint and survivor annuity, and (2) in the case of a vested participant who dies before the annuity starting date and who has a surviving spouse, in the form of a qualified preretirement survivor annuity. An exception is provided under the bill for a money purchase pension plan that is adopted as part of an employee stock ownership plan (ESOP). The automatic survivor benefit also applies to any participant under a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan unless (1) the participant does not elect benefits in the form on a life annuity, (2) the plan pays the full vested account balance to the participant's surviving spouse if the participant dies, and (3) the plan is not a direct or indirect transferee of a plan required to provide automatic survivor benefits.

Under the bill, a participant is to be given the opportunity to waive the qualified joint and survivor annuity and the qualified preretirement survivor annuity unless the plan fully subsidizes the cost of those benefits. In addition, an election to waive a qualified joint and survivor annuity or a qualified preretirement survivor annuity is not to be effective unless it is in writing and is signed by the participant and the participant's spouse.

The bill generally defines the period during which a participant may waive a survivor benefit (or revoke such a waiver) to mean (1) in the case of a qualified joint and survivor annuity, a period of time not to exceed 90 days before the annuity starting date; or (2) in the case of a qualified preretirement survivor annuity, a period beginning on the first day of the plan year in which the participant attains age 35 and ending on the date of the participant's death.

3. Assignment or alienation of benefits in divorce, etc., proceedings

In the case of a judgment, decree, or order relating to child support, alimony payments, or marital property rights pursuant to a State domestic relations law that meets certain requirements (a qualified domestic relations order), the bill clarifies that such order does not result in a prohibited assignment or alienation of benefits under the spendthrift provisions of the Code or ERISA. In addition, the bill provides that the general ERISA preemption rule does not apply to these qualified domestic relations orders.

The bill requires that a qualified domestic relations order identify the parties involved and provide specific instructions for determining the portion of plan benefits payable to an alternate payee (a spouse, former spouse, child, or other dependent) under the order. The bill requires that benefits under the order be in a form otherwise provided by the plan. The bill provides procedures to be followed by the plan administrator when the benefits payable under an order are in dispute.

4. Cash out of certain accrued benefits

Under the bill, a plan is treated as providing nonforfeitable benefits even if the plan provides for a cash out of a separated participant's benefit without the participant's consent if the present value of the benefit does not exceed $3,500. The limit under present law is $1,750. For purposes of determining the present value of the participant's benefit, the bill provides that a plan may not use an interest rate that is greater than the rate used by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC) for valuing a lump sum distribution upon plan termination.

5. Notice of forfeitability of benefits

Present law requires that a plan furnish a participant with a statement of benefits under certain circumstances. The bill requires that the statement include a notice that certain benefits may be forfeitable in the event the participant dies before a particular date.

6. Notice of rollover treatment

Under present law, a plan administrator is not required to notify a plan participant receiving a qualifying rollover distribution that the distribution may be rolled over, tax-free, within 60 days after the date of the distribution. The bill requires the plan administrator to provide notice to participants and beneficiaries that distributions may be eligible for (1) rollover to an IRA or another qualified plan or (2) 10-year income averaging. The Secretary of the Treasury is to develop officially approved notices that may be used to satisfy this requirement.

7. Reduction of accrued benefits

Under present law, a pension plan must provide definitely determinable benefits. A pension plan may not be amended to reduce previously accrued benefits. The bill includes provisions relating to the permitted effect of plan amendments with respect to previously accrued benefits.

8. Study by the General Accounting Office

The bill directs the General Accounting Office (GAO) to conduct a detailed study of the effect on women of the rules relating to pension, profit-sharing, and stock bonus plans. The results of this study are to be reported to various committees of the Congress no later than January 1, 1990.

9. Effective dates

The provisions of the bill generally are effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1984. In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements ratified by the date of enactment between employee representatives and one or more employers, the provisions are generally not effective for plan years beginning before the earlier of (1) the date on which the last of the collective bargaining agreements relating to the plan terminates (determined without regard to any extension agreed to after the date of enactment) or (2) January 1, 1987. Special effective dates apply with respect to the qualified survivor benefit provisions and with respect to reductions of accrued benefits.

II. EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

A. Periods of Employee Service Taken Into Account Under Pension, Profit-Sharing, and Stock Bonus Plans (Secs. 102 and 202 of the bill, secs. 202 and 203 of ERISA, and secs. 410 and 411 of the Code)

Present Law

Minimum participation, vesting, and benefit accrual requirements

In general

If a pension, profit-sharing or stock bonus plan qualifies under the tax law ("qualified plan"),[1] then (1) a trust under the plan generally is exempt from income tax, (2) employers generally are allowed deductions (within limits) for plan contributions for the year for which the contributions are made even though participants are not taxed on plan benefits until the benefits are distributed, (3) benefits distributed as a lump sum distribution are accorded special long-term capital gain or 10-year averaging treatment, or may be rolled over, tax-free, to an individual retirement account (IRA) or to another qualified plan, and (4) limited estate and gift tax exclusions may be available.

Under a pension, profit-sharing, or stock bonus plan ("pension plan") benefits are provided to participants under plan formulas that determine the amount of the benefit a participant may earn, the portion of that benefit that has been earned, and the portion of the earned benefit that is vested or nonforfeitable. Accordingly, plans provide rules for determining whether an employee is a plan participant (the employee participation rules), for measuring benefits (the benefit formula), for determining the portion of the benefit that has been earned (the benefit accrual rules), and for determining the vested percentage of a participant's accrued benefit (the vesting schedule). If a joint and survivor benefit is not provided and the participant dies before payment of benefits commences, the participant's surviving spouse may not be eligible to receive benefits under the plan.

Under present law, a pension plan must satisfy certain minimum standards relating to the conditions under which employees may be excluded from plan participation, to the method under which plan benefits are accrued, and to the vesting schedule. The participation standards limit the permissible exclusions based on the age and period of service completed by an employees.[2] The benefit accrual standards are based upon the number of years of plan participation. The vesting schedule standards are generally based upon the number of years of service with the employer that the employee has completed.

Participation

Under present law,[3] a pension plan generally may not require an employee to complete more than one year of service or attain an age greater than 25 as a condition of plan participation.[4] Employees of certain educational institutions may be excluded from plan participation up to age 30 under present law.

For purposes of the participation requirements, the term "year of service" generally means a consecutive 12-month period during which an employee has worked at least 1,000 hours.[5] The first 12-month period is [1] Sec. 401(a) or 403(a) of the Code.

[2] In addition, the Code provides minimum coverage rules for qualified pension plans. These rules are designed to require that qualified pension plans provide participation to a minimum percentage of employees or to a broad cross-section of employees.

[3] Sec. 410(a) of the Code.

[4] Accordingly, an employee generally may not be excluded from plan participation on the basis of length of service if the employee has completed one year of service and generally may not be excluded on the basis of age if the employee has attained age 25. An employee who has completed one year of service and who has attained age 25 may, however, be excluded from plan participation on other grounds (for example, a plan may be limited to employees within a particular job classification).

[5] Sec. 410(a)(3) of the Code.

measured from the date the employee begins service with the employer (or, under certain circumstances, a predecessor employer). Accordingly, an employee has fulfilled the year of service requirement if at least 1,000 hours of service are completed by the first anniversary date of employment. Later 12-month periods may be based on the plan year.

Vesting

The rules for pension plans generally require that a plan meet one of three alternative minimum vesting schedules.[6] Under these schedules, an employee's right to accrued benefits derived from employer contributions become nonforfeitable (vest) to varying degrees upon completion of specified periods of service with an employer (or, under certain circumstances, a predecessor employer). An employee's right to benefits derived from employee contributions is immediately nonforfeitable.

Under one of the minimum schedules, full vesting is required upon completion of 10 years of service (no vesting is required before the end of the 10th year.[7] Under a second schedule, vesting begins at 25 percent after completion of 5 years of service and increases gradually to 100 percent after completion of 15 years of service.[8] Under these two vesting schedules, all years of service with the employer maintaining the plan after attainment of age 22 generally must be taken into account for purposes of determining an employee's vested percentage. The third schedule takes both age and service into account, but in any event requires 50 percent vesting after 10 years of service and an additional 10 percent vesting for each year thereafter until 100 percent vesting is attained after 15 years of service.[9] Under this schedule, all years of service with the employer (including years of service prior to age 22) must be taken into account for purposes of determining an employee's vested percentage if, during those years, the employee participated in the plan. A faster vesting schedule is required if the employer maintains a qualified plan that is a top-heavy plan.[10]

Under present law, certain forfeitures of vested benefits are permitted. Thus, a right to an accrued benefit derived from employer contributions is not treated as forfeitable merely because the plan does not pay benefits after the participant dies (other than the payment of a survivor benefit required under the qualified joint and survivor annuity rules).

Break in service rules

In general, all years of service with the employer maintaining a pension plan are taken into account for purposes of the minimum participation requirements. No credit need be provided, however, for periods during which an employee is considered to have a break in service. In some cases, an employee who returns to work for an employer after a break in service may lose credit for pre-break service.

A plan may provide that a 1-year break in service occurs in a 12-month measuring period in which the employee does not complete more than 500 hours of service.[11] If an employee has incurred a 1-year break in service, the plan may require a 1-year waiting period before reentry. Upon reentry, the employee's pre-break and post-break service generally are required to be aggregated, and the employee is required to receive full credit for the reentry waiting period service if any part of the employee's benefit derived from employer contributions was vested or if the number of 1-year breaks in service is less than the number of years of service completed before the break (the "rule of parity").[12] A plan may provide that an employee who completes more than 500 hours of service but fewer than 1,000 hours of service has neither a 1-year break in service nor a year of service for participation purposes.

Break in service rules also apply under the vesting rules. The break in service rules applicable in determining the number of years of service taken into account for vesting purposes under a defined benefit plan[13] are similar to the break in service rules that apply for plan participation purposes. A special break in service rule applies for purposes of the vesting rules in the case of a defined contribution plan.[14] Post-break service need not be taken into account under such a plan in determining the nonforfeitable percentage for employer contributions made before the break in service.[15]

Benefit accruals

Present law[16] requires that a participant in a defined benefit pension plan accrue (earn) the normal retirement benefit provided by the plan at certain minimum rates. The acrual rules are designed to limit backloading of benefit accruals as a technique to avoid the minimum vesting standards. Under a backloaded accrual schedule, a larger portion of the benefit is earned each year in later years of service. Accordingly, under a plan with backloaded accruals, an employee who separates from service before reaching retirement age earns a disproportionately lower share of the benefit.

Maternity or paternity leave

For purposes of the minimum participation, vesting, and benefit accrual requirements, a pension plan is not required to give an employee credit for periods of time during which the employee is not compensated for maternity or paternity leave. A pension plan generally is required to credit sufficient hours, up to 501 hours of service for participation and vesting purposes for paid maternity or paternity leave in order to prevent a break in service.

Reasons for change

The committee recognizes that the rules of present law relating to the maximum age conditions and years of service counted for vesting service tend to disadvantage women workers. In addition, the present law break in service rules often make it difficult for an individual to take an adequate leave of absence from work on account of the birth or adoption of a child without loss of credit for participation and vesting purposes under the employer's qualified plan.

Explanation of provisions

Maximum age conditions

The bill provides that a pension plan may not require, as a condition of participation, completion of more than one year of service or attainment of an age greater than 21 (whichever occurs later).[17] The reduction in the maximum participation age further limits the extent of backloading of benefit accruals.

Under the bill, a plan is not permitted to ignore, for purposes of the minimum vesting requirements, an employee's years of service completed after the employee has attained age 18.

Break in service rules

The bill provides that, in the case of a nonvested participant, years of service with the employer or employers maintaining the plan before any period of consecutive 1-year breaks in service are required to be taken into account after a break in service unless the number of consecutive 1-year breaks in service equals or exceeds the greater of (1) 5 years or (2) the aggregate number of years of service before the consecutive 1-year breaks in service. As under present law, if any years of service are not required to be taken into account by reason of a period of breaks in service under this rule, then those years of service are not required to be taken into account under the bill if there is a subsequent break in service. This "rule of parity" is applicable for participation and vesting purposes.

For example, if a nonvested participant with 3 years of service under a plan terminates employment and incurs a consecutive 1-year breaks in service, the plan generally is not permitted to disregard the participant's 3 years of service for either participation or vesting purposes upon the participant's resumption of employment with the employer. On the other hand, if the participant incurs 5 consecutive 1-year breaks in service under this example, the plan could disregard the years of service prior to the break in service.

In addition, the bill provides that, in the case of a participant in a defined contribution plan or in a defined benefit pension plan funded solely by insurance contracts, years of service after a break in service are counted for purposes of determining the vested percentage of the participant's accrued benefit derived from employer contributions before the break in service unless the participant incurs at least 5 consecutive 1-year breaks in service. Under the bill, a conforming change is made to the rules relating to the cash out of accrued benefits.

Maternity or paternity leave

Under the bill, for purposes of determining whether a break in service has occurred for participation and vesting purposes, an individual is deemed to have completed hours of service during certain periods of absence from work. This rule applies to an individual who is absent from work (1) by reason of the pregnancy of the individual, (2) by reason of the birth of a child of the individual, (3) by reason of the placement of a child in connection with the adoption of the child by the individual, or (4) for purposes of caring for the child during the period immediately following the birth or placement for adoption.

The committee intends that an individual will qualify for this maternity or paternity leave credit if a child is placed with the individual for a trial period prior to adoption. No credit need be given, however, merely by reason of the placement of a child in a foster home.

During the period of absence, the individual is treated as having completed (1) the number of hours that normally would have been credited out for the absence, or (2) if the normal work hours are unknown, eight hours of service for each normal workday during the leave (whether or not approved). The total number of hours of service required to be treated as completed under the bill is 501 hours.

The hours of service required to be credited under the bill must be credited only (1) in the year in which the absence begins for one of the permitted reasons if the crediting is necessary to prevent a break in service in that year, or (2) in the following year. For example, an individual who completes at least 501 hours during a year before leaving employment by reason of pregnancy or who is otherwise entitled to credit for up to 501 hours during the year is entitled to credit of up to 501 hours in the next year, because such credit is not needed in the year in which the absence begins.

Under the bill, an individual is not entitled to credit for maternity or paternity leave unless the absence from work is for one of the permitted reasons. For example, suppose that an individual was absent from work on account of a layoff, gave birth to a child two years after the layoff began, and was not recalled to work. Under these circumstances, the individual is not entitled to credit for maternity or paternity leave because the absence from work was not for one of the permitted reasons. On the other hand, if the employer had recalled the individual immediately prior to the birth of the child, the individual would be entitled to credit for maternity or paternity leave.

An employer may require, as a condition of providing credit for the hours required under this rule, that the individual certify to the employer that the leave was taken for the permitted reasons. This certification could be required to include, for example, a statement from a doctor that the leave was taken by reason of the birth of a child of the individual. In addition, the employer may require that the individual supply information relating to the number of normal work-days for which there was an absence. The committee intends that credit will not be denied for failure to supply any required information if the plan administrator has access to the relevant information without regard to whether the participant submits it.

Under the bill, hours credited under these rules for maternity or paternity leave are not required to be taken into account for purposes of determining a participant's year of participation under the benefit accrual rules.

Effective dates

The service-counting provisions generally are effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1984. In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements ratified before the date of enactment between employee representatives and one or more employers, the provisions are not effective for plan years beginning before the earlier of (1) the date on which the last of the collective bargaining agreements relating to the plan terminates (determined without regard to any extension agreed to after the date of enactment) or (2) January 1, 1987.

The provisions of the bill relating to the maximum age conditions do not apply retroactively. Thus, for example, if an employee with 3 years of service is age 24 on the effective date, the employee is to immediately become a participant in the pension plan, but need not be given credit, for benefit accrual purposes, for the prior years of service. The provisions of the bill relating to the age at which years of service must be counted for vesting purposes is effective for participants who have at least an hour of service on or after the effective date. Thus, in the above example, the employee would be credited with three years of service for vesting purposes (from age 21) on becoming a participant.

With respect to the maternity or paternity leave provision, if a plan credits hours of service in accordance with the requirements of the provision for plan years beginning after the effective date, of the provision for the plan (without regard to whether the plan has been amended), the plan (1) need not be amended to meet the requirements of the provision until the plan is first otherwise amended after the effective date and (2) does not fail to provide definitely determinable benefits (within the meaning of the tax qualification rules for pension plans under the Internal Revenue Code) merely because the plan provides the required credit for maternity or paternity leave not specified in the plan.

B. Survivor Benefit Requirements (Secs. 103 and 203 of the bill, secs. 205 and 206 of ERISA, and secs. 401 and 417 of the Code)

Under present law,[18] if the normal form of benefits under a pension plan is a life annuity or if a participant elects benefits in the form of a life annuity under a plan and the participant is married for the 1-year period ending on the date the annuity payments begin, the benefit is to be paid in the form of a qualified joint and survivor annuity unless the participant elects an annuity in another form.[19] A joint and survivor annuity provides benefits for the joint lives of the participant and another individual and, after the death of either, provides a benefit for the life of the survivor. Under a qualified joint and survivor annuity, benefits are payable for the joint lives of the participant and the participant's spouse and, if the spouse survives the participant, the survivor benefit to the spouse may not be less than one-half of the benefits payable during the joint lives of the couple.

In the case of a participant who is eligible to retire before the normal retirement age under the plan, and who has not retired, the participant is eligible to elect an early survivor annuity benefit. This benefit is not required to be provided, however, unless the participant affirmatively elects benefits in this form. Thus, under present law, if the plan provides that no benefits will be paid with respect to a participant who dies while still employed but after attaining the plan's early retirement age, the plan need not provide a survivor annuity to the participant's spouse unless the participant, prior to death, made an affirmative election with respect to the survivor annuity. Moreover, the plan need not make this survivor annuity option available until the later of the time the employee attains the earliest retirement age under the plan or is within 10 years of normal retirement age (whichever is late).

The employee is to be afforded a reasonable opportunity to elect not to receive a qualified joint and survivor benefit before benefit payments begin. This election is effective without regard to whether the participant's spouse consents to the election. A plan may provide that any election, or revocation of an election, with respect to joint and survivor benefits is not effective if the participant dies within a period of time (not in excess of two years) after making the election or revocation (except in the case of accidental death if the accident that causes death occurs after the election).

The Internal Revenue Service has issued regulations interpreting the joint and survivor annuity rules to provide that a plan need not provide a survivor annuity to a surviving spouse if the spouse was not married to the participant for at least the one-year period before the date of death.[20]

Reasons for change

The committee believes that present law results in inequitable treatment of participants in pension plans who die before reaching the normal retirement age under the employer's plan. Under the rules of present law, the participant's spouse may be entitled to no survivor benefits under the plan even though the participant had accrued significant vested benefits before death. Therefore, the committee believes that it is appropriate to provide automatic survivor benefits to the spouses of vested participants.

In addition, because the committee believes that a spouse should be involved in making choices with respect to retirement income on which the spouse may also rely, the bill requires spousal consent when a participant elects not to take a survivor benefit.

Explanation of provision

In general

Under the bill, a pension plan is to provide automatic survivor benefits (1) in the case of a participant who retires under the plan, in the form of a qualified joint and survivor annuity and (2) in the case of a vested participant who dies before the annuity starting date (the first period for which an amount is received as an annuity (whether by reason of death or disability) under the plan) and who has a surviving spouse, in the form of a qualified preretirement survivor annuity. A vested participant is any participant (whether or not still employed by the employer) who has a nonforfeitable right to any portion of the accrued benefit derived from employer contributions.

The provisions of the bill requiring automatic survivor benefits apply to any pension plan. An exception is provided, however, for a participant under a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan if (1) the plan provides that the nonforfeitable accrued benefits will be paid to the surviving spouse of the participant (or to another beneficiary if the surviving spouse consents or if there is no surviving spouse) if the participant dies, (2) under a plan that offer a life annuity, the participant does not elect payment of benefits in the form of a life annuity, and (3) with respect to the participant, the plan is not a direct or indirect transferee of a plan required to provide automatic survivor benefits. A plan is a transferee of a plan required to provide automatic survivor benefits if the plan (1) receives a direct transfer of assets in connection with a merger, spinoff or conversion of a plan or (2) receives a direct transfer of assets solely with respect to the participant. Also, a plan is a transferee if it receives amounts from a plan that is a transferee. As under present law, the cost of survivor benefit coverage may be imposed on the participant or beneficiary.

Under the bill, an exception to the application of the rules relating to joint and survivor benefits is provided in the case of certain employee stock ownership plans (ESOPs) for the portion of an employee's accrued benefit that is subject to the requirements of section 409(h) of the Code. This exception applies only if the requirements applicable to profit-sharing and stock bonus plans are also met.

Qualified joint and survivor annuity and qualified preretirement survivor annuity

Under the bill, a qualified joint and survivor annuity is an annuity for the life of the participant with a survivor annuity for the life of the spouse that is not less than 50 percent (and not greater than 100 percent) of the amount that is (1) payable during the joint lives of the participant and the spouse, and (2) the actuarial equivalent of a single life annuity for the life of the participant. A qualified joint and survivor annuity also includes an annuity having the effect of a qualified joint and survivor annuity, which is defined as a benefit at least the actuarial equivalent of the normal form of life annuity or, if greater, any optional form of life annuity. Equivalence may be determined on the basis of consistency applied reasonable actuarial factors if such determination does not result in discrimination in favor of employees who are officers, shareholders, or highly compensated.

The bill defines a qualified preretirement survivor annuity as an annuity for the life of the surviving spouse of the participant. The amount of the payments under a qualified preretirement survivor annuity is not to be less than the payments that would have been made under the qualified joint and survivor annuity if (1) in the case of a participant who dies after attaining the earliest retirement age under the plan, the participant had retired with an immediate qualified, joint and survivor annuity on the day before the participant's death, and (2) in the case of a participant who dies on or before the earliest retirement age under the plan, the participant had separated from service on the date of death, survived until the earliest retirement age, and retired at that time with a qualified joint and survivor annuity. In the case of a defined contribution plan, the payments under a qualified preretirement survivor annuity are not to be less than the payments under a single life annunity, the present value of which is at least equal to 50 percent of the participant's account balance on the date of death. Under the bill, the plan is not to prohibit the commencement of the qualified preretirement survivor annuity to the surviving spouse later than the month in which the participant would have reached the earliest retirement age under the plan. If the surviving spouse wishes to delay commencement of benefit payments until a later date and the present value of the benefit is more than $3,500 at the earliest retirement date, then the plan cannot require that benefit payments commence at the participant's earliest retirement age. Of course, the incidental benefit rule of present law is required to be satisfied with respect to the preretirement survivor benefit.

Election and notice procedures

Under the bill, a participant is to be given the opportunity to waive the qualified joint and survivor annuity and qualified preretirement survivor annuity during the applicable election period. In addition, the participant is permitted to revoke any waiver during the applicable election period. The bill does not limit the number of times a participant may waive a survivor benefit or revoke a waiver.

The bill provides that the consent of a participant's spouse is required for an election to decline the qualified joint and survivor annuity and the qualified preretirement survivor annuity. This consent is to be given in writing at the time of the participant's election, and the consent is to acknowledge the effect of the election. A consent is not valid unless it is witnessed by a plan representative or a notary public. Any consent obtained is effective only with respect to the spouse who signs it.

The requirement that the consent of the spouse be obtained may be waived if it is established to the satisfaction of a plan representative that the consent required cannot be obtained because there is no spouse, because the spouse cannot be located, or because of other circumstances that the Secretary of the Treasury prescribes by regulation.

If the plan administrator acts in accordance with the fiduciary standards of ERISA in securing spousal consent or in accepting the representations of the participant that the spouse's consent cannot be obtained, then the plan will not be liable for payments to the surviving spouse. For example, if the plan administrator receives a notarized spousal consent, valid on its face, which the administrator has no reason to believe is invalid, the plan would certainly be allowed to rely on the consent even if it is, in fact, invalid. In addition, if a third-party payor relies on a consent obtained or determination made by the plan administrator who acts in accordance with the fiduciary standards, or if a third party payor acting in accordance with such standards (whether or not the payor is a plan fiduciary under ERISA) establishes that consent cannot be obtained, then the payor will be relieved of any liability for payments to the surviving spouse.

As under present law, the plan is required to provide to the participant, within a reasonable period of time before the annuity starting date, a written explanation of (1) the terms and conditions of the qualified joint and survivor annuity, (2) the participant's right to make, and the effect of, an election to waive the qualified joint and survivor annuity, (3) the rights of the participant's spouse, and (4) the right to revoke an election and the effect of such a revocation. In addition, the committee intends that plans will provide to participants notification of their rights to decline a qualified preretirement survivor annuity before the applicable election period. This notice is to be provided within the period beginning on the first day of the plan year in which the participant attains age 32 and ending with the close of the plan year in which the participant attains age 35. This notice is to be comparable to the notice required with respect to the qualified joint and survivor annuity. Of course, the preretirement survivor benefit coverage may become automatic prior to the time that the participant is entitled to decline such coverage.

Under the bill, a plan is not required to provide notice of the right to waive the qualified joint and survivor annuity or the qualified preretirement survivor annuity if the plan fully subsidizes the cost of the benefit. A plan fully subsidizes the costs of a benefit only if the failure to waive the benefit by a plan participant does not result in either (1) a decrease in any plan benefits with respect to the participant, or (2) in increased plan contributions by the participant. A plan that provides for no employee contributions and does not require employee contributions if the participant does not waive any survivor benefits is treated as not requiring increased plan contributions by the participant. A plan may fully subsidize the cost of the qualified joint and survivor annuity, the qualified preretirement survivor annuity, or both.

The bill defines the applicable election period to mean (1) in the case of a qualified joint and survivor annuity, a period of time not exceeding 90 days before the annuity starting date or (2) in the case of a qualified preretirement survivor annuity, a period beginning on the first day of the plan year in which the participant attains age 35 and ending on the date of the participant's death. If a participant separates from service, the applicable election period begins on that date with respect to benefits accrued before the separation from service. For example, if a participant who is age 30 separates from service with vested, accrued benefits of $4,000, the participant is permitted to waive the qualified preretirement survivor annuity with respect to the benefits of $4,000 at the time of separation from service. If the participant returns to service at age 32, the applicable election period with respect to benefits accrued after the participant returns does not begin until the first day of the plan year in which the participant attains age 35. Thus, the participant will have automatic survivor coverage during the period from age 32 to 35 with respect to the vested benefits accrued during that period, without regard to whether the participant wavied the coverage with respect to the pre-separation accrued benefits. At age 35, the participant may waive any preretirement survivor annunity coverage. Of course, a waiver made by a participant or by a participant and spouse is not valid with respect to a future spouse.

Special rules

The bill provides that a qualified joint and survivor annuity is not required to be provided by a plan unless the participant and spouse have been married throughout the one-year period ending on the earlier of (1) the participant's annuity starting date (the first day of the first period for which an amount is received as an annuity (whether by reason of retirement or disability)), or (2) the date of the participant's death. If a participant dies after the annuity starting date, the spouse to whom the participant was married during the one-year period ending on the annuity starting date is entitled to the survivor annuity under the plan whether or not the participant and spouse are married on the date of the participant's death. This rule does not apply, however, if a qualified domestic relations order (see C. below) otherwise provides for the division or payment of the participant's retirement benefits. For example, a qualified domestic relations order could provide that the former spouse is not entitled to any survivor benefits under the plan.

Under the bill, an exception to the one-year marriage requirement is provided if a participant marries within one year before the annuity starting date and the participant has been married to that spouse for at least one year ending on the date of the participant's death. The committee recognizes that this exception may create administrative burdens for a plan in cases in which the participant has not been married for one year before the payment of benefits commence. The committee intends that the plan may require a participant to notify the plan when the participant has been married for one year so that the plan administrator may alter the form of benefit payments to reflect the qualified joint and survivor annuity if the participant and spouse do not waive it.

If a former spouse of a participant is entitled to receive a portion of the participant's benefit under a qualified domestic relations order, the qualified joint and survivor annuity and qualified preretirement survivor annuity requirements do not apply unless they are consistent with the order. A plan is not required to provide a qualified joint and survivor annuity or a qualified preretirement survivor annuity to the spouse of a participant's former spouse.

The bill provides that a plan may immediately distribute the present value of the benefit under either the qualified joint and survivor annuity or the qualified preretirement survivor annuity if the present value of the benefit does not exceed $3,500. No distribution may be made after the annuity starting date unless the participant and the participant's spouse (or the surviving spouse of the participant) consent in writing to the distribution.

In addition under the bill, if the present value of the benefit under the qualified joint and survivor annuity or the qualified preretirement survivior annuity exceeds $3,500, the participant and spouse (or the surviving spouse if the participant has died) must consent in writing before the plan can immediately distribute the present value. For purposes of calculating the present value of a benefit as of the date of the distribution, the plan is required to use an interest rate no greater than the rate used by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corportion (PBGC) in valuing a lump sum distribution plan termination. The committee intends that the PBGC rate in effect at the beginning of a plan year may be used throughout the plan year if the plan so provides.

The bill repeals the two-year nonaccidental death rule of present law. Thus, a plan may not provide that any election or revocation of an election does not take effect if (1) the participant dies within a period not in excess of two years beginning on the date of the election or revocation, and (2) the death of the participant is not due to an accident that occurred after the election or revocation.

Consultation with the Secretary of Labor

Under the bill, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to consult with the Secretary of Labor in prescribing regulations under these provisions.

Effective dates

The qualified joint and survivor annuity and qualified preretirement survivor annuity provisions are effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1984. In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements ratified by the date of enactment between employee representatives and one or more employers, the provisions are not effective for plan years beginning before the earlier of (1) the date on which the last of the collective bargaining agreements relating to the plan terminates (determined without regard to any extension agreed to after the date of enactment) or (2) January 1, 1987. The spousal consent provision is effective for elections (or revocations of elections) made on or after January 1, 1985.

The qualified joint and survivor and preretirement survivor annuity provisions apply to any participant who performs at least one hour of service under the plan on or after the date of enactment. In addition, a qualified preretirement survivor annuity must be provided (unless another form of benefit is elected) in the case of any participant who (1) performs at least one hour of service under the plan after the date of enactment, (2) dies before the annuity starting date, and (3) dies between the date of enactment and the effective date.

The bill provides a special transition rule for participants who separated from service before the date of enactment and whose benefits are not in pay status as of the date of enactment. This special transition rule only applies in the case of a plan (or successor plan) that is in existence at any time on or after the date of enactment. Under the bill, if (1) such participant completed at least 1 hour of service under the plan after September 1, 1974, (2) separated from service before the first day of the first plan year beginning on or after January 1, 1976, and (3) the plan is required to provide a qualified joint and survivor annuity, then the participant is to be provided the right to elect to receive benefits in the form of a qualified joint and survivor annuity (as defined by ERISA and the Code before the date of enactment of the bill). For example, an election or revocation can be made by the participant without the consent of the participant's spouse because the Code did not require the consent of the participant's spouse.

The bill also provides a special transition rule for participants who separated from service before the date of enactment but after December 31, 1975, and whose benefits are not in pay status as of the date of enactment. This special transition rule only applies in the case of a plan (or a successor plan) that is in existence at any time on or after the date of enactment. Under the bill, if such participant (1) completes at least 1 hour of service in the first plan year beginning after December 31, 1975, (2) has completed at least 10 years of service under the plan, (3) has a nonforfeitable right to all or any portion of the accrued benefit under the plan derived from employer contributions, and (4) did not complete at least 1 hour of service after the date of enactment of the bill, then the participant may elect a qualified preretirement survivor annuity as provided by the bill. The bill provides that the election may be made by a participant after the date of enactment of the bill and before the earlier of the participant's annuity starting date and the date of the participant's death.

Under the special transition rules of the bill for qualified joint and survivor annuities and qualified preretirement survivor annuities, a plan is not to be required to provide a qualified joint and survivor annuity or a qualified preretirement survivor annuity with respect to a participant unless the plan has received the participant's election of such a benefit. The bill provides that a notice of the right to make such an election is to be provided by the plan in such manner and at such time (or times) as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The committee intends that a plan will not be treated as having failed to give adequate notice if notice is mailed to the last known address of a participant with the first summary annual report sent after the effective date. In addition, the committee intends that plans are to provide notice after the effective date of the right to elect a qualified joint and survivor annuity at the time a participant applies for benefit payments. The bill provides a penalty for failure to provide the notice. In addition, the bill directs the Secretary of Labor to provide public service announcements informing participants of these transition features.

Under the bill, of course, the benefits provided with respect to a participant who has elected a qualified joint and survivor benefit or a qualified preretirement survivor annuity under either of the transition rules may be actuarially reduced to reflect the cost of the survivor protection.

C. Assignment or Alienation of Benefits in Divorce, Etc., Distributions (Secs. 104 and 204 of the bill, sec. 206 of ERISA, and secs. 401 and 414 of the Code)

Present law

Generally, under present law, benefits under a pension, profit-sharing, or stock bonus plan (pension plan) are subject to prohibitions against assignment or alienation (spendthrift provisions.) Under present law,[21] certain provisions of ERISA supersede (preempt) State laws relating to pension, etc., plans. A plan that does not include these required spendthrift provisions is not a qualified plan under the Code, and State law permitting such an assignment or alienation is generally preempted by ERISA.

Several cases have arisen in which courts have been required to determine whether the ERISA preemption and spendthrift provisions apply to family support obligations (e.g., alimony, separate maintenance, and child support obligations). In some of these cases, the courts have held that ERISA was not intended to preempt State domestic relations law permitting the attachment of vested benefits for the purpose of meeting these obligations.[22] Some courts have held that the ERISA preemption provision does not prevent application of State law permitting attachment of nonvested benefits for the purpose of meeting family support obligations.[23] There is a divergence of opinion among the courts as to whether ERISA preempts State community property laws insofar as they relate to the rights of a married couple to benefits under a pension, etc., plan.[24]

[24] In Stone v. Stone, 633 F.2d 740 (9th Cir. 1980), the court held that ERISA was not intended to preempt community property laws and that a court order requiring a division of retirement benefits did not violate the anti-assignment provisions. In Francis v. United Technology Corp. 458 F.Supp. 84 (N.D. Cal. 1978), however, the court held that ERISA's preemption provision prevents the application of State community property law permitting attachments of plan benefits for family support purposes.

The IRS has ruled that the spendthrift provisions are not violated when a plan trustee complies with a court order requiring the distribution of benefits of a participant in pay status to the participant's spouse or children in order to meet the participant's alimony or child support obligations.[25] The IRS has not taken any position with respect to this issue in cases in which the participant's benefits are not in pay status.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the spendthrift rules and should be clarified by creating a limited exception that permits benefits under a pension, etc., plan to be divided under certain circumstances. In order to provide rational rules for plan administrators, the committee believes it is necessary to establish guidelines for determining whether the exception to the spendthrift rules applies. In addition, the committee believes that conforming changes to the ERISA preemption provision are necessary to ensure that only those orders that are excepted from the spendthrift provisions are not preempted by ERISA.

Explanation of provision

In general

The bill clarifies the spendthrift provisions by providing new rules for the treatment of certain domestic relations orders. In addition, the bill creates an exception to the ERISA preemption provision with respect to these orders. The bill also provides procedures to be followed by a plan administrator (including the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC)) and an alternate payee (a child, spouse, former spouse, or other dependent of a participant) with respect to domestic relations orders.

Under the bill, if a domestic relations order requires the distribution of all or a part of a participant's benefits under a qualified plan to an alternate payee, then the creation, recognition, or assignment of the alternate payee's right to the benefits is not considered an assignment or alienation of benefits under the plan if and only if the order is a qualified domestic relations order. Because rights created, recognized, or assigned by a qualified domestic relations order, and benefit payments pursuant to such an order, are specifically permitted under the bill, State law providing for these rights and payments under a qualified domestic relations order will continue to be exempt from Federal preemption under ERISA.

Qualified domestic relations order

Under the bill, the term "qualified domestic relations order" means a domestic relations order that (1) creates or recognizes the existence of an alternate payee's right to, or assigns to an alternate payee the right to, receive all or a portion of the benefits payable with respect to a participant under a pension plan, and (2) meets certain other requirements. A domestic relations order is any judgment, decree, or order (including approval of a property settlement agreement) that relates to the provision of child support, alimony payments, or marital property rights to a spouse, former spouse, child, or other dependent of the participant, and is made pursuant to a State domestic relations law (including community property law). Under the bill, an alternate payee includes any spouse, former spouse, child, or other dependent of a participant who is recognized by a qualified domestic relations order as having a right to receive all, or a portion of, the benefits payable under a plan with respect to the participant.

To be a qualified order, a domestic relations order must clearly specify (1) the name and last known mailing address (if available) of the participant and the name and mailing address of each alternate payee to which the order relates, (2) the amount or percentage of the participant's benefits to be paid to an alternate payee or the manner in which the amount is to be determined, and (3) the number of payments or period for which payments are required. The committee intends that an order will not be treated as failing to be a qualified order merely because the order does not specify the current mailing address of the participant and alternate payee if the plan administrator has reason to know that address independently of the order. For example, if the plan administrator is aware that the alternate payee is also a participant under the plan and the plan records include a current address for each participant, the plan administrator may not treat the order as failing to qualify.

The committee intends that an order that is qualified is to remain qualified with respect to a successor plan of the same employer or a plan of a successor employer (within the meaning of sec. 414(a)).

A domestic relations order is not a qualified order if it (1) requires a plan to provide any type or form of benefit, or any option, not otherwise provided under the plan, (2) requires the plan to provide increased benefits, or (3) requires payment of benefits to an alternate payee that are required to be paid to another alternate payee under a previously existing qualified domestic relations order. An order does not require a plan to provide increased benefits if the order does not provide for the payment of benefits in excess of the benefits to which the participant would be entitled in the absence of the order.

The bill provides that a domestic relations order is not treated as failing the requirements for a qualified domestic relations order merely because the order provides that payments must begin to the alternate payee on or after the date on which the participant attains the earliest retirement age under the plan whether or not the participant actually retires on the date. If the participant dies before that date, the alternate payee is entitled to benefits only if the qualified domestic relations order requires survivor benefits to be paid. In the case of an order providing for the payment of benefits after the earliest retirement age, the payments to the alternate payee at that time are computed as if the participant had retired on the date on which benefit payments commence under the order.

When payments are made to an alternate payeee before the participant retires, the payments are computed by taking into account only benefits actually accrued and not taking into account any employer subsidy for early retirement. The amount of be paid to the alternate payee is to be calculated by using the participant's normal retirement benefit accrued as of the date payout begins and by actuarially reducing such benefit based on the interest rate specified in the plan or 5 percent, if the plan does not specify an interest rate. A plan providing only normal and subsidized early retirement benefits would not specify a rate for determining actuarially equivalent, unsubsidized benefits.

If an alternative payee begins to receive benefits under the order and the participant subsequently retires with subsidized early retirement benefits, the order may specify that the amount payable to the alternate payee is to be recalculated so that the alternate payee also receives a share of the subsidized benefit to which the participant is entitled. The payment of early retirement benefits with respect to a participant who has not yet retired or the increase in benefits payable to the alternate payee after the recalculation is not to be considered to violate the prohibition against a qualified domestic relations orders providing for increased benefits.

The payments to the alternate payee after the earliest retirement date may be paid in any form permitted under the plan (other than a joint and survivor annuity with respect to the alternate payee and the alternate payee's spouse). In the case of a defined contribution plan, the earliest retirement date is the date on which the participant attains an age that is 10 years before the normal retirement age.

Under the bill, a plan is not treated as failing to satisfy the requirements of section 401(a), 409(d), or 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code that prohibit payment of benefits prior to termination of employment solely because the plan makes payments to the alternate payee in accordance with a qualified domestic relations order.

Under the bill, an alternate payee is treated as a beneficiary for all purposes under the plan. In no event, however, will more than one PBGC premium be collected with respect to the participant's benefits (determined as if a qualified domestic relations order had not been issued) even though such benefits, subject to the usual limits, may be guaranteed by the PBGC.

Determination by plan administrator

Under the bill, the administrator of a plan that receives a domestic relations order is required to notify promptly the participant and any other alternate payee of receipt of the order and the plan's procedures for determining whether the order is qualified. In addition, within a reasonable period after receipt of the order, the plan administrator is to determine whether the order is qualified and notify the participant and alternate payee of the determination. The notices required under these rules are to be sent to the addresses specified in the order or, if the order fails to specify an address, to the last address of the participant or alternate payee known to the plan administrator.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Labor to prescribe regulations defining the reasonable period during which the plan administrator is to determine whether an order is qualified. In addition, the bill provides that plans are to establish reasonable procedures to determine whether domestic relations orders are qualified and to administer distributions under qualified orders. Ordinarily, a plan need not be amended to implement the domestic relations provisions of the bill.

Deferral of benefit payments

During any period in which the issue of whether a domestic relations order is a qualified order is being determined (by the plan administrator, by a court of competent jurisdiction, or otherwise), the plan administrator is to defer the payment of any benefits in dispute. These deferred benefits are segregated either in a separate account in the plan or in an escrow account. In the case of a defined benefit plan, the amounts are to be placed in an escrow account. Of course, segregation is not required for amounts that would not otherwise be paid during the period of the dispute.

If the order is determined to be a qualified domestic relations order within 18 months after the deferral of benefits, the plan administrator is to pay the segregated amounts (plus interest) to the persons entitled to receive them. If the plan administrator determines that the order is not a qualified order or, after the 18-month period has expired, has not resolved the issue of whether the order is qualified, the segregated amounts are paid to the person or persons who would have received the amounts if the order had not been issued.

Any determination that an order is qualified after expiration of the 18-month period is to be applied prospectively. Thus, if the plan administrator determines that the order is qualified after the 18-month period, the plan is not liable for payments to the alternate payee for the period before the order is determined to be qualified.

Of course, the provisions of the bill do not affect any cause of action that an alternate payee may have against the participant. For example, if an order is determined to be qualified after the 18-month period, the alternate payee may have a cause of action under State law against the participant for amounts paid to the participant that should have been paid to the alternate payee.

During any period in which the alternate payee cannot be located, the plan is not permitted to provide for the forfeiture of the amounts that would have been paid unless the plan provides for full reinstatement when the alternate payee is located.

Consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury

Under the bill, the Secretary of Labor is required to consult with the Secretary of the Treasury in prescribing regulations under these provisions.

Tax treatment of divorce distributions

The bill provides rules for determining the tax treatment of benefits subject to a qualified domestic relations order. Under the bill, for purposes of determining the taxability of benefits, the alternate payee is treated as a distributee with respect to payments received from or under a plan.

Under the bill, net employee contributions (together with other amounts treated as the participant's investment in the contract) are apportioned between the participant and the alternate payee under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The apportionment is to be made pro rata, on the basis of the present value of all benefits of the participant under the plan and the present value of all benefits of the alternate payee under the plan (as alternate payee with respect to the participant under a qualified domestic relations order).

Payments to an alternate payee before the participant attains age 59½ are not subject to the 10-percent additional income tax that would otherwise apply under certain circumstances if the participant received the amounts.

The bill provides that the interest of the alternate payee is not taken into account in determining whether a distribution to the participant is a lump sum distribution. Under the bill, benefits distributed to an alternate payee under a qualified domestic relations order can be rolled over, tax-free, to an individual retirement account or to an individual retirement annuity. The usual income tax rules apply to benefits not rolled over. The special rules for lump sum distributions from qualified plans will not apply to benefits distributed to an alternate payee.

Effective dates

The provisions of the bill relating to assignments in divorce, etc., proceedings generally apply on January 1, 1985. If a domestic relations order was received by a plan before the date of enactment, however, the plan the administrator is to treat the order as a qualified domestic relations order to the extent payments are being made pursuant to the order. In addition, the plan administrator may treat any other order entered before the effective date as a qualified order. The committee encourages the plan administrator to treat an existing order as qualified to the extent it is consistent with the provisions of the bill. Of course, if the plan administrator does not treat an order as qualified, the alternate payee may amend the order to satisfy the requirements for a qualified order.

D. Cash Out of Certain Accrued Benefits (Secs. 105 and 205 of the bill, sec. 203 of ERISA, and sec. 411 of the Code)

Present law

Under present law,[26] in the case of an employee whose plan participation terminates, a pension, profit-sharing, or stock bonus plan (pension plan) may involuntarily "cash out" the benefit (i.e., pay out the balance to the credit of a plan participant without the participant's consent) if the present value of the benefit does not exceed $1,750. If a benefit is cashed-out under this rule and the participant subsequently returns to employment covered by the plan, then service taken into account in computing benefits payable under the plan after the return need not include service with respect to which benefits were cashed out unless the employee "buys back" the benefit.

Generally, a cash-out distribution from a qualified plan can be rolled over, tax-free, to an IRA or to another qualified plan.

Under present law, the prohibition on involuntary cash-outs of amounts in excess of $1,750 does not apply to the benefits that may be payable to a surviving or former spouse of the participant.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the limit on involuntary cash-outs should be raised to $3,500 in recognition of the effects of inflation on the value of small benefits payable under a pension plan.

Explanation of provisions

The bill provides that, if the present value of an accrued benefit exceeds $3,500, then the benefit is not to be considered nonforfeitable if the plan provides that the present value of the benefit can be immediately distributed without the consent of the participant (and, if applicable, the participant's spouse). Under the bill, the interest rate to be used in determining whether the present value of a benefit exceeds $3,500 is not to be greater than the interest rate that would be used (as of the date of the distribution) by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC) for purposes of determining the present value of a lump sum distribution upon termination of the plan. The committee intends that the PBGC rate in effect at the beginning of a plan year may be used throughout the plan year if the plan so provides.

[26] Sec. 411(a)(7)(B) of the Code.

Effective date

The cash-out provision generally is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1984. In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements ratified by the date of enactment between employee representatives and one or more employers, the provision is not effective for plan years beginning before the earlier of (1) the date on which the last of the collective bargaining agreements relating to the plan terminates (determined without regard to any extension agreed to after the date of enactment) or (2) January 1, 1987.

E. Notice of Forfeitability of Benefits (Secs. 106 and 206 of the bill, Sec. 105 of ERISA, and sec. 6057 of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, the administrator of a pension, profit-sharing, or stock bonus plan (pension plan) is required to furnish to a plan participant a statement indicating the participant's total accured benefits and nonforfeitable accured benefits if the participant requests such a statement. A participant is not entitled to more than one statement during any 12-month period. In addition, present law requires a plan administrator to furnish a statement to each plan participant who (1) separates from service during a plan year, (2) is entitled to a vested deferred benefit under the plan, and (3) did not receive retirement benefits under the plan during the year. This statement must contain specified information relating to the benefit.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that a participant who receives a statement of accured benefits as required under present law should be informed of any benefits that may be forfeited if the participant dies prior to a particular date so that participants may make financial arrangements for the retirement security of their spouses.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, any statement provided to a plan participant of total accured benefits and nonforfeitable accured benefits, or any statement provided to a separated plan participant who has a vested deferred benefit, must include a notice to the participant that certain benefits may be forfeited if the participant dies before a particular date. The notice that certain benefits may be forfeited if a participant dies before a particular date need not include the amount of the benefits that are forfeitable.

Effective date

The provision of the bill requiring notice of forfeitability of benefits is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1984. In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements ratified by the date of enactment between employee representatives and one or more employers, the provision is not effective for plan years beginning before the earlier of (1) the date on which the last of the collective bargaining agreements relating to the plan terminates (determined without regard to any extension agreed to after the date of enactment) or (2) January 1, 1987.

F. Notice of Rollover Treatment (Sec. 207 of the bill and secs. 402 and 6652 of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, an employee's benefits from or under a qualified plan generally are includible in income when the benefits are distributed. If the balance to the credit of an employee is paid to the employee or to the surviving spouse of the employee as a qualifying rollover distribution, all or any portion of the distribution may be rolled over, within 60 days of the date of the distribution, to another qualified plan or an IRA. If a rollover is made, tax is deferred on the portion of the distribution rolled over. Similar rules apply to qualifying rollover distributions from or under a tax-sheltered annuity contract. If a rollover is not made, the participant or beneficiary may be eligible for 10-year income averaging (or long-term capital gains treatment) with respect to the distribution.

Present law does not require a plan administrator to notify a recipient of a qualifying rollover distribution of the time for making a rollover to another qualified pension plan or an IRA or the consequences of rolling over the distribution. Also, no notice is required to be provided relating to eligibility for 10-year income averaging.

Reasons for change

The committee is concerned that participants in qualified plans and the surviving or former spouses of participants often fail to make rollovers of qualifying rollover distributions because they do not understand the consequences of making such a rollover. In addition, the committee is aware that many individuals have failed to make permissible rollovers because they do not make the rollover within the required time period. The committee believes that the plan administrator can, without significant administrative burden, provide this information and information relating to 10-year income averaging to the person receiving the distribution.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, when the administrator of a qualified plan makes a qualifying rollover distribution, the administrator is to provide notice to the recipient that (1) the distribution will not be taxed currently to the extent transferred to another qualified pension plan or an IRA, and (2) the transfer must be made within 60 days of receipt in order to qualify for this tax-free rollover treatment. In the case of a series of distributions that may constitute a lump sum distribution, the committee intends that this notice will explain that the 60-day period does not begin to run until the last distribution is made. In addition, this notice is to provide a written explanation of the 10-year income averaging and capital gains provisions if applicable.

The committee intends that the Secretary of the Treasury will provide an officially approved notice that plan administrators may use to satisfy this notice requirement.

The committee recognizes that, under certain circumstances, it may be difficult for a plan administrator to determine whether a particular distribution is a qualifying rollover distribution. Thus, your committee intends that a plan administrator satisfies the notice requirement if notice is provided with every payment from or under the plan so long as the notice, in addition to satisfying the other requirements, includes a statement describing how a recipient may determine whether the particular distribution is a qualifying rollover distribution.

Failure of the plan administrator to give the required notice of rollover treatment results in imposition of a $10 penalty for each failure up to $5,000 for each calendar year. This penalty does not apply if the failure is shown to be due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect.

Effective date

The notice provision generally is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1984. In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements ratified before the date of enactment between employee representatives and one or more employers, the provision is not effective for plan years beginning before the earlier of (1) the date on which the last of the collective bargaining agreements relating to the plan terminates (without regard to any extension agreed to after the date of enactment) or (2) January 1, 1987.

G. Reduction of Accrued Benefits (Sec. 301 of the bill)

Present law

Under present law, a pension plan is not a qualified plan unless all benefits provided by the plan are definitely determinable. The Internal Revenue Service takes the position that a defined benefit pension plan is not a qualified plan unless, whenever the amount of any benefit is to be determined on the basis of actuarial assumptions, such assumptions are specified in the plan in a manner that precludes employer discretion.[27]

In addition, present law provides that a qualified plan generally may not be amended in a manner that decreases, the benefits of any participant accured prior to the amendment.[28] An exception to this rule is provided for certain retroactive plan amendments. Under an IRS ruling, for purposes of determining whether a participant's accured benefit is decreased, all of the provisions of the plan affecting directly or indirectly the accured benefit are taken into account.[29] Also, the reduction of a benefit or elimination of an option is prohibited under a qualified plan if it results in discrimination in favor of employees who are officers, shareholders, or highly compensated.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the protection of accrued benefits, which are essentially retirement benefits, against reduction by plan amendments is an essential safeguard for plan participants and their beneficiaries. The committee also believes that valuable rights of participants should not be lost through the elimination of benefit options because options of equal actuarial value may not be of equal value to people whose particular circumstances are not taken into account in determining actuarial equivalence.

Explanation of provisions

In general

Under the bill, as under present law, the accrued benefit of a participant is not to be decreased by an amendment of a plan.[30] The bill clarifies the scope of the prohibition against such decreases. The committee intends that no inference is to be made on the basis of this clarification as to the scope of the prohibition before the effective date of the provision.

The bill provides that an amendment of a qualified plan is to be treated as reducing accrued benefits if, with respect to benefits accrued before the amendment is adopted, the amendment has the effect of either (1) eliminating or reducing an early retirement benefit or a retirement-type subsidy, or (2) except as provided by Treasury regulations, eliminating on optional form of benefit. The bill does not, however, prevent changes with respect to future benefit accruals.

The bill generally protects the accrual of benefits with respect to participants who have met the requirements for a benefit as of the time a plan is amended and participants who subsequently meet the preamendment requirements. The bill does not, however, prevent the reduction of a subsidy in the case of a participant who, at the time of separation from service (whether before or after the plan amendment), has not met the preamendment requirements. The provision does not change any rules under which accrued benefits become vested.

Accordingly, the bill makes it clear that the prohibition against reduction of a benefit subsidy (the excess of the value of a benefit over the actuarial equivalent of the normal retirement benefit) applies to a participant only if the participant meets the conditions imposed by the plan on the availability of the subsidy. If the protection is afforded, an employee's accrued benefit is not to be less than the protected level or the accrued benefit determined under the plan without regard to the protection, whichever is greater. For example, if a plan is amended to eliminate a subsidized early retirement benefit for employees who have completed 30 years of service, then the plan would not be required to provide the subsidy to an employee who never completes 30 years of service and it would not be required to provide benefits to such an employee before the normal retirement age. On the other hand, if the employee completes 30 years of service, then the employee's accrued benefit is not to be less than the protected level or the accrued benefit determined without regard to the protection, whichever is greater. Accordingly, if a benefit subsidy is provided, for example, only for employees who retire during a "window period", the provision would not require that benefits of an employee who does not retire during the window period include the window benefit. Also, the provision would not affect the application of any other provisions of the Code, such as section 401(a)(4) or 411(b)(1)(G).

For example, consider a plan that provides an annual benefit of 1 percent of average pay per year of service at normal retirement age under the plan (age 65). The plan provides an early retirement benefit to a participant who has attained age 55. This early retirement benefit is actuarially reduced to 50 percent of the benefit payable to the participant at age 65. In the case of a participant who attains age 55 and who has completed 30 years of service, the amount of the annual benefit payable beginning at 55 is not actuarially reduced under the plan.

Under the bill, if the plan is amended on January 1, 1985 (effective on that date), to require a full actuarial reduction of early retirement benefits in all cases, then the full actuarial reduction could be made for any participant who severs employment before attaining age 55 and completing 30 years of service. Under the bill, however, if a participant met the age and service requirements for the unreduced early retirement benefit on January 1, 1985, then the plan amendment could not reduce that benefit below the level to which the participant would have been entitled if retirement had occurred immediately before the plan amendment was effective.

[29] Rev. Rul. 81-12, 1981-1 C.B. 228.

[30] Other than an amendment described in section 412(c)(8) of the Code or section 4281 of ERISA.

Under this plan, if a participant did not meet the plan's requirements for unreduced early retirement benefits on January 1, 1985, but the participant later satisfies those requirements, then the participant's accrued benefit under the plan would be the greater of (1) the accrued benefit as of the date of the plan amendment, without taking the actuarial reduction into account, or (2) the accrued benefit provided by the plan when the benefit becomes payable, after the full actuarial reduction. Accordingly, the participant's accrued benefit will not be reduced by the plan amendment, but it will not be increased by subsequent service or pay raises until the subsequent increase brings the participant's accrued benefit to a level in excess of the accrued benefit as of January 1, 1985.

The following examples illustrate the application of this provision. Employee A was covered by the plan described above and, on January 1, 1985, was one day short of attaining age 55 and had completed 30 years of service. If A's average pay immediately before the amendment was $10,000, then A's accrued benefit at that time was an annual benefit of $3,000 ($10,000 × 1 percent × 30 years). A 50-percent actuarial reduction would reduce A's benefit payable beginning on January 1, 1985, to $1,500. Under the bill, the plan amendment could not reduce A's accrued benefit below $3,000 if A later attains age 55.

If as of January 1, 1985, employee B was age 50, had completed 25 years of service, and had average pay of $10,000, then the plan amendment could not reduce B's benefit below $2,500 ($10,000 × 1 percent × 25 years). If B's average pay increased at 6 percent annually until age 55, then B's accrued benefit at age 55 under the plan (as amended) would be $4,016 ($13,382 × 1 percent × 30 years). But for the bill and prior law, the actuarial reduction would reduce B's annual benefit to $2,008. Under the bill, the amendment could not reduce B's benefit payable at age 55 below $2,500.

If as of January 1, 1985, employee C was age 45, had completed 20 years of service, and had average pay of $10,000, and C's pay increased at 6 percent annually until age 55, then C's benefit would not be increased under the bill. C's accrued benefit as of January 1, 1985, was $2,000 ($10,000 × 1 percent × 20), and at age 55 (assuming average pay raises at 6 percent annually to $17,906) C's accrued benefit will be $5,371 ($17,906 × 1 percent × 30 years). The 50-percent actuarial reduction would reduce C's benefit to $2,685. The bill does not affect the result in C's case because the actuarial reduction does not reduce C's benefit below the protected level of $2,000.

Of course, a plan provision that takes effect as a result of a change in the status of the plan from top heavy to non-top heavy would be treated as a plan amendment at the time the specified event occurs. Accordingly, such a provision is not to have the effect of reducing previously accrued benefits.

The bill does not change the rules under which accrued benefits may be reduced with the consent of the Secretary of Labor, in the event of a substantial business hardship (sec. 412(c)(8) of the Code) or the rules permitting a reduction of benefits in the case of certain multiemployer plans (sec. 4281 of ERISA). Also, the committee expects that Treasury regulations will permit participants to elect to reduce accrued benefits in a defined benefit pension plan where those benefits would otherwise exceed the overall limits on contributions and benefits (sec. 415 of the Code) or cause prohibited discrimination under the plan.

Retirement-type subsidy

The bill provides that the term "retirement-type subsidy" is to be defined by Treasury regulations. The committee intends that under these regulations, a subsidy that continues after retirement is generally to be considered a retirement-type subsidy. The committee expects, however, that a qualified disability benefit, a medical benefit, a social security supplement, a death benefit (including life insurance), or a plant shutdown benefit (that does not continue after retirement age) will not be considered a retirement-type subsidy. The committee expects that Treasury regulations will prevent the recharacterization of retirement-type benefits as benefits that are not protected by the provision.

Elimination of optional benefit forms

Under the bill, to the extent provided by Treasury regulations, a benefit option may be eliminated with respect to benefits accrued before the date the amendment is adopted. The committee expects that, for example, the elimination of an option with respect to previously accrued benefits is not to be prohibited by a plan amendment to the extent the elimination of the option is required as a condition of meeting the standards for qualified status of the plan.

The regulations also could permit the elimination of an option if (1) the elimination of the option does not eliminate a valuable right of a participant or beneficiary, and (2) the option is not subsidized or a similar benefit with a comparable subsidy is provided. For example, if a plan provides a joint and full, a joint and ⅔, and a joint and ½ survivor benefit, the elimination of the joint and ⅔ survivor benefit would not eliminate a valuable participant right. The elimination of all joint and survivor options would not be permissible. The committee expects that the regulations will not permit the elimination of a "lump-sum distribution" option because, for a participant or beneficiary with substandard mortality, the elimination of that option could eliminate a valuable right even if a benefit of equal actuarial value (based on standard mortality) is available under the plan. Of course, the right to select an investment option under a defined contribution plan is not an optional benefit form.

Terminated plans

The bill does not provide an exception to the prohibition against reduction of benefits or elimination of benefit options in the case of a terminated plan. Accordingly, a plan is not to be considered to have satisfied all of its liabilities to participants and beneficiaries until it has provided for the payment of contingent liabilities with respect to a participant who, after the date of the termination of a plan, meets the requirements for a subsidized benefit. The committee does not, however, intend that the absence of such an exception is to affect the liability of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC) with respect to benefits under terminated plans. The committee intends that the provison is not be be construed as changing the liability of the PBGC for quaranteed benefits. The committee recognizes that there is a potential for abuses with respect to plan terminations under the provision. If abuses of this type develop, further legislation may be necessary in order to resolve these problems, if administrative solutions are inadequate.

Effective date

Generally, the provision applies to plan amendments made after July 30, 1984. A special effective date is provided with respect to a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and one or more employers. Under the bill, if such agreements are successor agreements to one or more collective bargaining agreements that terminate after July 30, 1984, and before January 1, 1985, then the provision does not apply to plan amendments adopted after July 30, 1984, and before April 1, 1985, pursuant to such agreements. Under the provision, of course, if negotiations are completed by January 1, 1985, with respect to a collective bargaining agreement, then a plan amendment made pursuant to a later reopening of the negotiations would be prohibited if it reduces or eliminates protected benefits.

For example, the provision would prohibit an amendment to a plan (whether or not the plan is maintained pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement) made on April 1, 1985, that has the effect of reducing a protected benefit which was provided by a plan amendment made during 1980. Such an amendment would be prohibited whether or not it was made pursuant to a provision of a collective bargaining agreement relating to the reopening of negotiations.

H. Study by the General Accounting Office (Sec. 304 of the bill)

The bill provides that the General Accounting Office (GAO) is to conduct a detailed study (based on a reliable scientific sample of typical pension, profit-sharing, and stock bonus plans of various designs and sizes) of the effect on women of participation, vesting, benefit accrual, funding, integration, survivorship features, and other relevant plan and Federal pension rules. In connection with this study, the bill provides that GAO is to have access to the records of employers maintaining pension plans and to the records of the plans.

GAO is directed under the bill to consult with the Internal Revenue Service, the Department of Labor, and other interested Federal agencies to prevent the duplication of data compilation or analyses.

The report is required to be transmitted, no later than January 1, 1990, to the House Committee on Ways and Means, the House Committee on Education and Labor, the Senate Committee on Finance, the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, and the Joint Committee on Taxation.

III. BUDGET EFFECTS AND VOTE OF THE COMMITTEE

Budget effects

In compliance with paragraph 11(a) of Rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the following statement is made relative to the budget effects of H.R. 4280, as reported.

The revenue provisions of the bill involving statutory changes are estimated to reduce fiscal year budget receipts by $42 million in 1985, $67 million in 1986, $83 million in 1987, $90 million in 1988, and $93 million in 1989. The total revenue lost during the first three fiscal years, 1985 through 1987, equals $192 million.

The Treasury Department agrees with this statement.

The table following provides detailed estimates for the tax provisions of the bill for fiscal years 1985–89.

Vote of the committee

In compliance with paragraph 7(c) of Rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the following statement is made about the vote of the committee on the motion to report the bill, as amended. The bill, H.R. 4280, as amended, was ordered favorably reported unanimously without objection.

IV. REGULATORY IMPACT OF THE BILL AND OTHER MATTERS TO BE DISCUSSED UNDER SENATE RULES

Regulatory impact

Pursuant to paragraph 11(b) of Rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the committee makes the following statement concerning the regulatory impact that might be incurred in carrying out the provisions of H.R. 4280, as reported.

Number of individuals and businesses who would be regulated

The bill does not involve new or expanded regulation of individuals or businesses.

Economic impact of regulation on individuals, consumers, and business

The bill provides modifications to the treatment of pension plan rules as they affect spouses, and generally lowers the maximum plan participation age to 21 and the maximum vesting age to 18.

Impact on personal privacy

The bill generally does not relate to the personal privacy of individuals. The bill does create an exception to the ERISA prohibition against the alienation or assignment of benefits for certain court orders relating to child support, alimony or other material property rights.

Determination of the amount of paperwork

The bill will involve some additional paperwork for taxpayers, but the bill generally involves modifications of existing required recordkeeping relating to pension plans.

Other matters

Consultation with Congressional Budget Office on budget estimates

In accordance with section 403 of the Budget Act, the committee advises that the Director of the Congressional Budget Office has examined the committee's budget estimates of the tax provisions of the bill (as shown in Part III of this report) and agrees with the methodology used and the committee's budget estimates. The Director submitted the following statement:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, August 1, 1984.

Hon. ROBERT J. DOLE,
Chairman, Committee on Finance
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In accordance with Section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act, the Congressional Budget Office has examined H.R. 4280, the Retirement Equity Act of 1984, as ordered reported by the Committee. H.R. 4280 is intended to improve benefit protection and provide for greater equity in private pension plans for workers and their spouses and dependents. The provisions of the bill, as amended by the Committee, address issues related to the crediting of periods of service under qualified pension plans, providing of survivor benefits to the spouses of participants under pension plans, and modifying and clarifying federal tax and labor law rules with respect to certain distributions from qualified pension plans pursuant to state domestic relations orders. In addition, the bill would require the General Accounting Office to prepare a detailed study of the effects on women of the rules relating to pension, profit sharing, and stock bonus plans.

CBO has reviewed and concurs with estimates of the revenue effect of H.R. 4280 prepared by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation. The bill would increase tax expenditures and reduce fiscal year revenues by $42 million in 1985, $67 million in 1986, $83 million in 1987, $90 million in 1988, and $93 million in 1989.

Should the committee so desire, we would be pleased to provide further details on this estimate.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

RUDOLPH G. PENNER,
Director.

New budget authority

In compliance with section 308(a)(1) of the Budget Act, and after consultation with the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, the committee states that the changes made to existing law by the bill involve new budget authority.

Tax expenditures

In compliance with section 308(a)(2) of the Budget Act with respect to tax expenditures, and after consultation with the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, the committee states that the changes made to existing law by the bill as amended will involve increased tax expenditures of the amounts of revenue losses for fiscal years 1985–89 shown in the table above (in Part III) of this report.

V. CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW MADE BY THE BILL AS REPORTED

In the opinion of the committee, it is necessary, in order to expedite the business of the Senate, to dispense with the requirements of paragraph 12 of Rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate (relating to the showing of changes in existing law made by the provisions of H.R. 4280, as reported by the committee).

By Mr. TOWER, from the Committee on Armed Services, without amendment:

S. 2713: An original bill to authorize appropriations for the fiscal year 1985 for intelligence activities of the United States Government, the Intelligence Community Staff, the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes.

By Mr. STAFFORD, from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, without amendment:

S. 2820: A bill to name the Federal Building in McAlester, OK, the "Carl Albert Federal Building".

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment:

S.J. Res. 324: Joint resolution designating November, 1984, as "National Christmas Seal Month."

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Harold J. Lezar, Jr., of Texas, to be an Assistant Attorney General; and Marianne Mele Hall, of New Jersey, to be a Commissioner of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal for the unexpired term of 7 years from September 27, 1982.

By Mr. STAFFORD, from the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. D'AMATO (for himself, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, and Mr. EAST):

S. Con. Res. 131. A concurrent resolution concerning Bulgaria's abuses of the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under cover of TIR Carnets in facilitating the transportation of illicit narcotics, smuggled arms and terrorists; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. MELCHER:

S. 2901. A bill to provide relief for Deola Shryock of Polson, MT; to the Committee on Armed Services.

RELIEF OF DEOLA SHRYOCK OF POLSON, MT

● Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, a remarkable act of courage and heroism ended in tragedy last winter in Polson, MT, for the former Air Force pilot Lt. Col. Harry Lee Shryock, Jr. On January 11, following a pharmacy holdup in Missoula, a lone gunman fled the scene and an hour later, with police hot on his trail, took 13-year-old Bill Crose, Jr., hostage. At Polson, the gunman demanded an airplane and a pilot to fly him and the boy out of the area. Lee Shryock, 64, volunteered to pilot the Beechcraft Bonanza and to take the boy's place as hostage. The child, thankfully, was released unharmed. However, in a very confused sequence of events, a police sharpshooter shot and wounded the robber-kidnaper, who then turned his gun on Lee Shryock, killing him instantly.

The Federal Aviation Administration has announced they will present a certificate of commendation to Lieutenant Colonel Shryock's family in memory of his courageous actions on that tragic winter afternoon in Polson. But courage and duty, as well as flying, were always part of Lee's life. He served in the military for 31 years, flying missions in World War II, Korea, and Vietnam. Following his retirement in 1971, Lee flew chartered flights and was active in community activities. He was a member of the Polson Rotary Club and the Experimental Aircraft Association. He was married to Deola Ellis Shryock for 40 years and the couple had five children.

Lee had taken out and made monthly payments to an Air Force survivors annuity fund for his wife. In April 1982, he increased the annuity plan and made regular monthly payments until his untimely death in January. Under the law, the increased benefits will not accrue to her because of a 2-year in anticipation of death limitation on the increased benefits. Mr. Shryock's widow has agreed to payment of the 3 additional months of premiums to allow her to receive the increased benefits of $134.75 per month to which she would have been entitled had her husband not been killed.

The bill I am offering today will provide that Dee Shryock be paid the increased survivor benefits, effective January 12, 1984, the day after Lee's death. Payment of the benefit will be conditioned only on her payment of the 3 months of increased premiums to meet the 2-year requirement of the plan that Lieutenant Colonel Shryock had elected.

I urge the Senate Armed Service Committee to consider this bill promptly. Both as a tribute to the heroism of Lieutenant Colonel Shryock and as a matter of fairness to his widow, Dee Shryock, I believe the bill should be approved.●

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 2903. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that restrictions on the allowance for depreciation and the investment credit for property leased by a tax-exempt entity not apply to certain correctional facilities leased by State and local governments; to the Committee on Finance.

PRISON CONSTRUCTION PRIVATIZATION ACT OF 1984

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would finance sorely needed prison, jail, and detention center rehabilitation and construction through sale/leaseback transactions between State and local governments and the private sector. My proposal would help alleviate the overcrowding of prisons by providing private-sector incentives to finance the construction or rehabilitation of correctional facilities. The Congressional Budget Office [CBO] estimates the cost of my bill to be only $16 million in 1985 and $65.5 million on average per year through 1989. CBO also estimates that my bill would result in $1.5 billion of new prison construction annually. This proposal would sunset in 1989.

Several pieces of legislation have been proposed in the 98th Congress to relieve the overcrowding of our Nation's prisons. Most of these bills entail direct Federal appropriations to States for prison construction. To date, these efforts have failed because of Federal budgetary constraints, despite the fact that the Attorney General's task force on violent crime has recommended a 4-year, $2 billion Federal assistance program to finance the construction of State prisons.

My bill, however, would open up a new avenue of funding for correctional facilities by providing Federal tax incentives to private firms. Not only is the sale/leaseback approach less costly than direct Federal appropriations, but it also adds private cost controls to prison and jail rehabilitation and construction.

Today, prison overcrowding is one of the most serious problems America faces. The situation has reached epidemic proportions. Presently, 30 States have their entire prison systems or individual jails within their systems under court order to alleviate overcrowding. Judges have ruled that conditions in these jails and prisons represent cruel and unusual punishment and, thus, violate the inmates' constitutional rights. The following States are under court order to relieve prison overcrowding:

Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Nevada, Ohio, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia.

Additional States, while not yet under court order, have dangerously high populations.

Occupancy in our Nation's prisons is not expected to decline in coming years. Rather, expected increases will make today's problem look small by comparison. According to a study by the General Accounting Office [GAO], prison population will increase from 391,597 in 1983 to 528,193 by 1990. Available prison space, however, will only increase from 332,444 in 1983 to 419,869 in 1990. This will result in a 25.8 percent or 108,324 shortfall.

The crisis is upon us. Judges in many jurisidictions have already begun ordering prisoners released because of overcrowding. The New York City detention center at Riker's Island was ordered to release 613 of its inmates in November 1983 because of overcrowding. In June 1983, New Orleans was forced to erect outdoor tents to house prisoners. In 1983 alone, 21,420 inmates were released prematurely nationwide due to overcrowding. The problem has grown worse in 1984. And worse yet, even after such releases take place, no new criminal can be sentenced without releasing still another prisoner.

According to "The Privatization of Corrections," a draft report prepared by Abt Associates for the National Institute of Justice, as of March 1, 1984, 105,684 new prison beds are planned or proposed for construction over the next 10 years by States to deal with overcrowding. State corrections departments estimate that total costs for these desperately needed prison spaces will top $5 billion in government outlays through 1994.

Prison construction is not the only enormous expense facing State and local governments. Out Nation's infrastructure is rapidly declining and is badly in need of repair and replacement. In New York State alone, the Joint Economic Committee of Congress estimates that $108.8 billion may be needed by the year 2000 to repair and restore decaying infrastructure. This figure includes funding for mass transit, wastewater, bridges, highways, rail, and airports.

Where is the money going to come from? With our Federal budget deficit of such concern, new spending programs must be limited. Will taxpayers agree to foot the bill?

Today, State and local prisons and jails are often financed through general obligation bonds. Voter approval must be obtained before the bonds can be issued. Prison construction bond issues are not popular among voters and often are rejected in favor of financing more visible projects.

With the problem so enormous and financing so hard to come by, we must find new, imaginative ways to build or rehabilitate prisons, jails, and detention centers.

The private sector can offer assistance and expertise in correctional services in several ways. Many private firms have recently become involved in the financing, construction, and management of prisons, as well as participating in work-release programs and prison industries. Several successful detention centers built by private firms for use by local government are presently in operation.

Lease financing of detention facilities has occurred in several parts of the country as a result of the shortage of traditional financing alternatives. E.F. Hutton has arranged a $30.2 million issue for a jail and sheriff's facility in Jefferson County, CO, as well as a $50 million jail project for Philadelphia. In addition, the Corrections Corp. of America, the National Corrections Corp., and Behavioral Systems Southwest have financed jails and illegal-alien detention centers in Houston, Pasadena, and San Diego. Experience has shown that private firms can construct facilities cheaper that a government entity.

Sale/leasebacks by a government entity will further encourage this privatization process. Under these agreements, a private firm agrees to own, finance, and construct a prison or jail. The facility is then leased to a government entity for a specific number of years. At the end of the lease period, the government entity has an option to buy the facility. During the ownership period, the private firm or group of investors receive tax benefits such as investment tax credits, rehabilitation tax credits, and accelerated depreciation.

Sale/leasebacks by government entities, however, were severely curtailed in the recently enacted Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (H.R. 4170). This bill denies the rehabilitation tax credit and repeals the accelerated cost recovery system [ACRS] for sale/leaseback transactions by government entities.

These new restrictions were enacted because Congress felt, rightly, that certain entities have used sale/leasebacks for no economically useful purpose, but merely were raiding the Federal Treasury as a substitute for raising their own local taxes. Prior to passage of H.R. 4170, a government entity would sell and lease back an existing structure to a group of investors. The investors would obtain generous tax benefits and the government entity would make lease payments. However, no new project was undertaken and no economically useful activity was furthered. H.R. 4170 has eliminated this abuse.

My bill will allow sale/leaseback transactions between government entities and private investors to resume solely for the purpose of State and local prison, jail, and detention center rehabilitation and construction. However, my bill contains safeguards to avoid past abuses associated with sale/leasebacks, while still encouraging the privatization of correctional facilities. The legislation generally exempts new State and local prison and jail rehabilitation and construction from the sale/leaseback provisions of H.R 4170. However, to receive the rehabilitation tax credit and accelerated depreciation, the structure must be placed in original service no later than 90 days after the signing of a binding contract for use of the structure as a prison facility. In addition, the facility must be used 100 percent for housing prisoners and necessary related facilities. This will effectively avoid the most common abuses associated with sale/leasebacks.

It is important to stress that our prison problem is immediate. The use of sale/leasebacks will allow government entities to quickly finance prison construction through the private sector. Through Federal tax incentives, the private sector can become involved in this pressing public problem.

State and local government do not have the necessary funds to build new prisons or jails on their own. Private firms, however, have the resources available. The private sector is the means to finance and construct these badly needed facilities. My bill will unleash $1.5 billion of these funds for badly needed prisons without forcing local governments to go to the polls.

CBO estimates that my bill will only cost $16 million in 1985 and an average of $65.5 million per year through 1989. I feel that this is a small price to pay considering the magnitude of the problem. It is an even smaller price to pay when compared to the threat of releasing ever increasing numbers of criminals into our midst, not because they have served their time, not because they have been rehabilitated, but merely because of overcrowding.

Sale/leasebacks for prison construction need to be exempted from the restrictions imposed by H.R. 4170. With prisons and jails increasingly being forced to release violent criminals due to overcrowding, time is running out. Sale/leasebacks by government entities offer an inexpensive solution to this problem.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this legislation. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2903

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) paragraph (3) of section 168(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining tax-exempt use property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) EXCEPTION FOR QUALIFIED CORRECTIONAL FACILITIES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'tax-exempt use property' shall not include a qualified correctional facility which is leased by any State or political subdivision thereof or any agency or instrumentality of the foregoing.

"(ii) AGREEMENT TREATED AS LEASE.—For purposes of this title, if any agreement with respect to a qualified correctional facility is characterized by all parties to the agreement as a lease and a tax-exempt entity described in clause (i) is the lessee under such agreement, then—

"(I) such agreement shall be treated as a lease, and

"(II) the lessor shall be treated as the owner of the property and the lessee shall be treated as the lessee of the property.

"(iii) QUALIFIED CORRECTIONAL FACILITY.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'qualified correctional facility' means any property which is devoted exclusively for use as a prison, jail, or other detention facility (including any related facility) and which—

"(I) is leased by a tax-exempt entity within 90 days after the property is originally placed in service by the lessor or lessee, or

"(II) is leased by a tax-exempt entity within 90 days of the completion of a substantial rehabilitation (within the meaning of section 48(g)(3)) of the property by the lessor or lessee.".

(b) The amendments made by this section shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 1984, in taxable years ending after such date.

By Mr. D'AMATO (for himself, Mr. ABDNOR, and Mr. EAST):

S. 2904. A bill directing the President to conduct a comprehensive review of United States policy toward Bulgaria; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD BULGARIA

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to turn the spotlight of world and national opinion on the terrorist activities of the Bulgarian Government. Through its front corporation, KINTEX, Bulgaria has immersed itself deeply in the operation of an international network involving the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II, and international drug trafficking, gunrunning, and terrorist training.

On May 13, 1981, Mehmet Ali Agca, acting at the behest of the Bulgarian secret service, shot and nearly killed Pope John Paul II. The details of this heinous plot are contained in the report of Italian State Prosecutor Antonio Albano, filed on May 8, 1984. The prosecutor's report states that the Bulgarian secret service recruited Agca to kill the Pope in order to destroy the Solidarity Union movement in Poland and to crush any hope of freedom's emergence in that proud and great nation. This report also documents the active involvement of the Bulgarian Embassy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by Claire Sterling detailing the report of Antonio Albano in the June 10, 1984, issue of the New York Times be printed in its entirety at the conclusion of my remarks.

In October 1981, I visited Italy and met with high-level Vatican officials who told me of their conclusions that there had been a plot to assassinate Pope John Paul II and that Mehmet Ali Agca had not acted alone. Upon my return, I reported these facts to the CIA. In September 1982, I spoke before the Helsinki Commission on Bulgarian and Soviet complicity in the plot to murder the Pope. And in February 1983, I returned to Italy to look into the U.S. role in the investigation of the papal assassination plot. To all of those who then accused me of seeing a Communist conspiracy where none existed, I can now say that recent discoveries are proving me right.

The truth is emerging fragment by fragment. While we may never know the complete story of this heinous plot, we have now pieced together enough evidence to lead us to the origin of the murder attempt. The pieces of this complex puzzle are coming together thanks to a superb investigative job by the Italians.

There is no doubt in my mind that the Soviet Union was the moving force behind the attempted assassination of the Pope. It is naive to believe that a plot of this magnitude could be carried out by a Soviet satellite without the full knowledge and support of the Kremlin. No Warsaw Pact nation is more closely allied to the Soviets. The management of the Bulgarian agency that moved Agca through Europe, KINTEX, is top heavy with officers of the Bulgarian secret police, which answers directly to, and takes orders from, the Soviet KGB.

It is time to demand a thorough examination of Bulgaria and the threat this captive nation poses to world peace. It is time for us to tell our cautious bureaucrats in the executive branch that this issue is alive and that it will have to be faced. Let us pass the legislation I am introducing today and send a clear message to Bulgaria and its masters in Moscow: We know who did the deed, we know who was behind it, and we will not forget.

The same underground network operated by KINTEX to move Agca through Europe is also being used as a front for Bulgaria's illicit narcotics and weapons trafficking. According to the Drug Enforcement Administration, between 10 and 25 percent of the Heroin now entering the United States moves through Bulgaria.

In January of this year, a report filed by a Turkish state prosecutor provided evidence linking Agca with a Bulgarian-based narcotics smuggling ring. This report has recently been translated by the Wall Street Journal. I refer my colleagues to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 24, which contains an article by David Ignatius summarizing this report at page 20615.

The need to reveal the extent of Bulgarian duplicity is greater than ever. The recent signing of a trade agreement between Bulgaria and Guyana raises the specter of intensified Communist terrorist and drug smuggling activity in our hemisphere.

The Drug Enforcement Administration cites four motives for Bulgarian support of international drug trafficking:

First, to use drugs as a weapon to destabilize Western societies. Unfortunately, they are achieving this goal today. Sixty percent of the violent crime that plagues our communities is caused by drug abuse. Drug abuse is spreading throughout Western Europe. It handicaps our military readiness and imposes enormous costs on our economy, damaging our national health and productivity;

Second, to obtain hard, that is, Western currency, always in short supply in the Communist bloc;

Third, to support and supply Middle Eastern revolutionary and terrorist groups, who pay for their arms with drugs; and Fourth, to gather intelligence via a network of agents and drug smugglers operating under the cover of an official export-import agency.

On June 28, 1984, the Senate overwhelmingly approved an amendment to the Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary appropriations bill to prohibit the use of State and Commerce Department funds to promote trade with Bulgaria. This amendment also expressed the sense of the Congress that Bulgaria should be declared to be engaged in state-sponsored terrorism.

The legislation I introduced today—one bill and one concurrent resolution—follows directly from this action by the Senate. The bill directs the President to conduct a comprehensive review of U.S. policies with respect to the Government of Bulgaria in light of that Government's participation in, and support for, international narcotics trafficking, arms smuggling, and terrorism, including its role in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II. Among the options to be considered are the following:

First, suspending diplomatic relations with the Government of Bulgaria;

Second, terminating bilateral agreements with the Government of Bulgaria;

Third, imposing stricter controls on exports to Bulgaria;

Fourth, encouraging other countries to review their policies regarding Bulgaria;

Fifth, requesting the United Nations Security Council to review Bulgaria's involvement in arms trafficking, drug smuggling; and terrorism; and Sixth, requesting the Secretary General of the United Nations to convene a review conference, in accordance with international conventions, to pressure Bulgaria to end its abuses of international transportation agreements.

The companion concurrent resolution I am introducing covers this sixth point in hopes that it can be passed immediately, in order to bring the issue of Bulgarian state terrorism before the world community at the earliest possible time. Through KINTEX, Bulgaria has exploited the T.I.R. International Customs Convention, which allows sealed vehicles to cross borders without customs inspection. Under cover of this international agreement, Bulgaria has smuggled heroin, arms, and terrorists throughout Europe using sealed trucks carrying T.I.R. certification.

We cannot condone Bulgaria's violation of the T.I.R. Convention, or allow it to continue its criminal practices. This resolution calls upon the Secretary General of the United Nations to convene a review conference to study and, if necessary, to end Bulgaria's abuse of the T.I.R. Convention. The Customs Service strongly supports this concurrent resolution which is the first step in mobilizing the international community of nations against Bulgaria.

Representative EDWARD FEIGHAN of Ohio has introduced similar legislation in the House of Representatives. The House Committee on Foreign Affairs has already begun to hold hearings on this issue. I was happy to testify before that committee on July 24.

I urge the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs to give the legislation I introduce today the same priority attention. In thanking Representative FEIGHAN and his committee for the opportunity to testify before them, I quoted Henry David Thoreau's remark that "it takes two to speak the truth—one to speak and one to hear." I urge my colleagues to give this legislation their full support. The time to speak the truth about Bulgarian criminality is now.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that both the bill and the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2904

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) the Congress finds that—

(1) United States Government officials have testified before the Congress that the Government of Bulgaria has established a policy of encouraging and facilitating trafficking in illicit narcotics through its official import-export agency, KINTEX;

(2) those officials also testified that KINTEX has assisted the illicit flow of arms and ammunition to insurgent groups; and

(3) an Italian Government state prosecutor has concluded that the Government of Bulgaria was involved in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II.

(b) Therefore, the President shall conduct a comprehensive review of United States policies with respect to the Government of Bulgaria in light of that Government's participation in support for narcotics trafficking, arms smuggling, and terrorism, including its role in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II. This review, to be conducted utilizing the staff of the National Security Council, shall include, but not be limited to, an assessment of the feasibility and advisability of the following options:

(1) Suspending United States diplomatic relations with the Government of Bulgaria.

(2) Terminating United States bilateral agreements with the Government of Bulgaria, including the maritime transport agreement.

(3) Imposing stricter controls on United States exports to Bulgaria.

(4) Encouraging other countries to review their policies with respect to Bulgaria in light of the Bulgarian Government's involvement in narcotics trafficking, arms smuggling, and terrorism.

(5) Requesting that the United Nations Security Council place on its agenda the question of Bulgaria's involvement in arms trafficking, drug smuggling, and terrorist acts.

(6) Submitting a request to the Secretary General of the United Nations that a review conference be convened, in accordance with the 1975 Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets, in order to determine what steps should be taken to end Bulgaria's abuses of that Convention in facilitating the transportation of illicit narcotics, arms, and terrorists.

(c) Not later than 3 months after the enactment of this Act, the President shall report to the Congress on the results of the review conducted pursuant to this Act. Such report shall discuss the options that were considered, the reasons why each option was approved or disapproved, and the actions the United States Government is going to take as a result of the review.

By Mr. WILSON (for himself, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BOREN, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. CHILES, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. DODD, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. PERCY, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. TRIBLE, Mr. TSONGAS, and Mr. WARNER):

S.J. Res. 337. Joint resolution designating October 1984 as "Computer Learning Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMPUTER LEARNING MONTH

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, it is my pleasure today to introduce a Senate joint resolution focusing attention on the importance of computer learning to America's future. Twenty-five of my colleagues are joining me as original cosponsors in this effort to designate October 1984 as "Computer Learning Month."

The computer is no longer a tool reserved for the most intellectually gifted members of our society. It is today a basic component of our lives. Reflecting this fact, many of this Nation's industrial competitors have launched comprehensive computer-training programs aimed at developing computer skills among students and business people. It is imperative that leaders throughout our schools, businesses, and government devote adequate emphasis to similar programs. At stake is the continued scientific and technological leadership which this Nation has long enjoyed.

This resolution does not suggest direct Federal expenditures or involvement in providing computer training. Rather, it encourages both private sector and education authorities to promote public awareness of computer applications and technologies.

As designated in October—the beginning of the school year—"Computer Learning Month" should serve to focus public attention on the importance of increasing the number of Americans who can utilize computer based technologies. This effort is aimed particularly at the better than 200 million Americans who have not had significant exposure to computers and their capabilities.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will act quickly on this resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 337

Whereas computer based technologies are playing an ever larger role in the social and economic development of our nation;

Whereas expanding the use and application of computers is one key to maintaining U.S. leadership in the high technology field;

Whereas it is incumbent upon present and future generations of Americans to learn to use and adapt this technology for the betterment of their lives and society;

Whereas millions of Americans have yet to learn of the capabilities and applications which computers have in the home and work environment; and

Whereas we must take every opportunity to encourage an understanding of computer based technology through the promotion of innovative learning environments in order to integrate computer technology into our diverse society: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of October 1984 shall be designated "Computer Learning Month," in order that national attention be focused on the growing importance of computer-based technology in our lives and that more Americans be afforded the opportunity to learn to use computers.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate is directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 2080

At the request of Mr. PACKWOOD, the name of the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2080, a bill to make permanent a tax provision to encourage employers to provide legal services for their employees.

S. 2258

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the names of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PERCY], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. HUDDLESTON] were added as cosponsors of S. 2258, a bill to grant a Federal charter to the 369th Veterans' Association.

S. 2514

At the request of Mr. SIMPSON, the names of the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] were added as cosponsors of S. 2514, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to enhance the management of Veterans' Administration medical treatment programs by providing for the referral of veterans to non-Veterans' Administration entities and arrangements for additional necessary services, to revise and clarify the authority for the furnishing of care for veterans suffering from alcohol or drug dependence, to require the Administrator to establish the position of Associate Director for Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, to require the Administrator to submit a report to Congress regarding programs of the Veterans' Administration providing hospice and respite care to certain veterans, and to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to provide telecaption television decoders to totally deaf veterans in certain cases, and for other purposes.

S. 2768

At the request of Mr. MATHIAS, the names of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ZORINSKY] were added as cosponsors of S. 2768, a bill to provide for the education in the United States of certain students of limited financial means from developing countries.

S. 2771

At the request of Mr. SPECTER, the name of the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2771, a bill to protect the internal security of the United States against international terrorism by making the use of a firearm to commit a felony by foreign diplomats in the United States a Federal felony.

S. 2875

At the request of Mr. HOLLINGS, the name of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2875, a bill to establish qualifications for individuals appointed to the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 293

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, his name was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 293, a joint resolution to designate July 17, 1984, as "Spanish-American War Veteran Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 321

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, his name was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 321, a joint resolution to designate the week of October 14, 1984, through October 21, 1984, as "National Housing Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 336

At the request of Mr. DENTON, the name of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 336, a joint resolution to proclaim October 23, 1984, as "A Time of Remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughout the world.

SENATE RESOLUTION 412

At the request of Mr. HOLLINGS, the names of the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 412, a resolution to congratulate and commend the U.S.A. Philharmonic Society.

SENATE RESOLUTION 415

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 415, a resolution commemorating the 20 years of Federal support of mass transportation.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 131—RELATING TO BULGARIA'S ABUSE OF THE CUSTOMS CONVENTION ON THE INTERNATIONAL TRANSPORTATION OF GOODS UNDER COVER OF TIR CARNETS

Mr. D'AMATO (for himself, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, and Mr. EAST) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 131

Whereas the 1975 Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets is designed to facilitate the international transport of goods by exempting sealed vehicles from customs inspections;

Whereas United States Government officials have testified before Congress that the Government of Bulgaria has established a policy of encouraging and facilitating trafficking in illicit narcotics through its official import-export agency, KINTEX, and the Government of Bulgaria has used the TIR Convention in carrying out this policy;

Whereas those officials also testified that KINTEX has assisted the illicit flow of arms and ammunition to insurgent groups;

Whereas an Italian Government state prosecutor has concluded that the Government of Bulgaria used a truck, which was carrying goods under cover of a TIR Carnet, to assist the escape of an accomplice in the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II;

Whereas it is clear that the Government of Bulgaria has repeatedly abused the TIR Convention in order to facilitate the transportation of illicit narcotics, arms, and terrorists;

Whereas the TIR Convention provides that any contracting party may, by notification to the Secretary General of the United Nations, request that a conference be convened for the purpose of reviewing the Convention, and further provides that a review conference shall be convened by the Secretary General if not less than one-fourth of the contracting parties notify him of their concurrence with the request;

Whereas the TIR Convention also allows countries to take certain steps in order to prevent abuses, including examination of vehicles by customs officials when irregularity is suspected and in other exceptional cases; and

Whereas the United States, and other contracting parties to the TIR Convention, should not allow the Convention to be used to facilitate the transportation of illicit narcotics, arms, and terrorists: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is ths sense of the Congress that—

(1) the United States should request, in accordance with the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets, that the Secretary General of the United Nations convene a review conference to determine what steps should be taken to end Bulgaria's abuses of that Convention in facilitating the transportation of illicit narcotices, arms, and terrorists; and

(2) the President should encourage other contracting parties to the TIR Convention to concur in this request and to otherwise use the procedures provided in the Convention to end Bulgaria's abuses of the Convention.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES AND EDUCATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

DOMENICI AMENDMENT NO. 3590

Mr. DOMENICI submitted the following amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 2836) an original bill making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, as follows:

On page 39, after line 5, insert the following:

SCIENCE AND MATH EDUCATION

For carrying out the provisions of Title II of the Education for Economic Security Act, $200,000,000 to remain available until expended.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL POLICY

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Foreign Agricultural Policy of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry has scheduled a hearing to examine the reasons for the increase in imports of Canadian pork and to consider an appropriate response by the United States to the increase.

The hearings will be held on Thursday, August 9, 1984, at 10 a.m. in room 328-A Russell Senate Office Building.

For further information please contact the Agriculture Committee staff at 224-0014 or 224-0017.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY REGULATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Energy Regulation, of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, August 2, at 9 a.m., to hold a hearing to consider S. 1069, to amend the Federal Power Act to limit the recovery by public utilities through rate increases; S. 817, to amend section 205 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824D) relating to inclusion of construction work in progress in the wholesale rate base of public utilities; and H.R. 555, to amend the Federal Power Act to limit the recovery by public utilities of certain costs of construction work in progress through rate increases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF HELSINKI ACCORDS

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, yesterday marked the ninth anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. On August 1, 1975, in Helsinki, Finland, the heads of 33 European countries, Canada and the United States signed an agreement which committed their states toward greater international security and cooperation.

The Helsinki Final Act established specific provisions of international cooperation in the military and economic spheres as well as in the area of scientific, educational, and cultural exchanges. Most importantly, the Final Act also set forth an explicit code of conduct which acknowledged the importance of respect for fundamental rights and freedoms of every citizen in each of the 35 signatory nations. This historic event marked the first time that human rights were elevated to the status of an essential ingredient in international relations.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, the ninth anniversary of the Helsinki Final Act is not a happy occasion. Since the signing of the Final Act, the Soviet Government has looked upon the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Accords as merely words grafted onto an agreement which legitimized their post-World War II borders. In fact, at the Second Helsinki Review Conference in Madrid which ended last September, the East's dismal record was exposed and over 100 cases of numerous human rights activists were raised by the United States and other delegations.

The tragic fact, Mr. President, is that the Soviet Union, along with other East European signatories, have, since 1975, unremittingly continued to violate the human rights and humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki Final Act. More importantly, some signatory nations, specifically the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia, have taken specific harsh steps to silence those noble individuals who urged their government to comply with these accords.

On this occasion, Mr. President, I would like to draw attention to the relentless assault by the Soviet Government against the Ukrainian Helsinki monitors and, indeed, against the Ukrainian people. Since the signing of the Helsinki Final Act, numerous Ukrainian human rights advocates have been interned in Soviet labor camps and confined in KGB-run special psychiatric hospitals. They include such heroic individuals as Valery Marchenko, Oksana Meskho, and Uri Shukhevich. Last May, Oleksy Tykhy, cofounder of the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group, who was serving a 12-year sentence, died after an operation in Perm Prison camp.

The Helsinki Final Act had sparked a ray of hope which inspired these courageous men and women "to know and act upon their rights and duties." Their noble efforts have been met with continuous harassment and persecution.

Mr. President, although the promise of the Helsinki Final Act has not yet been realized, at the very core of the Helsinki process is the recognition that peace and security can only exist in an atmosphere where human rights flourish. Thus, if we are to perpetuate human rights and promote true peace and genuine security, we must continuously support those who have pursued the lofty ideals of the Helsinki Final Act in the Ukraine and throughout the U.S.S.R. On the occasion of the ninth anniversary of the Helsinki agreement, I reaffirm my commitment to that goal.●

ORDERS FOR FRIDAY

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE AND PERIOD FOR THE TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be a special order in favor of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] of not to exceed 15 minutes, to be followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business until not later than 11 a.m. in which Senators may speak for not more than 3 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, on tomorrow, the Senate will convene at 10 a.m. After the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there will be a special order in favor of one Senator, to be followed by a period for the transaction of routine morning business until 11 a.m. in which Senators may speak for not more than 3 minutes each.

At the conclusion of the time for the transaction of routine morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the pending motion to waive section 303 of the Budget Act in respect to the agriculture appropriations bill.

If other matters can be cleared during the day tomorrow, Mr. President, the leadership will attempt to do so. It is not anticipated that the Senate will be in beyond the normal business hours tomorrow, nor will there be a Saturday session.

Mr. BYRD. I hope the distinguished majority leader will excuse me for interrupting, but on the subject of the business to be transacted tomorrow, is the distinguished majority leader in a position to indicate whether or not there will be any rollcall votes?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am not in a position to say so. I would hazard a guess, based on the last couple of days, that we are not going to get any appropriation bills up right away.

If that is the case, we have a few other things we may be able to do. And there might be a RECORD vote tomorrow. I simply am not in a position to say. But Senators should not assume that there will not be RECORD votes tomorrow. I do hope, however, that we can complete the necessary actions of the Senate by midafternoon tomorrow so that Senators can get away for the weekend.

Mr. BYRD. Perhaps it would help if I could ask the majority leader this question because I think we could then perhaps infer from what his response would be as to whether or not there really will be any rollcall votes other than perhaps a rollcall vote to have the Sergeant at Arms help us get a quorum.

Is it the plan of the distinguished majority leader to stay on this agriculture appropriations bill throughout tomorrow?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I hope not. Since cloture was filed today, and we cannot vote on it until Monday, I hope that we might reach some other measures and dispose of them. The three that come to mind are the military construction bill—I would like to do that, but it may not be possible to do it—women's pension equity, and one nomination on tomorrow's executive calendar that I believe will be noncontroversial. I do not know how to evaluate that, Mr. President, except to say that I do not plan to ask for a RECORD vote on any of these issues, but I cannot assure Senators there will not be a RECORD vote.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the distinguished majority leader. Neither of us can guarantee that there will not be rollcall votes. But if it appears at this point that the Senate is going to stay on the agriculture appropriations bill—and I anticipate that in that event there will be continuing speeches—does that not pretty well rule out the likelihood of rollcall votes on anything other than perhaps a motion to instruct the Sergeant at Arms?

Mr. BAKER. Almost surely. If, indeed, there is an objection to proceeding to some other matter, then the only recourse the leadership on this side would have would be to move, and I say to the minority leader that I do not plan to do that. But I would still hope that we might get to some of these other matters tomorrow. I doubt that on Friday I would be so cantankerous as to try to contrive a procedural vote on a motion to instruct the Sergeant at Arms, and the like. I believe that is as far as I will let the minority leader pull me on a commitment as to whether there will be rollcall votes tomorrow.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I know of no other business to transact. I see no other Senator seeking recognition. I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:26 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Friday, August 3, 1984, at 10 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, August 2, 1984

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Rev. Samuel R. Holder, Dunton Presbyterian Church, South Ozone Park, NY, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we give thanks that Thou hast called our honorable Representatives to lead our country. Bless them, their families, and this session of Congress, we pray.

We are eternally grateful for our Nation, our democracy, and the freedoms we all have. Give us all strength to continue to love and serve each other regardless of our heritage.

We thank Thee for the spirit of America that opens its heart to all. Thou has brought us together regardless of religion, social or secular persuasion.

In the words of an old children's hymn, "Red and yellow, black and white, all are precious in His sight," God loves His children everywhere.

We pray these through the love we share for Thee and for each other. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4952. An act to authorize the Secretary of Defense to provide assistance to certain Indian tribes for expenses incurred for community impact planning activities relating to the planned deployment of the MX missile system in Nevada and Utah in the same manner that State and local governments were provided assistance for such expenses.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4325) "An act to amend part D of title IV of the Social Security Act to assure, through mandatory income withholding, incentive payments to States, and other improvements in the child support enforcement program, that all children in the United States who are in need of assistance in securing financial support from their parents will receive such assistance regardless of their circumstances, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 1428. An act for the relief of the estate of Nell J. Redfield;

H.R. 5890. An act to establish a commission to assist in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr.; and

H.J. Res. 279. Joint resolution expressing the sense of the Congress regarding the reduction of emigration from the Soviet Union.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1841. An act to promote research and development, encourage innovation, stimulate trade, and make necessary and appropriate amendments to the antitrust, patent, and copyright laws; and

S. 2201. An act to convey certain lands to the Zuni Indian Tribe for religious purposes.

REV. SAMUEL R. HOLDER

(Mr. ADDABBO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to call the attention of my colleagues to my good friend, Rev. Samuel Holder who just blessed us with his opening prayer.

Reverend Holder has been the pastor at the Dunton Presbyterian Church, in South Ozone Park, Queens, for over 22 years. A 1959 graduate of Princeton University's Theology School, he is widely regarded in our community of South Ozone Park and throughout the borough of Queens and city of New York, as a scholar and a spokesman of God and of peace.

As president of the Queens Interfaith Clergy for 8 years, and now as honorary president, Reverend Holder has brought understanding between all faiths. And by doing so he has strengthened our community and brought brother closer to brother. His message has always been the same as he so eloquently stated this morning, "red and yellow, black and white, all are precious in his sight." It is essential that we adopt this understanding. We will have to practice Dr. Holder's message if we are to bring about world peace.

Reverend Holder is a widely traveled man. He was part of the first black delegation to be invited to the Soviet Union in 1970 by the Russian Orthodox Church. The following year he went to Israel and met with religious leaders and Jews and Arabs alike.

In his years of devotion to our community and our country, I have noticed a commitment to people that can only be from the heart. He is an integrationist, a mediator, a spokesman, an educator, and a friend to all. God bless him, his wife, the former Erma Lorraine Cowan, and three children, and his wonderful congregation.

INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1985

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 520 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 520

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5399) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Intelligence Community Staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule by titles instead of by sections except for section 107, and each title shall be considered as having been read. Section 107 of the bill shall not be considered for amendment until the remainder of the bill has been considered for amendment in its entirety, and until section 107 is considered for amendment, no amendment to the bill, including an amendment in the nature of a substitute, shall be in order which affects the subject matter of section 107, funding for military and paramilitary operations in Nicaragua. At the expiration of two hours of consideration of section 107 of the bill under the five-minute rule, no further amendments to the bill or to said section shall be in order and the question shall occur on any pending amendment or amendments to section 107. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LATTA], for purposes of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 520 provides for the consideration of H.R. 5399, the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1985. It provides 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

The resolution is an open rule. Under its terms, the amendment process will be divided into two parts. First, with the exception of section 107 which prohibits the use of any authorized funds to support military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule by title instead of by section, and each title shall be considered as having been read. Section 107 shall not be considered for amendment until the remainder of the bill has been considered for amendment in its entirety. Until section 107 is considered for amendment, no amendment to the bill, including an amendment in the nature of a substitute, shall be in order if it affects funding for military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua—the subject matter of section 107.

The rule does not limit the amendments that may be offered. It does, however, impose a time limit of 2 hours on the consideration of amendments to section 107. Under this procedure, the House will be able to fully debate the issue of U.S. support for military or paramilitary activity in Nicaragua, and bring that issue to an orderly resolution.

Finally, the resolution provides one motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5399 authorizes funding for all of the intelligence-related functions of the Federal Government for fiscal year 1985. Much of the contents of the recommendations of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence are classified, and for this reason I will leave a detailed discussion of the bill to Chairman BOLAND. As a member of the committee, however, I want to express to my colleagues my very strong support for this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the rule before members provides a fair and orderly method for considering all aspects of the bill. I therefore request that my colleagues adopt House Resolution 520.

□ 1010

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, when the Rules Committee met to consider this rule both the chairman and the ranking Republican member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence agreed on the rule request. The Rules Committee gave them exactly what they sought. So while there may be partisan differences on the provisions of the bill, there is bipartisan agreement on the provisions of the rule.

The only unusual feature in this rule is the procedure for consideration of the issue of paramilitary operations in Nicaragua. This subject is contained in section 107 of the bill. Under this rule, section 107 will not be considered for amendment until after action has been completed on the remainder of the bill. A maximum of 2 hours is provided for consideration of amendments to section 107. The remainder of the bill, other than section 107, will be considered under an open rule procedure.

Mr. Speaker, while the issue of paramilitary operations in Nicaragua has been considered several times by this House in the last year, circumstances there are constantly changing, and the majority of the House may wish to alter the language in the bill to reflect current circumstances.

At the time of the Rules Committee meeting, the administration provided a policy statement opposing this bill unless it is amended to delete section 107 which prohibits the use of any fiscal year 1985 funds for supporting, directly or indirectly, military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, the President needs to have room to maneuver in this kind of a situation and especially during the present negotiations. We should not take away all of his bargaining chips even before the negotiations are concluded. Not long ago our Secretary of State was in Nicaragua. And in this morning's Washington Post additional negotiations with Nicaragua are reported. The newspaper report is as follows:

MEXICO CITY, August 1.—Nicaraguan and U.S. officials concluded two days of negotiations in a Mexican seaside resort today and diplomats said they expect further such "substantive" discussions to be held.

Conducted under tight security in Manzanillo, the talks have moved beyond the procedural issues that dominated previous meetings here and in Georgia, U.S. diplomats said.

"We see this as a step forward, but not a definitive solution," said a senior Mexican official, adding that host Mexico expects the contacts will lead eventually to "some arrangement" between the two countries. While acknowledging an atmosphere of mutual distrust, Mexican diplomats hailed the new round of talks as a positive development.

The Foreign Ministry, urging both parties to seek "concrete agreements," said it hopes the talks will result in "a bilateral understanding that resolves disagreements and contributes in an effective way to peace in the region." Nicaragua's chief representative in the talks is Deputy Foreign Minister Victor Hugo Tinoco, while the U.S. delegation is headed by Special Ambassador Harry Shlaudeman.

Mr. Speaker, we should negotiate and it is much better for our Government to negotiate without severe limitations, than from a position where the other party knows we are powerless to act.

Mr. Speaker, hopefully today when this matter is concluded, we will not tie the hands of our Government in this very critical situation that is now underway in Nicaragua.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to verify that the rule is certainly in order with regard to the wishes of the minority, and that its granting was just what we wished. The Committee on Rules has treated us, I think, with ultimate fairness with respect to the matter.

It is unusual, however, and I would like to advise my colleagues, that although there are 2 hours set aside for discussion of section 107, under the 5-minute rule there is no prohibition, of course, to the discussion of section 107 during general debate and, of course, it will be mentioned in the process of general debate.

Mr. LATTA. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I support the rule so that the House may proceed to consider, and I hope to improve on, H.R. 5399, the Intelligence Authorization Act of fiscal year 1985.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues on the other side of the aisle for their comments in support of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, first let me rise in support of the rule. As a member of the House Intelligence Committee, I think that the rule is ultimately a very fair one and I think it will give us a chance to debate the issue.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this moment to explain that I was unavoidably absent last evening from the House when it considered H.R. 5151, the Hunger Relief Act.

Were I here, Mr. Speaker, on rollcall 341, I would have voted "aye," and were I here on rollcall 342, I would have voted "aye."

Let me explain briefly the reason I was not here. I do not know whether this reason amounts to official business, but it was certainly very important business. My wife and I were celebrating our silver wedding anniversary, 25 years of marriage and, of course, after 25 years of such a milestone event, I think it would have been wrong if I had not fully celebrated that event with her, and we did. I do not think anything should interfere, even a very important bill like H.R. 5151.

So let me take this opportunity also, which the Speaker has kindly afforded me, to thank Helen for having been such a wonderful wife, a wonderful mother, and a wonderful companion over these past 25 years.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, we extend our congratulations to the Mazzolis.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolutin 520 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5399.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5399) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, the Intelligence Community Staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, with Mr. MURTHA in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBINSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5399, the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1985, is the seventh recommendation by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, in its 7-year lifetime, to authorize funds for the entire U.S. intelligence effort. Like its predecessor bills, it provides no detail of either the sums or the personnel it would authorize for the great majority of intelligence programs. Those figures are to be found in the classified schedule of authorizations, which is incorporated by reference into the bill itself, and in the classified annex to the committee's report accompanying the bill. Both have been available to Members of the House for their examination in the Intelligence Committee's offices since June 6.

Mr. Chairman, the committee's review of the fiscal year 1985 budget request posed many difficult but necessary choices. Decisions were reached in a bipartisan and thoroughly cooperative effort. The worldwide, geometric growth in the complexity of the intelligence collection environment made the committee's task particularly serious. There is a need for intelligence capabilities to keep pace with such expansions. This must be reconciled with the stringencies imposed by the budget resolution. In the end, the committee has recommended a reduction from the President's budget request, a reduction which is similar in percentage to that taken by the Committee on Armed Services from the overall Defense budget.

It is our judgment that the recommendations of H.R. 5399 represent a reasonable balance between needed capabilities, and prudent cost. The recommendation of the committee permits real growth and improvements in intelligence collection. Nonetheless, the action of the committee sends a strong message to the administration that this budget request, as well as future budget requests, must stand the test of fiscal responsibility, when seen in light of the threatening size of the Federal deficit.

Throughout the committee's review of the budget, one controversy has arisen. It is familiar to all Members of the House. It concerns the issue of continued funding for the insurgents in Nicaragua. Members of the committee continue to differ on this issue. The majority of the committee, as it has before, recommended complete termination of this activity. Despite that disagreement, the committee's bipartisan character remains strong. We have not been torn asunder, press accounts to the contrary notwithstanding. Our security record remains excellent.

Once again, let me emphasize that the disagreement which the committee has reached with the administration of this issue does not threaten the consensus within the committee on the character or the other activities of the intelligence agencies themselves. This is a policy dispute. There is no accusation that the intelligence agencies of this Government are out of control or unresponsive to the laws and Government of this country. Rather, they are the agent of the President in this particular and unfortunate aspect of his Central American policy. Nor does the disagreement which the committee has with the President go to the legitimacy of covert action or whole fabric of U.S. policy in Central America. It confines itself to a disagreement on the effectiveness and appropriate aims of a particular covert action to overthrow the government of another nation.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to authorizing appropriations for all U.S. intelligence activities, and prohibiting the obligation or expenditure of any funds for military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua, H.R. 5399 provides other authorities to the U.S. intelligence community. It authorizes $20.3 million and 232 personnel for the intelligence community staff, authorizes $114.5 million for the completion of a second headquarters building at the CIA complex in Langley, VA, and $14.5 million for the counterterrorism program of the FBI. The bill authorizes $99.3 million for the Central Intelligence retirement and disability system, that retirement system available to intelligence officers or employers who serve overseas for long periods of time.

Finally, the bill provides authority to the Director of Central Intelligence to employ agency personnel as special policemen to act only within agency installations to protect agency personnel and property. This authority arises as a result of the inability of the General Services Administration to provide adequate numbers of security guards at the CIA headquarters complex in Langley. Legal authority is necessary because the National Security Act of 1947 provides that the CIA may not exercise "police, subpoena, law enforcement powers, or internal security functions."

Because of this restriction, which has applied since the establishment of the CIA, the committee made clear in the bill that CIA special policemen must be "clearly identifiable" as security personnel and that their authority can go no further than the premises controlled by the Agency.

The committee has also urged the CIA to provide opportunities to those GSA guards presently serving at CIA installations to become employees of the CIA and continue as security guards at its facilities.

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize to the House today, as I have in the past, that the bipartisan consensus that produced H.R. 5399 is a tribute to the cooperation, integrity, and the very hard work of the ranking minority member of the committee, KEN ROBINSON of Virginia. KEN is retiring at the end of the 98th Congress. I know the last 7 of his 14 years—those which he has served on the Intelligence Committee—have been hard ones for him. He has done an enormous amount of work, both as ranking minority member of the committee, and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Program and Budget Authorization. The House and this Nation owe him sincere thanks for his dedicated, professional and very patriotic work on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to pay tribute to the hard work and contributions the other members of the Program and Budget Authorization Subcommittee—NORM MINETA of California, DAVE MCCURDY of Oklahoma, LEE HAMILTON of Indiana, BILL YOUNG of Florida, and BOB STUMP of Arizona. All of them worked hard and long to make H.R. 5399 the bill that it is today.

Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee was ably assisted in its work on the fiscal year 1985 budget by its budget staff, Jim Bush, Marty Faga, Duane Andrews, Annette Smiley, and Carol Thompson. Mr. Bush and Ms. Smiley have since left the committee for other positions. The committee will miss them and thanks them and all the staff for their dedicated and thoroughly professional work. The staff of the subcommittee is truly nonpartisan. They are as qualified a group of program and budget analysts as can be found in the entire U.S. intelligence community.

I also add my thanks to the other members of the committee: the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI]; the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER]; the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES]; the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY]; the newest member of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON]; the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WHITEHURST]; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us, H.R. 5399, authorizes appropriations for fiscal year 1985 for the conduct of intelligence activities by the departments and agencies within the U.S. intelligence community. The activities for which this bill authorizes funding ensure that the President, the Congress and other senior policymakers will have the timely and accurate information they need on the capabilities, activities, and intentions of foreign powers. The defense of this Nation and of its interests in matters of international concern depends to a great extent upon the availability of good intelligence to our elected and appointed leaders. I believe it is fair to say that the members of the Intelligence Committee are unanimous in the opinion that effective intelligence capabilities are essential to the safety and well-being of the Nation.

Guided by this basic consensus, the Intelligence Committee thoroughly scrutinized the programs of our intelligence agencies, and reached carefully considered decisions concerning recommendations to the House of appropriate levels of funding and personnel for those programs. The committee made the vast majority of these important decisions with very little partisan controversy. The one area about which such total controversy exists is section 107 of the bill, which prohibits certain assistance to the Nicaraguan resistance. The rule governing consideration of H.R. 5399 specifically provides time for debate on the subject of section 107 later during the 5-minute rule.

Because the effectiveness of intelligence programs depends in part upon their secrecy, the details of the programs and the associated levels of funding and manpower must, of course, remain concealed. I fully support our committee's recommendation not to disclose publicly the amounts of funds requested by the President or the amounts which H.R. 5399 would make available. Therefore, I will not discuss specific committee recommendations. Details of these recommendations are contained in the classified annex to our committee report on H.R. 5399 which, along with the classified schedule of authorizations referred to in the bill, has been available for review by all Members of the House since June 6.

For fiscal year 1985 the administration requested an increase in intelligence funding from 1984 levels. But in reviewing the request we were not persuaded that all of the specific programs were fully warranted. Although the committee is recommending significant reductions in the requested amounts consistent with the reductions imposed upon other national security activities, I am pleased to say that the bill will allow for some real growth in intelligence programs. The committee's recommendations would delete or defer certain programs and in other cases would increase program funding. The committee did not arrive at these decisions easily. Considerable thought, review and discussion preceded the committee decision to recommend a budget reduction. We were careful to ensure that essential intelligence capabilities will be maintained and that meritorious new programs will be funded. In particular, the committee examined the need for effective tactical intelligence capabilities to support our Armed Forces. The committee's review of the Grenada operation resulted in a number of specific steps to reduce some shortfalls in tactical intelligence support capabilities, especially in the area of communications.

The intelligence authorization bill contains one new administrative provision, which the chairman also mentioned. The provision grants to the Director of Central Intelligence the authority to designate CIA security officers to replace the General Services Administration guards now protecting CIA installations and personnel. The CIA security personnel will exercise the same powers and duties as the GSA officers currently exercise, but only within CIA installations. This authority is necessary to provide more adequate security at CIA facilities. In addition to improving CIA security, this transfer of responsibility for CIA facilities from GSA to CIA will result in some cost savings.

I believe that H.R. 5399, on the whole, represents a balanced and effective allocation of scarce resources to U.S. intelligence programs. I strongly oppose section 107 of the bill, which prohibits certain assistance to the Nicaraguan resistance. But I fully support the remainder of the bill, which provides the resources needed in 1985 for the effective U.S. intelligence programs essential to the security of the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to bring to the attention of the House that this is not a Nicaraguan or a Central American aid authorization. It is an intelligence authorization, and in my view, not a proper vehicle for such an explosive political issue resolution, because it covers so much more.

One final matter that I wish to bring to the attention of the House is the departure of many of the members of the Intelligence Committee at the end of the current Congress. Under House rule 48, Members of the House may serve continuously on the Intelligence Committee only for 6 years. Eight of the fourteen members currently serving on the committee will not be eligible for reappointment by the Speaker in the next Congress. I would recommend to the House that some formula be found by which smoother transitions of membership would occur on the Intelligence Committee, so that a mass departure of members will not occur again. We need to ensure better continuity on the committee of knowledge and experience in intelligence matters.

As the chairman has said, this is my last Congress, and the bill we are now considering is the last intelligence authorization bill that it will be my privilege to have labored over. Arriving, as we have for the past 6 years, at bipartisan consensus on the vast majority of the intelligence programs vital to our national security has not been a simple task. In large measure, one man has been responsible for the great success of those efforts—our chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts, EDWARD P. BOLAND. The committee has the enormous advantage of the statesmanlike leadership of this true gentleman, our disagreement regarding section 107 notwithstanding. This House and the people of this Nation owe him a great debt of gratitude.

The chairman has also referred in his remarks to the dedication of the other members of this subcommittee on program and budget, NORM MINETA, DAVE MCCURDY, LEE HAMILTON, BILL YOUNG, and BOB STUMP, and I concur enthusiastically with his remarks regarding their contribution.

I would also like to say a special word of thanks to the staff of the Subcommittee on Program and Budget Authorization, whose diligent efforts in the years since our committee's creation have been crucial to the effective fulfillment of our intelligence authorization role. Jim Bush, Marty Faga, Duane Andrews, Annette Smiley, and Carol Thompson of the budget staff provided invaluable support to the subcommittee. Jim and Annette have moved on to new positions, and we wish them every success.

It has been a high privilege to serve with my colleagues on the Intelligence Committee in terms of attempting to rebuild U.S. intelligence capabilities, which had suffered so much during the 1960's and early 1970's. When someone in some distant year writes the history of the Congress of the past decade, it will perhaps be recorded that the intelligence authorization process, created by the Congress in 1978 and followed in subsequent years, proved to be the engine of progress in revitalizing the U.S. intelligence community to make the American people safer in an increasingly hostile world.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1030

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Virginia for his kind remarks and his personal reference to me. Coming as it does from him, with the magnificent character and personality that he has, I want to say that it is all the more deeply appreciated.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he might desire to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for this time. I requested it for the purpose of entering into a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the committee, my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman, in its report on House Resolution 467, a resolution of inquiry concerning the Central Intelligence Agency and death squads in El Salvador, the Intelligence Committee states that it "has urged, and the Director of Central Intelligence has undertaken to conduct, a review of all Agency relationships with the aim of providing a reliable and comprehensive report on the subject of death squad activity, intelligence collection activity thereon, and any possible improper CIA involvement therein."

My questions to the gentleman are: Has the effort to prepare such a report been undertaken?

If so, what is the status of that effort?

If the report has been completed, what may be said with respect to its findings?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. STUDDS. Certainly.

Mr. BOLAND. The report to which the gentleman refers has been completed. Its scope is limited to reviewing CIA operational relationships in El Salvador to determine if any improper relationship does indeed or has existed. By improper, I mean any relationship which supported or encouraged death squad activity.

The CIA report concludes that the Agency has not engaged in activities supporting or encouraging death squad activity. The committee is examining the report carefully but it will not necessarily be bound by the scope of the CIA report. Rather, the committee will, during the course of its own inquiries, explore all CIA-death squad allegations such as those raised by the Progressive magazine, the Christian Science Monitor and other publications. Those inquiries, which are now beginning, aim toward a committee statement on this subject by the end of this Congress.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, in a report issued on September 22, 1982, regarding "U.S. Intelligence Performance on Central America," the Committee noted that, to that point, "the United States has lacked an understanding of rightist violence comparable to the intelligence which has been provided about the organization and activities of the insurgents." That report cited specifically the failure of the intelligence community to analyze in a systematic or serious fashion a collection of documents that had been in the possession of former Major Roberto D'Aubuisson when he was arrested in May 1980. These documents included a log of meetings, expenditures, arms lists with references to silencers and other special equipment, names, addresses, and phone numbers of rightist Salvadoran businessmen, and various propaganda fliers discrediting U.S. policy in El Salvador and urging support for a coup. It is argued by some that these documents provide important clues with respect to the involvement of Major D'Aubuisson in the assassination of Archbishop Romero in March 1980.

I have two questions:

How would the gentleman characterize the quality of intelligence information with respect to the problem of rightwing violence in El Salvador at the present time?

Second, has the intelligence community conducted a serious analysis of the D'Aubuisson documents since the Intelligence Committee issued its report almost 2 years ago?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUDDS. Certainly.

Mr. BOLAND. The problem with intelligence collection on right wing violence in El Salvador is that we do not collect enough intelligence. It can sometimes be very difficult to collect, but U.S. intelligence does not know as much as we would like to know.

The quality of the intelligence U.S. intelligence does collect varies. Some is excellent, some good, some not too useful. Quality could be improved, but both more and better intelligence are needed to address this important topic.

I am unaware of any serious analysis of the so-called D'Aubuisson documents by the intelligence community to this date.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Finally, on January 30, 1984, columnist Jack Anderson reported that the CIA had for 30 years been funding—and was continuing to fund—conservative Guatemalan businessman Mario Sandoval Alarcon.

Is the Intelligence Committee confident that it knows whether or not the allegations contained in the Anderson column are accurate?

Can the gentleman provide assurances of any nature to the House with respect to the possibility that the CIA did—or is still—providing assistance of any kind to Sandoval?

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUDDS. Certainly.

Mr. BOLAND. I will not comment on the specific allegations of the Jack Anderson column.

U.S. intelligence is proscribed from encouraging or supporting death squad activity anywhere.

The committee examined the allegations of the Jack Anderson column, has reviewed relevant intelligence and has determined what it believes to be the truth as to each allegation. Clearly death squads exist in Guatemala, and just as clearly certain notorious figures directed their activity.

On the basis of its review of the allegations in question, the committee has no reason to believe that the agency has violated proscriptions against encouraging or supporting death squads in Guatemala.

I thank the gentleman for bringing this matter to the attention of the committee.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished chairman for his time and his response to my questions, and also, if I may take this occasion to thank him for the extraordinary courage and leadership he has shown on the question of U.S. policy in Central America in general.

Mr. BOLAND. I thank the gentleman, my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we are now witnessing the slow strangulation by the majority party of America's fundamental commitment to democracy in Central America. Section 107 of the legislation before us today includes language which goes way beyond the Boland-Zablocki language of 2 years ago that governed covert activities in Nicaragua. Under Boland-Zablocki no funds could be used to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua. Under this bill the CIA could not even help fund the interdiction of arms flowing from Nicaragua into El Salvador.

This bill is aimed at denying U.S. aid to the Contras fighting against the unelected Sandinista junta in Nicaragua. But the language of this bill goes much further. It denies aid to any group which might attempt to oppose any government of Nicaragua.

Suppose the Sandinista junta continues to tighten its control over the people of Nicaragua, completely closes down La Prensa, the only so-called free press, or outlaws the Catholic church because it is opposed to the junta—as it is. Then suppose they decide to outlaw all political parties because the upcoming "election" will, as they say, "establish beyond a shadow of doubt that the Nicaraguan people do not want any other parties in their country." And then, suppose that the Nicaraguan people, chafing under the growing totalitarianism, urged on by men and women committed to democracy, decided to fight.

Would we be able to help them in their struggle? Under this bill the answer is no.

Suppose then that like Angola, Ethiopia, or Afghanistan, the Sandinistas call upon their Communist brethren to come to their aid, to send Cuban combat troops, perhaps even the Soviet combat brigade stationed in Cuba. Would we then be able to aid people fighting against this tyranny? Under this bill the answer is, once again, unequivocally no. The bill would leave the United States with only one option—commitment of military troops—which no one, I repeat, no one on this side of the aisle wants to see happen.

In other words the majority party is saying today, that there is absolutely nothing, under any circumstances, they are willing to do to aid Nicaraguans who are forced to fight for their freedom.

This bill, in the final analysis, states that the only "acceptable" thing for the United States to do, is to do nothing.

In desperation to adhere to this "do nothing" policy, my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are now deliberately ignoring basic realities in Nicaragua. The Sandinista junta is becoming more oppressive—civil, politician, and human rights are fewer then when they took power. Other groups which took part in the revolution have in standard Communist fashion been dispensed with one by one, until only the Sandinistas remain.

Which country is providing safe haven, weapons, military training, and official support of leftist guerrillas fighting against the democratically elected Government of El Salvador? It is the Sandinistas of Nicaragua. Under this bill we can do nothing about that.

I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND], to enter into a colloquy, and I would ask if the gentleman might answer some questions.

In May of 1983 in your report, in the intelligence authorization bill, the committee said on page 6 that it believes that the intelligence available to it continues to support the following judgments with certainty:

One, a major portion of the arms and other materials sent by Cuba and other Communist countries to the Salvadoran insurgents, transits Nicaragua with the permission and assistance of the Sandinistas.

Is that true today, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOLAND. As the gentleman knows, that particular reference in the report has been used many times in the debate on the military power and military operations in Nicaragua, and that precisely was the judgment of the committee. That generally is the judgment of the committee today.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Did you answer yes or no to that question?

Mr. BOLAND. You have reference to the report that was made by this committee in 1983?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Right.

Mr. BOLAND. Pointing to and indicating that there is clear and convincing evidence that military equipment is going to El Salvador and transiting through Nicaragua; is that the question?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Right. Is that true today? Because I see there is nothing in the report.

Mr. BOLAND. That is true today, as it was at the time of that report. The evidence is less concrete, more circumstantial, but it still supports that conclusion. We have never backed away from that statement.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. That is fine. Let me ask another question, and I appreciate it. I only have a certain amount of time.

Another statement which was made with great certainty by the committee in May 1983 was that the Salvadoran insurgents rely on the use of its sites in Nicaragua, some of which are located in Managua itself, for communications, command and control, and for the logistics to conduct their financial, material, and propaganda activities.

Is that true today?

Mr. BOLAND. That was true in 1983 and it is true today. My answer would be yes.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Along the same lines, Mr. Chairman, with certainty the committee stated that the Sandinista leadership sanctions and directly facilitates all of these functions. And, further, Nicaragua provides a range of other support activities, including secure transit of insurgents to and from Cuba, and assistance to the insurgents in planning their activities in El Salvador.

Is that true today also?

Mr. BOLAND. It was true then. It is true today. And the committee has never backed away from that statement.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. As I recall also in the report the committee suggested we set up radar or sensing barriers in between Nicaragua and El Salvador. I was wondering if the chairman could give me an update on the radar that they suggested and the sensing that they suggested as an alternative to the interdiction of arms through covert activities.

Would the chairman give an update on the radar and the fencing that you suggested in May 1983?

Mr. BOLAND. As the gentleman knows, the whole basis of the war in Nicaragua and the flow of arms into El Salvador from Nicaragua, was originally arms interdiction. That has been the nub of the whole question since this war started. But let me respond to the gentleman and let me indicate to him that there has been little or no interdiction of arms by anyone into El Salvador.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Has there been any radar?

Mr. BOLAND. Let me also say to the gentleman that the administration opposed any arms interdiction program in H.R. 2760, but this is also an area that we can take care of in the 2-hour debate on section 107. And I will not respond to any more questions of the gentleman. He can wait until we get into section 107.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. It is my time. I do not understand. It is my time that we are eating up and using up and the chairman will not respond to my questions. I do not recall in my 8 years that the chairman has refused to answer questions when it is on our time on such an important issue.

My question is has anybody requested the radar; has anybody requested funding for fencing? Where are the fences? Where is the radar?

That is all I want to know, because there is nothing in the report today or in this thin public document that says anything about section 107 except no funds shall be used period. I just want to know what happened.

Mr. BOLAND. If the gentleman will yield I will be happy to answer.

It is the judgment of the majority of the members of this committee that this has been a senseless war in Nicaragua, and they have witnessed little or no emphasis by the administration to the interdiction of arms into El Salvador. Their attention has been paid instead to an insurgency committed to the overthrow of the Sandinista government. That is my response.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Sure.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman is getting into a highly sensitive area and there are questions he is asking that simply cannot be answered fully and specifically on the floor of the House.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Is the gentleman suggesting we go into secret session?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] has expired.

□ 1050

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP].

Mr. STUMP. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to commend our chairman of the Intelligence Committee for an outstanding job.

I would especially like to commend my ranking member, the gentleman from Virgina [Mr. ROBINSON]. I think there are few people that have been more dedicated in any effort in this Congress than Mr. ROBINSON has been in his defense of the intelligence community and I think he commands the respect of all of us for such an outstanding job as ranking member on this committee, and I personally thank you.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the gentleman from Arizona for his very flattering comments. He has been a valuable member of this committee. I will certainly miss the association with him when I leave the Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I hope my remarks are not deemed intemperate because they are said with some feeling. I know we all think we can identify our national interests in Central America and protect them but I just think section 107 is a disaster.

It forbids any assistance to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua who are trying to recapture the revolution that they believed in when it was fought against Somoza. I tried to think of a word to describe section 107. There just is not any. Silly, foolish, dangerous, tragic, naive, sad; it is all of those things and even more.

But if you ever doubted that history repeats itself you have validation of that aphorism today. Back in 1956 in Hungary when the freedom fighters rose to resist the Soviet Union, the Soviet tanks rolled in and we were spectators except for the Voice of America urging them to fight on.

In 1961, the Bay of Pigs, train 'em, arm 'em, encourage 'em and then walk away, pull the rug, pull the plug, abandon them.

Saigon, 1975, I can still see our helicopters lifting off the Embassy roof with the tears and the arms outstretched of the people who believed in us, who trusted in us, recessed into the distance as we abandoned them.

And now, train the Contras, urge them to get in those mountains and fight for freedom and then abandon them as we are doing today and as we have done before.

Arm them and abandon them on a party line vote. No food, no medicine, no ammunition, not even moral support. We barely leave them a prayer.

Now we will hear about the legal case, we will hear that we abandon, we yield the moral high ground when we support a secret covert war in Nicaragua.

These are the same people who condemn us for our resistance toward submitting this controversy to the World Court. I am waiting to see Iraq and Iran and Lebanon and Israel and Syria bring their causes to this World Court, this arm of the United Nations, where a Soviet judge and a Polish judge and a Syrian judge sit.

I measure the sincerity of people by their complaints that we did not submit our foreign policy to the judgment of the World Court.

But the legal case, Prof. John Norton Moore of the University of Virginia has made the legal case, and has pointed out that from the time of the Code of Hammurabi in 1750 B.C. to the U.N. Declaration, the U.N. Charter, to the Rio Treaty the law has been that a nation may not use force and aggression against another nation; but, if they do, the right of self-defense, both individual and collective, is a part of the law.

And when Nicaragua continues to assault and invade and aggress El Salvador, they have a right and we, as their ally and as a defender of democracy and freedom, have a duty to assist the Salvadorians to resist that exporting of subversion, the exporting of the "revolution without boundaries."

And so, this right of self-defense is a part of the law. International law is not a one-way street where the Nicaraguans, the Sandinista junta can claim the protection of international law while they violate that self same law every minute, every second of every day.

If you do not think the Nicaraguans are trying to overthrow the democratically elected Government of El Salvador, I have got some retirement property in Florida that I would like to sell you, and I really do.

Now those who argue that aiding a covert force in Nicaragua is yielding the moral high ground, I suggest are the descendants of General Burgoyne and Lord Cornwallis, who wanted their troops, in their red jackets, to line up on one knee and do battle to defend the great British Empire in the colonies.

And you know what is fascinating and would take an abnormal pyschologist to explain, the Democratic Party, the liberal regnant elite that dominates the party, have a schizophrenic view on aiding Contras.

I have here Newsweek, July 2, "Congressional liberals call for Afghan arms," and I am quoting; "in a striking role reversal, congressional Democrats are pushing," hang on to your seats, folks:

> For greater covert United States military aid to Afghan freedom fighters. Afghan rebel lobbyists in Washington who claim the CIA's 4-year, $325 million aid package has been woefully inadequate to support their war against Soviet invaders, have won sympathizers among liberals in the House and in the Senate. This week, Illinois Democrat, Representative PAUL SIMON will hold a press conference to criticize the Reagan administration for insufficient military aid to the Afghan insurgents and will introduce a resolution praising the heroism of the rebels.

Well, I suggest in Afghanistan, the killing is going on inside Afghanistan. They are not exporting their revolution to Pakistan or to Iran; the Government of Afghanistan under Mr. Karmal is as legitimate as the Sandinistas who got into power by lying to the OAS and to us in 1979.

Why is it good and noble and moral high ground maintenance to support the rebels in Afghanistan but wrong and immoral and ignoble to support the Contras, the rebels fighting for freedom, and democracy and self-determination in Nicaragua?

As I say, maybe it is because Afghanistan is 9,000 miles away and El Salvador is only 900 miles away. Maybe that makes the big difference. And what is your solution to the dirty Leninist, Gestapo of the left war that is going on in Central America? Your answer is negotiate, negotiate; paper and words.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] is recognized for an additional 4 minutes.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentlemen.

It is elementary that negotiations are a reflection of the power relationships between the negotiating parties and if you have no power relationship you are not going to get very far in negotiating. History and commonsense tell us this much.

Now President Carter thought as soon as he got into office and his party controlled the House and the Senate that he was going to tame Fidel Castro and just negotiate our problems away.

> People of good will sitting around the table can resolve their difficulties, never mind that he is a Communist idealogue who wants this revolution without borders to succeed, never mind that. We are so persuasive if we just talk, why he will come over.

So what did Mr. Carter get and Mr. Wayne Smith? Well, they got more Cuban troops in Angola, they got the Mariel Boat Lift and they got Marxist-Leninist Nicaragua, that is what they have got for their trust in negotiating without any reference to power relationships.

So put your trust in words and paper treaties and bring us all through the looking glass to peace and justice in Central America.

Why do we do this? Why do we engage in this self-flagellation that insists America is always wrong? Because the litmus test for being a good McGovern liberal, the ticket of admission to the ruling elite of the majority party is suspicion of and hostilities toward any nonleftist government in the world.

The preferred tyranny is always to the left.

I cite Zimbabwe as an example. Do not hold your breath waiting to hear about human rights violations in Zimbabwe. But oh, you will hear him "in extenso" from the gentleman of the left about El Salvador. We demand a standard of perfection from our non-Marxist allies that is unattainable.

Well, you know what this bill does, I say to my dear friends who are sincere, but sadly mistaken, it makes a gift, two gifts. You give to the Sandinistas as a reward for exporting revolution, security, safety, and sanctuary.

And you give to the Mesquita Indians and the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, you give them despair. You thrust on them despair and abandonment; and sanctuary to the exporters of revolution.

I do not choose to have my name on such a document. They say prayer can move mountains. That is all we are leaving the freedom fighters in Nicaragua—prayer and the mountains.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the legislation before us today is important to our country. It is important to our security and that of the free world. As free men, we have the right to support democratic institutions in this hemisphere. We have an obligation to help the struggling governments which represent progress and support freedom. A moral commitment is at stake here. Yet, regrettably, the bill before us contains language that curtails our ability to do the job.

Our country shares a common history, common interests, and a belief in democratic self-determination with many of the countries in Central America. The concepts of freedom of speech, personal liberty, free elections, freedom of worship, and human rights are traditions which we share with our neighbors to the south. Our friends in this hemisphere are proud of their national independence and self-determination. We must always work to foster the growth of these values which we hold so near and dear.

We must never forget that democracy is vitally important in this hemisphere. Human rights and personal freedoms do matter in this part of the globe. We must always be careful not to stunt their growth. What is happening today in El Salvador to human rights and personal freedoms? What is happening to the hopes and desires of the millions of peasants in El Salvador who seek a better life for themselves?

There is a wholesale violation of their rights by the Nicaraguan-backed Salvadoran rebels. They claim they are "freedom fighters" liberating the peasants. In fact, they are hurting the masses by destroying the Salvadoran economic infrastructure. Bridges, powerlines, dams, and factories are being destroyed along with school busses and innocent people. Young boys are being forced to join the rebel ranks. What will become of free elections and the free press if Marxism-Leninism triumphs in that country? What will happen to freedom of religion and the Catholic church in El Salvador? Will there be freedom of speech and opposition parties if communism is allowed to reign supreme?

The Nicaraguan backers of this so-called revolution believe that they have the right to bring down the freely elected Duarte government. Major changes have occurred in El Salvador during the past few years. It has moved along the road to democracy. Yet, the Nicaraguans believe they have the right to export their own failed revolution and their repressive system to that struggling democracy. We all know that the two countries are very different from a political perspective.

What has the Nicaraguan Government given to its people? What about the broken promises? Have they held free elections? The sham elections which the Sandinistas are planning to hold this November have been rejected outright by the major opposition parties. The Sandinistas do not want an election challenge. They merely want to ratify their dictatorship. They don't want to end their state of emergency, nor give access to the state-controlled media.

How free are the opposition political parties? Let's look at what Commandante Ortega has done to the church in his country. He set up a counter church to ensure the demise of the Catholic church and insulted His Holiness the Pope during the papal visit. Priests have been harassed and deported. What is the human rights record of Nicaragua? What about the young Nicaraguan students who demonstrated against the Sandinistas and were later killed? What about the cases of torture, disappearances, and the flight of the Miskito Indians? Why the massive military buildup that started long before anyone heard of the Contras?

The Sandinistas have built the largest and best equipped military force in the region. They have developed an extremely potent offensive capability with firepower and mobility. It is unprecedented in Central America. Is there any wonder that Nicaragua's neighbors see that country as a serious threat to their security? Nicaragua is the primary source of instability and the major obstacle to peace in the region. It is out of place in this hemisphere.

What do the Nicaraguan people think about the police state they live in? Since 1979, over 200,000 out of a total population of about 2.5 million have fled. The Sandinistas have threatened to export their revolution all the way to the Rio Grande. Failure to stand fast now will trigger a floodtide of additional refugees into our country from Central America that will make the current influx seem like a ripple.

Just who are the Contras? Are they merely soldiers of fortune? Not quite. Many of them who now oppose the Sandinistas were active in the struggle against Somoza. They did not oppose the Sandinistas until the military buildup was well underway. These former supporters of the revolution did not openly oppose Ortega until they realized the Sandinistas had no intention of allowing democracy to develop. The rebellion of the Nicaraguan people is being generated and led by the Nicaraguan people themselves, who seek to gain the freedoms and rights they were promised 5 years ago.

Both Commandante Ortega and Castro have one thing in common: Both of them betrayed their revolutions. Both claimed not to be Communists and both promised that they would build free and open democratic societies. They deceived their own freedom-loving people as well as their neighbors in the region. Is there any wonder that the genuine Nicaraguan Nationalists who originally supported the revolution now feel betrayed?

In the past year, the Sandinistas have come under pressure that has given them second thoughts. They are concerned about our country's determination to resist aggression and support our friends. Commandante Ortega has made a few gestures, but no real changes have been made. He is playing a clever time-buying game. They believe their tactics will work. If our country takes the pressure off the Nicaraguan Government now, they will be free to consolidate their control over the Nicaraguan people and then focus all of their energies on subverting their neighbors in the entire region.

This is a serious issue. As a democratic Nation in a basically democratic hemisphere, we have an obligation to foster democracies in this region. We have a moral commitment to help struggling democracies such as El Salvador move along the road toward full democracy. We cannot abandon countries like El Salvador, Costa Rica, and Honduras to Communist insurgencies which promise much but deliver very little.

We must not stand idly by and watch the Sandinistas export Marxism in this hemisphere, destroying the democratic traditions which we are trying to nurture. My colleagues, the choice is before us today. Do we want a democratic Central America or a Marxist-Leninist one? It is my hope that before this bill becomes law, the importance of aid to the democratic forces in Nicaragua will have been recognized and aid for them will be included in the legislation.

● Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, this is the seventh year that the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Armed Services Committee worked together to report the authorization bill for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the intelligence community.

As the Members will recall, the Armed Services Committee shares responsibility for authorizing certain elements in the intelligence authorization bill with regard principally to intelligence-related activities for the Department of Defense, and I am most pleased to report on the continued excellent working relationship with, and cooperation of, the select committee members and staff in arriving at complete agreement on all items of joint responsibility.

As part 2 of the report states, the results of our recommendations are classified and are included in the classified annex to the report on H.R. 5399 prepared by the select committee.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I commend the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts for his cooperation this year as in the past with regard to our joint responsibilities in support of intelligence programs.●

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. Chairman, today we are faced with a choice. Either we can pursue a policy that reaffirms our moral commitment to demonstrate government and respect for human rights while helping to protect a struggling democracy from leftist aggression or we can turn our backs on those who only desire to attain the freedom and liberty we so often take for granted.

As elsewhere in the world, we support democratic reform, human rights, and economic development in Central America. In fact, for every $1 provided in security assistance, over $3 are provided for economic improvement in the region. But for such development to occur, the threat of violence must be stopped. It is because of this that we must support President Reagan in his efforts to stem the growing violence being exported by the Marxist government of Nicaragua.

To be sure, there are problems with some of the regimes currently governing in the region. Human rights abuses are, of course, anathema to the basic values embodied in our way of life. But unlike here at home, democracy is a new phenomenon in Central America. Decades of social and economic injustices have left a heavy legacy of antidemocratic traditions. It is unfair to compare the shaky political climate in those troubled lands to the stable situation that we here in America enjoy. Unfortunately, democracy will not be achieved overnight, and it will not be achieved without U.S. support.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the Nicaraguan junta has clearly shown the world its definition of human rights and freedom. Ask the Miskito Indians, whose very way of life is under attack by "reformers" in Managua, just what the Nicaraguan junta means to them.

Ask the Catholic church—the same church that was in the forefront of trying to topple Somoza—what the Nicaraguan junta means to them.

Ask the Nicaraguan press—or what's left of it—just what the Nicaraguan junta means to them.

And Mr. Chairman, if we are to turn our backs on our friends who occupy our own backyard, what are our allies halfway around the globe to think of America's willingness to stand fast with them?

Opponents of the President constantly resurrect the ghost of Vietnam when criticizing the administration's Central American policies. Central America, however, is not Vietnam. Vietnam did not sit astride our Panama Canal lifeline. Vietnam did not directly threaten our southern flank. And Vietnam did not provide a heaven for revolutionaries to gleefully perch on our doorstep. Raising the specter of "another Vietnam" provides convenient cover for dereliction of duty. Unfortunately, the proximity of Central America leaves us no room to simply run, hide, and pretend the threat will go away.

At a time when the Soviet Union is giving five times more military assistance to Cuba and Nicaragua than the United States is giving to all of Latin America, we must not lose sight of reality—the reality of millions of "foot people" fleeing possible Communist governments in El Salvador, Honduras, and even Mexico; the reality of our borders being overrun by millions of hungry refugees who only desire to live in peace; and the reality of hostile Soviet satellite governments sitting astride the Rio Grande. Closing our eyes and wishing the threat away may temporarily work elsewhere, but to abrogate our duty here in our own back yard does not bode well for the future of a Nation such as ours.●

The facts paint a different picture of the so-called anti-Sandinist "freedom fighters." In 1983 alone, more than 300 civilian noncombatants died in Contra raids. One hundred—literacy teachers, health-care workers, farm administrators, and church officials—were specifically targeted by the Contras.

This year, the covert war against the government—and the people—of Nicaragua has escalated. An April 3 attack on the village of Waslala in central Nicaragua left 37 campesinos dead and 210 missing.

On June 1, the U.S.-backed Democratic National Force [FDN] raided the northern city of Ocotal. Seven civilians were killed, and Ocotal's primary sources of employment, food, and power—its lumber mill, grain storage silos, and utility station—were destroyed. For the people of Ocotal, according to an American Maryknoll sister living in the border town, the "terror, the trauma, and general suffering" were beyond description.

Americas Watch, in a recent report, concluded that "the FDN has engaged in kidnapings, torture, and murder of unarmed civilians, most in village and farm cooperatives.

Mr. Secretary, are these the acts of freedom fighters?

I was struck by an account of an American who visited a Nicaraguan farm cooperative less than 10 miles from the Honduran border. He saw on the wall of a campesino's hut a banner proclaiming in bold letters, "After 126 Years the Enemy Is the Same."

To the campesino the enemy, Mr. Chairman, was the United States, not the Sandinistas. The enemy was the same country that for more than 100 years has intervened in the internal affairs of Nicaragua, beginning with the ill-fated takeover of that country by the American William Walker in 1856, to the 1930's when U.S. marines helped preserve in power Gen. Augusto Somoza, to today as U.S. funds and CIA advisers support the terrorist campaign of more than 10,000 Contras.

If this administration were sincerely interested in halting totalitarianism in Nicaragua, it should not just offer Nicaraguans the return of terror and mass killings reminiscent of the hated Somoza regime.

San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros warned that America, by pursuing its present course in Central America, was in danger of "continuing a history by which we lose the people." The history to which Mayor Cisneros referred is a legacy of U.S.-sponsored military adventures on behalf of ruthless and unpopular dictators.

Approving the covert war against Nicaragua would codify that history. Halting that war would mark an important step toward reversing America's troubled legacy in Central America.

Whatever concerns I might have about this Nation's intelligence program, and the funds provided for it in H.R. 5399, the Intelligence authorization bill, it is important that we adopt this measure because it prohibits the use of any funds to support, either directly or indirectly, the covert war against Nicaragua.●

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5399, the Intelligence Authorization Act of 1985.

Specifically, I am supportive of section 107, which would deny authorization for the funding directly or indirectly of military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua.

This illegal and ill conceived operation of the Reagan administration is an example of our Government at its worst. The American people do not support this activity, they know it is immoral and unwise and they want it stopped. Instead, we should utilize assertive and creative diplomacy and work with the Contadora group to bring about a nonviolent resolution of the Central American conflict. Support for those who carry the legacy of the Somozas is not in our interest. Section 107 should and must be maintained.

I am also supportive of section 103 of this bill which provides that no funds may be appropriated or otherwise made available through transfer, reprogramming, and so forth, unless specifically authorized or unless by notification. This is necessary to ensure that the intelligence services are accountable to the Congress. There are disturbing reports concerning the lack of complete control by responsible officials of some intelligence operations and network in the Central American region. Section 103 seeks to bring greater control over our intelligence operations.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5399 without weakening any amendments.●

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 520, the bill is considered by titles for amendment under the 5-minute rule except for section 107. Each title shall be considered as having been read.

Section 107 of the bill shall not be considered for amendment until the remainder of the bill has been considered for amendment in its entirety, and until section 107 is considered for amendment, no amendments are in order which affect the subject matter of section 107, funding for military and paramilitary operations in Nicaragua.

At the expiration of 2 hours of consideration of section 107 of the bill under the 5-minute rule, no further amendments to the bill or to said section are in order, and the question shall occur on any pending amendments or amendments to section 107.

The text of the bill, except for section 107, is as follows:

H.R. 5399

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1985".

TITLE I—INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 101. Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985 for the conduct of the intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the following elements of the United States Government:

(1) The Central Intelligence Agency.
(2) The Department of Defense.
(3) The Defense Intelligence Agency.
(4) The National Security Agency.
(5) The Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of the Air Force.
(6) The Department of State.
(7) The Department of the Treasury.
(8) The Department of Energy.
(9) The Federal Bureau of Investigation.
(10) The Drug Enforcement Administration.

CLASSIFIED SCHEDULE FOR AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 102. The amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 101, and the authorized personnel ceilings as of September 30, 1985, for the conduct of the intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the elements listed in such section, are those specified in the classified Schedule of Authorizations prepared by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence to accompany H.R. 5399 of the Ninety-eighth Congress. That Schedule of Authorizations shall be made available to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives and to the President. The President shall provide for suitable distribution of the schedule, or of appropriate portions of the schedule, within the executive branch.

CONGRESSIONAL NOTIFICATION OF EXPENDITURES IN EXCESS OF PROGRAM AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 103. During fiscal year 1985, funds may not be made available for any intelligence or intelligence-related activity unless such funds have been specifically authorized for such activity or, in the case of funds appropriated for a different activity, unless the Director of Central Intelligence or the Secretary of Defense has notified the appropriate committees of Congress of the intent to make such funds available for such activity, except that, in no case may reprogramming or transfer authority be used by the Director of Central Intelligence or the Secretary of Defense unless for higher priority intelligence or intelligence-related activities, based on unforeseen requirements, than those for which funds were originally authorized, and in no case where the intelligence or intelligence-related activity for which funds were requested has been denied by Congress.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR DESIGN AND CONSTRUCTION OF AN ADDITIONAL BUILDING AT THE CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY HEADQUARTERS COMPOUND

SEC. 104. Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 101(1), there is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985 the sum of $114,500,000 for the design and construction of a new building at the Central Intelligence Agency headquarters compound.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR COUNTERTERRORISM ACTIVITIES OF THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

SEC. 105. In addition to the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 101(9), there is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985 the sum of $14,500,000 for the conduct of the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to counter terrorism in the United States.

PERSONNEL CEILING ADJUSTMENTS

SEC. 106. The Director of Central Intelligence may authorize employment of civilian personnel in excess of the numbers authorized for the fiscal year 1985 under sections 102 and 202 of this Act when he determines that such action is necessary to the performance of important intelligence functions, except that such number may not, for any element of the Intelligence Community, exceed 2 per centum of the number of civilian personnel authorized under such sections for such element. The Director of Central Intelligence shall promptly notify the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate whenever he exercises the authority granted by this section.

TITLE II—INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY STAFF

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 201. There is authorized to be appropriated for the Intelligence Community Staff for fiscal year 1985 the sum of $20,300,000.

AUTHORIZATION OF PERSONNEL END STRENGTH

SEC. 202. (a) The Intelligence Community Staff is authorized two hundred and thirty-two full-time personnel as of September 30, 1985. Such personnel of the Intelligence Community Staff may be permanent employees of the Intelligence Community Staff or personnel detailed from other elements of the United States Government.

(b) During fiscal year 1985, personnel of the Intelligence Community Staff shall be selected so as to provide appropriate representation from elements of the United States Government engaged in intelligence and intelligence-related activities.

(c) During fiscal year 1985, any officer or employee of the United States or a member of the Armed Forces who is detailed to the Intelligence Community Staff from another element of the United States Government shall be detailed on a reimbursable basis, except that any such officer, employee, or member may be detailed on a nonreimbursable basis for a period of less than one year for the performance of temporary functions as required by the Director of Central Intelligence.

INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY STAFF ADMINISTERED IN SAME MANNER AS CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

SEC. 203. During fiscal year 1985, activities and personnel of the Intelligence Community Staff shall be subject to the provisions of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) and the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 403a-403n) in the same manner as activities and personnel of the Central Intelligence Agency.

TITLE III—CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 301. There is authorized to be appropriated for the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability Fund for fiscal year 1985 the sum of $99,300,000.

TITLE IV—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION RELATING TO THE CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

PHYSICAL SECURITY OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY FACILITIES

SEC. 401. The Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 403a et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SECURITY PERSONNEL AT AGENCY INSTALLATIONS

"SEC. 15. (a) The Director may authorize Agency personnel within the United States to perform the same functions as special policemen of the General Services Administration perform under the first section of the Act entitled 'An Act to authorize the Federal Works Administrator or officials of the Federal Works Agency duly authorized by him to appoint special policemen for duty upon Federal property under the jurisdiction of the Federal Works Agency, and for other purposes' (40 U.S.C. 318), with the powers set forth in that section, except that such personnel shall perform such functions and exercise such powers only within Agency installations and the rules and regulations enforced by such personnel shall be rules and regulations promulgated by the Director.

"(b) Agency personnel designated by the Director under subsection (a) of this section shall be clearly identifiable as United States Government security personnel while engaged in the performance of the functions to which subsection (a) of this section refers.".

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

RESTRICTION ON CONDUCT OF INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 501. The authorization of appropriations by this Act shall not be deemed to constitute authority for the conduct of any intelligence activity which is not otherwise authorized by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

INCREASES IN EMPLOYEE BENEFITS AUTHORIZED BY LAW

SEC. 502. Appropriations authorized by this Act for salary, pay, retirement, and other benefits for Federal employees may be increased by such additional or supplemental amounts as may be necessary for increases in such benefits authorized by law.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all titles be considered as read and open to amendment at any point, except as to section 107.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments?

If not, the Clerk will designate section 107.

The text of section 107 is as follows:

PROHIBITION ON COVERT ASSISTANCE FOR MILITARY OPERATIONS IN NICARAGUA

SEC. 107. During fiscal year 1985, no funds available to the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of Defense, or any other agency or entity of the United States involved in intelligence activities may be obligated or expended for the purpose or which would have the effect of supporting, directly or indirectly, military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua by any nation, group, organization, movement, or individual.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 107?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the administration and the minority in this House have attempted for well over a year to find a compromise—a bipartisan approach, if you will—to the policy disagreement on how best to help the peoples in Central America. The majority has resisted every effort we have made in recent months to find a reasonable compromise formula which would provide an effective counterweight to the Sandinista revolutionary expansionism and honor the commitments of the United States to the free Nicaraguans.

The administration's position has been clear. The concept is simple: As long as the Sandinista Communists continue to support the violent overthrow of the freely elected government of El Salvador, and refuse to honor their commitments to the Organization of American States, the United States will continue to support free Nicaraguans who share the hope of a democracy for their country.

There is no ambiguity in that position. It is clear. The President and I believe that the first Communist foothold on the mainland of the Americas is a threat to our security. The National Bipartisan Commission stated in its report that we must "ban the Soviet Union from consolidating either directly or through Cuba a hostile foothold on the American continents in order to advance its strategic purposes."

The President has set forth very clearly his policy goals in Central America. We will support democracy, reform, and human freedoms. We will support economic development. We will support the security of the region's threatened nations and we will support dialog and negotiations. These policy goals have not changed.

The Sandinistas have within their possession the key that opens the door to cooperation with their neighbors and the United States, an improved economy, a higher standard of living for their people. The Sandinistas need only to cease their support of guerrillas attempting to overthrow the Government of El Salvador and keep their promises to the OAS and allow truly democratic elections which are certainly not now indicated.

I do not think that the Congress should reward the Sandinista regime for subversion of freely elected governments in Central America. Yet, withdrawing support for the free Nicaraguans will do exactly that, just as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has very eloquently stated. The practical consequences of the majority's position is to provide a legislatively engineered victory to the Sandinista regime.

We in the minority on three occasions have attempted to fashion a workable compromise which could accomplish the policy of the administration to thwart Communist expansion in Central America, while satisfying the majority's reservations regarding the implementation of that policy.

I have no reason to believe that we would be any more successful this time than we have been in the past in securing Democratic support in the House for a reasonable approach to this impasse. Therefore, I am not offering an amendment to section 107 this day. I just do not believe this bill is the proper vehicle to resolve this explosive and political issue.

Myopia is an eye condition which results in defective vision of distant objects. Hemispheric myopia is a condition which appears to afflict many Members of the majority of this House, I fear. Apparently, they do not wish to see the threat to freedom in Central America which the Soviet-Cuban-Nicaraguan axis represents, because—as they see the world—the threat is still too distant.

With myopia, as an object moves closer to the eye, the eye can properly focus on it. I suppose the same is true with the affliction of hemispheric myopia. One would have hoped that the majority could see the Marxist threat as it builds and spreads from Nicaragua to El Salvador and Nicaragua's other neighbors. However, it is not yet close enough for those with defective vision to see it. I worry that it will not be seen as a threat until it approaches the banks of the Rio Grande.

Section 107 is a serious abscess in H.R. 5399. The Soviet-Cuban-Nicaraguan threat to stability, democracy, and freedom in Central America is real. We no longer have only Cuba as a Communist sanctuary in our hemisphere from which revolution is exported. We now have a Communist base in Nicaragua, on the mainland of the Americas. The Sandinistas subjugate their own people in Nicaragua and export their revolution to El Salvador and other neighboring countries, while they build the mightiest army in Central America as the vanguard of Marxist totalitarian revolution.

The majority does not appear to be willing to resist Communist military advances in the world unless the tanks have a big red star on them, and the CCCP—the Cyrillic acronym for the Soviet Union—painted on the side.

Well, the Soviets are not stupid; they have figured that out. So they do through the proxy forces of the Marxist-Leninist nations they dominate, what they could not get away with if they did it directly with the Red Army.

I assume, of course, that we would all agree to resist an invasion of Central America by the armed forces of the Soviet Union.

□ 1110

We cannot keep backing up forever in Central America; we are getting mighty close to the wall.

I hope no one in this body will misinterpret our position. Our decision not to offer an amendment does not reflect any lack of resolve to pursue this issue at a later date. I just do not wish to further politicize the intelligence authorization bill. There is a lot more in it than just this issue. Besides, as I said earlier, I can count votes as well as anyone else, and I see no benefit in further polarizing the House on legislation so fundamental to our security interests.

In closing, I would like to share with my colleagues a quotation from a letter—the entire text of which I will provide for the RECORD—that I received just yesterday from the director of the National Legislative Commission of the American Legion, an organization whose members do not suffer from the same myopic affliction to which I referred to earlier. This letter is addressed to me. I quote as follows:

As the House of Representatives prepares to vote on the FY 85 Intelligence Authorization, H.R. 5399, The American Legion would like to express its views relative to Section 107 of the bill. As you know, Section 107 would prohibit the use of any funds, authorized under the Act, to support the Nicaraguan Contras in their fight to establish a democratic government in their country.

In the view of The American Legion there are compelling legal arguments why Section 107 should be deleted from the bill. And, as the enclosed documents demonstrate, U.S. efforts to assist the Contras are clearly legal. The simple and undeniable fact is that the dire predictions of the consequences of a Sandinista takeover in Nicaragua have come to pass. In fact, in many instances the excesses of the Sandinistas have surpassed those of the intolerable Somoza dictatorship.

The letter expresses the American Legion's further strong opposition to section 107 and raises serious concerns regarding the socioeconomic impact of scores of Central Americans seeking refuge in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBINSON] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ROBINSON was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope that my colleagues will take the opportunity to reflect on the statements of groups like the American Legion and reevaluate the House's position in the coming weeks on the decisions that lie ahead.

The text of the letter from the director of the National Legislative Commission of the American Legion is as follows:

AUGUST 1, 1984.

Hon. J. KENNETH ROBINSON,
House of Representatives, Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, The Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ROBINSON: As the House of Representatives prepares to vote on the FY 85 Intelligence Authorization, H.R. 5399, The American Legion would like to express its views relative to Section 107 of the bill. As you know, Section 107 would prohibit the use of any funds, authorized under the Act, to support the Nicaraguan Contras in their fight to establish a democratic government in their country.

In the view of The American Legion there are compelling legal arguments why Section 107 should be deleted from the bill. And, as the enclosed documents demonstrate, U.S. efforts to assist the Contras are clearly legal. The simple and undeniable fact is that the dire predictions of the consequences of a Sandinista takeover in Nicaragua have come to pass. In fact, in many instances the excesses of the Sandinistas have surpassed those of the intolerable Samoza dictatorship.

While the legal and moral considerations, in our view, uphold continued support for the Contras there is an extremely important issue that has yet to be addressed by the Congress in its deliberations. This issue is the social and economic impact on the United States resulting from further communist takeovers in Central America. The historical evidence indicates that when communists take over a country at least 10 percent of its population flees. Further, communist takeovers in Central America will send an unimaginable surge of immigrants into the United States easily exceeding two million people, exacerbating an already burdensome immigration problem. This influx of immigrants will also place a severe strain on available social services and increase competition for American jobs in the south and southwest portions of the United States.

While some may choose to ignore this aspect of communist aggression in Central America they will be hard pressed to deny that the United States has an economic attraction and record of compassion toward refugees unmatched by any other country in this hemisphere. In addition, our proximity to Central America and the ease with which entry can be gained, will make the United States the destination of choice for the majority of those fleeing communist takeover.

Congressman, for these reasons The American Legion seeks your leadership in deleting Section 107 from the FY 85 Intelligence Authorization. As always, your consideration of the views of The American Legion is appreciated.

Sincerely,

E. PHILIP RIGGIN,
Director, National Legislative Commission.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to piggyback on the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia. Before doing so, I would certainly like to join in the accolade and tribute that has already been paid to the gentleman from Virginia and that will, I am sure, follow during the course of this day.

There are some in this House that make their name through flamboyance and one thing and another. There are others who move in much more quiet, rather mysterious but very assured ways. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBINSON] is one of those latter individuals who served this body and his country with tremendous distinction. I am certainly going to regret the loss of the counsel and advice of the gentleman from Virginia as our ranking member on this important Intelligence Committee, and then serving as he does on the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. Those dual responsibilities that he performs, not only for our side but for the entire House, are of extreme importance to each and every one of us, and I know all of us are going to miss that good counsel and advice that we have been given over a long period of time by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. Chairman, during his acceptance speech at the recent Democratic Convention, Walter Mondale said some things about Central America that are relevant to our debate today.

He said:

I'll press for human rights in Central America, and for the removal of all foreign forces from the region. And in my first hundred days, I will stop the illegal war in Nicaragua.

What did Mr. Mondale mean by those stirring phrases?

Perhaps by "human rights" he referred to the documented atrocities committed by Sandinistas against dissident religious figures in Nicaragua such as Prudencio de Jesus Baltodano.

He is a Pentecostal preacher and farmer who was beaten and had his ears cut off by the Sandinistas. His crime? Preaching the gospel.

When he spoke of the "Removal of foreign forces" was Mr. Mondale speaking of the 3,000 Cuban military/security advisers now in Nicaragua?

Did Mr. Mondale mean to say he has a secret plan to do something to remove the Cuban, Soviet, Bulgarian, Czechoslovakian, Polish, Hungarian, Libyan, East German, and PLO advisers who are guiding the Sandinista government in the true, shining path of Marxism-Leninism?

If so, he should reveal that plan to us—or his supporters in the House should.

Finally, we do not know to what "illegal war" the former Vice President was referring.

Obviously he could not have been referring to funding of the Contra forces by the United States because it is not illegal.

Perhaps Mr. Mondale meant the illegal war being waged against the democratic government of El Salvador for 5 years by the Sandinistas in Nicaragua.

The illegality—not to mention immorality—of that war was documented by our House Intelligence Committee in its report of May 1983. This is what the report said about the El Salvador guerrilla war:

It is not popular support that sustains the insurgents . . . this insurgency depends for its life blood—arms, ammunition, financing, logistics and command-and-control facilities—upon outside assistance from Nicaragua and Cuba.

Perhaps Mr. Mondale was also speaking of the increasingly savage and immoral war being waged against the defenseless Roman Catholic Church by the Sandinistas.

Maybe Mr. Mondale was talking about these things. And then again, maybe he wasn't.

But he has raised an important point.

How should the United States deal with the situation in Nicaragua?

Let's look at the facts.

The Sandinistas are guilty of openly carrying out a war against a democratic government through subversion. The evidence is abundant and unquestionable.

By what process of moral reasoning can anyone say we are wrong in helping those who try to stop such immoral and illegal activity?

We are told by some that it is the means we have chosen that is offensive. The critics of the President say that they cannot tolerate a "secret" war.

"Ah" they cry, "if only we were doing these things openly."

And because we're not, these critics wash their hands of the situation.

By denying the Contras funding we are left, realistically speaking, with the alternatives of either an American invasion of a country or American Evasion of responsibility.

The United States, according to this view, must either be an interventionist bully or an isolationist wimp—there can be no middle ground.

Well, there is a middle ground—and the President has it. He is helping anti-Somoza and anti-Sandinista freedom fighters to stop the Sandinistas from exporting Communist revolution.

The leaders or the Contras were in fact anti-Somoza for the same reason they are now anti-Sandinista—they don't want to see their country dishonored.

The question before us is—no we want to see our own country dishonored?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BOLAND was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, this will be the fourth time the House will address the issue of funding the secret war against Nicaragua. I hope it will be the last.

The administration has been making a concerted push to convince this House—and Americans everywhere—that this war must go on. They think we haven't paid enough attention to the failings of the Sandinistas. They think the Sandinistas have fooled us. So, the President makes speeches. The State Department issues another white paper. And the Defense Department offers briefings to all.

There are many of us in this body—and many of the American people—who think the administration protesteth too much. But more than exaggeration, they don't listen every well.

So, although the President and his spokesmen take every opportunity to cite the Intelligence Committee's 1983 report confirming the arms flow from Nicaragua to El Salvador, they tell the world that opponents of the secret war won't accept the truth. In trying to convince the doubters, they go too far. Your Intelligence Committee stands by its earlier judgment. There is a continued arms flow from Nicaragua to El Salvador. Yes, the evidence is circumstantial. There is no smoking gun. But, the evidence is convincing.

The administration also puts it out that opponents of the secret war embrace the Sandinistas. Again, they ignore the record. The same 1983 Intelligence Committee report made clear that the Sandinistas were on the path to greater repression the secret war gives them that excuse. The Sandinistas continue to cite the secret war when they deny opposition political parties a fair election.

The administration also seeks to paint opponents of the secret war as blind to Sandinista repression of the Catholic Church. Repeatedly, they seek to show the bishops' efforts at reconciliation within Nicaragua, as some sort of endorsement of the secret war. Again they ignore the warnings of the Intelligence Committee a year ago. As they try to politicize the church, they make it easier for the Sandinistas to treat the church as a political opponent rather than a moral force.

So I say to the administration—and to all their efforts to paint over the failures of the secret war—this House knows the facts. We aren't the ones wearing ideological blinders. The House position—repeated three times in the last 12 months—is based on the unvarnished appraisal of its Intelligence Committee.

No, the Sandinistas aren't Democrats. But our policy doesn't strengthen democracy in Nicaragua.

Yes, the arms flow continues, but the secret war hasn't slowed it one bit.

Yes, Nicaraguans die daily in the secret war, but many are innocent victims who have taken no side.

Yes, we all want peace. But the secret war is a strange way to buy peace.

Why doesn't the secret war work? To begin with, the administration hasn't yet figured out what the goals of the war are. They don't want to overthrow the Sandinistas, they say. Yet, they fund the Contras—whose only aim is to overthrow the Sandinistas.

They want to support Contadora, but the two representatives of the Contadora countries—President de la Madrid of Mexico and President-elect Borletta of Panama—to visit Washington this year have firmly, but politely, refused to endorse the Contras. President Duarte of El Salvador says he would support the secret war if it brought an end to the arms flow. That is how the administration first explained our involvement, but arms interdiction is the biggest failure of the war. The Contras aren't interested, and the administration doesn't want to divert them from the war.

If the Contadora nations or El Salvador won't back the secret war, what about world opinion? You need only recall the mining of Nicaraguan ports and the unanimous decision of the world court to answer that question.

The secret war hasn't brought Central America closer to peace or Nicaragua closer to democracy. What it does do is provide the Sandinistas with the perfect excuse to foist, unfair elections, a huge army, censorship, and the draft on the Nicaraguan people.

This secret war should end—today. And as it does, we should dwell less on the failings of the Sandinistas and begin a genuine program of arms interdiction assistance to El Salvador. At the same time, we should challenge the Sandinistas, to fulfill in concrete ways, their promises to the OAS and their pledges to the Contadora group.

As long as this futile war goes on, the Sandinistas will use it to turn those challenges against us. As long as we pay to destroy their farms, sabotage their electrical system, and burn their clinics, neither they, nor the rest of Nicaragua, need listen to us.

Mr. Chairman, another year of bloodshed, of diplomatic stalemate, of failed policy, will only serve to excuse Sandinista denials of freedom. Let us end—once and for all—this disastrous effort at military pressure. We won't be letting the Sandinistas off the hook. The war does that for them now. If this Nation—the strongest and most Democratic in the world—can't find an effective alternative to war as we strive to achieve peace, then we dishonor our history and the hope that the United States has always represented to those who—in Nicaragua or elsewhere—"yearn to breath free."

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I stand in opposition to section 107 in H.R. 5399 which prohibits the use of any funds authorized in this bill to be used directly or indirectly for support of any military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua.

Once again we will grant the Sandanista government another victory in their quest to undermine their neighbors and institute subversion in Central America if we allow this bill to pass in its present form.

I am amazed at the continued efforts of many in this body to restrict our duty, as a free nation and as the hope of the teeming millions to our south, in the light of continued mounting evidence, to stop the infiltration of the Communist.

We cannot turn away time and time again and expect the Soviets to not interpret this as indecision and weakness on our part. They will seize every opportunity to continue in their drive to establish communism throughout this hemisphere.

Someday, whether it be tomorrow or several years from now, we are going to have to face the grim reality that the intentions of the Soviet-backed Nicaraguan Government are to tear down democracy and freedom throughout the region and establish a region of tyranny and terror. The only thing is—tomorrow is too late.

We can provide assistance today at relatively moderate levels or we can wait and be forced to provide large amounts tomorrow when the Communists are driving toward our own borders.

It is time to open our eyes and face the reality. We have an obligation to help our friends in Central America. Let's remember, to ensure democracy and freedom for these people, will ultimately ensure our own democracy and freedom as a nation.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to section 107 of this bill which was the effect of prohibiting any U.S. financial support for the so-called Contras in Nicaragua. I will confine my remarks to the purely military aspect of this action.

Military experience teaches us that the support of an insurgency is nearly impossible to interdict if the insurgents have the advantage of a nearby sanctuary. History gives us little cause for optimism regarding the ultimate outcome of a conflict in which guerrilla forces are trained, supplied, equipped, and directed from a neighboring area which serves as a sanctuary from which they operate. Witness the success of the British operation against the Malaysian Communist contrasted with the American failure in Indochina. Further, examine the problems Vietnam is now having subduing its Cambodian neighbors and the difficulties the Soviets are experiencing in Afghanistan.

Of course, the Government of El Salvador is imperfect. In the end, even a near-perfect government conducting its affairs to a standard exceeding our own, will be worn down by an attritive terrorism that kills leaders, intimidates voters, and destroys the infrastructure of a fragile, developing economy.

Surely, it is those at the bottom who suffer most from blown electric pylons and burned buses. That any government could better itself under these circumstances should be considered remarkable, if not miraculous.

If we oppose aid to those dedicated to a freely elected government and a pluralistic society in Nicaragua on moral grounds, how does that differ from our support for those seeking pluralism and freedom in Afghanistan? I believe a commitment to end our aid to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua must be matched by a commitment on the part of the Sandanistas to end their exportation of violence and revolution and move toward a pluralistic society within their own borders.

I fully appreciate that a majority of the American people do not support the Contras nor our efforts in Nicaragua. However, as Edmund Burke so eloquently stated:

> Your Representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

I believe this is a time for us to use our best judgment and exercise the responsibility of leadership.

In May 1983, the Intelligence Committee acknowledged, as our distinguished Chairman just said, the major role played by Nicaragua in training, equipping, supplying, and providing sites for command and control of the Salvadoran insurgency movement. It has not repudiated this finding. At the same time, the committee acknowledged Nicaragua's active promotion of a "revolution without frontiers" throughout Central America. I am not aware that the committee has repudiated this finding either.

Despite the recognition of a Nicaragua committed to continue its support for the insurgency in El Salvador and elsewhere, the committee and this House by enacting section 107, will grant sanctuary to those forces dedicated to the overthrow of a democratically elected government. A government, I might add, that this House has chosen to support, a government which offers its citizens true hope of a better life, if it is given the chance.

I believe I have a responsibility to give this House the benefit of my military training and experience. I greatly fear for the prospects of any long-term success against an insurgency which is armed, supplied, trained, and directed from a neighboring sanctuary. Let me point out that this insurgency is far from a classical one. As Mao Tse-tung stated, "A guerrilla moves among the people like a fish through the sea." Where is the popular support for the Salvadoran insurgency? Witness the turnout in the recent elections, witness the failure of the insurgents call for a "final revolution" a couple of years ago. This insurgency cannot succeed without the external support because it does not have the approval of the Salvadoran people.

If we wish to minimize our involvement in Central America, the time to act is now. The fall of El Salvador to a Marxist insurgency will surely increase the possibility of direct American troop involvement in the region. Such an event can only be made more likely by the granting of sanctuary to the leftists which is the effect of this legislation.

From a military viewpoint, this course of action is unwise and dangerous to the future prospects of stability in Central America. I sincerely hope that the future will prove me wrong and that this House will not regret the action it takes today. Unfortunately, I do not believe this will be the case.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly to me?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] for the very flattering comments that he made during his presentation and during the 5-minute rule. There is no individual in this House whose approval I would rather have.

Beyond that, I want to tell my colleagues, particularly my Republican colleagues, that I do not want my remarks interpreted as being in such total support of the bill that I am asking them to vote for it as well, because I can guarantee you that you are going to have an opportunity to vote on final passage on the bill, and those of you who feel as strongly as I know many of you do certainly should vote against it.

I, as one of the architects of the bill, am going to vote for it because of the fact that there is so much in it other than the Nicaraguan concern.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I thank the gentleman, and I, too, would like to join those colleagues who have preceded me in stating to the gentleman from Virginia, thank you from the whole country, and especially for those of us in the Congress, for his expertise and his leadership on these crucial issues.

As someone who is not on the Intelligence Committee, he has worked very closely with me and given me all the benefits of his wisdom. I thank him for that and wish him well in his retirement.

Mr. Chairman, much of what we talk about is classified, and much of what we discuss, by necessity, is classified, but I would like to read to you from a public document, so public that it was published in Newsweek magazine this last week, Newsweek of August 6.

Newsweek's San Salvador Bureau Chief, Robert Rivard, was allowed to view three secret infrared and low-light films made by United States spy planes that flew over El Salvador in late June and July. I would like to read from part of Mr. Rivard's report, which is in the public domain and which has been distributed to millions of people in this country.

> It was exactly 35 minutes past midnight on June 24 when the U.S. Air Force C-130 spy plane over the southeastern coast of El Salvador found its target. Crewmen monitoring sophisticated sensors had spotted a suspicious trawler heading toward Playa Icacal, a remote, guerrilla-controlled beach in La Union district, with two small fishing vessels in tow. The boats appeared as fuzzy white objects in the glow of the infrared sensors. In a sequence shot two hours later, the cameras swept inland to pick up a cluster of small white outlines. Intelligence analysts identified the white blots as 20 to 25 guerrillas with pack animals in the swampy brush beyond the beach. "What you are viewing is an over-the-shore logistics shipment to El Salvador from Nicaragua. . ." a narrator asserted in an introduction to the film. "The beach area from La Union to the Rio Lempa is extensively used by the Salvadoran guerrillas to receive supplies from Nicaragua."
> A second film, shot shortly after midnight on July 9, revealed a 75-foot trawler a few miles off Playa Espino, a once popular beach resort that is now well known as a guerrilla stronghold. Two smaller craft stood nearby. "They look like rowboats," observed the recorded voice of a C-130 crewman. But suddenly the two small "rowboats" roared away toward shore, their wide wakes looking like streaking comets on the low-level-light film. A final shot showed what may be the same two boats anchored in an isolated inlet, with small white forms moving around them. And a third short film focused on a 24-foot dugout nearing the shore with a group of 40 people descending to the beach at the same time.

Mr. Rivard goes on and says:

In fact, there is no evidence at all that the trawlers originated in Nicaragua or that they carried arms or ammunition. Still——

He says, and this is an objective reporter—

Nicaragua is nearby and has the only government in Central America that favors the Salvadoran guerrillas. Ordinary smuggling remains a possibility, of course, but the clandestine rendezvous along guerrilla-controlled beaches strongly suggest that weapons are involved. In addition, the guerrillas' claim that they have completely armed their troops with weapons captured from the Salvadoran government—

And this is a direct quote—seems frankly ludicrous.

How many times have we heard our colleagues suggest that that is the case.

Skeptics may argue that even if the guerrillas are importing weapons, there is still no proof that they are being supplied by Nicaragua and Cuba. Nevertheless—

And this is the bottomline comment from Mr. Rivard, the Bureau Chief in El Salvador of Newsweek—

Nevertheless, a thin but reasonable chain of circumstantial evidence does indicate that the guerrillas acquire material from the East-bloc countries.

Well, it may be a thin line for Mr. Rivard, but I am glad that our chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts, indicates that it is not too thin; that he reaffirmed today in answers to my questions and his own comments, that a major portion of arms and materiel are coming from Cuba and other countries to El Salvador through Nicaragua.

I want to point out to my colleagues a backgrounder paper released from the Department of State and Department of Defense in which the thin line that Mr. Rivard talks about is not so thin after all. Here are pictures of ammunition captured by the Salvadoran army in El Salvador in May of 1984 that were manufactured in Bulgaria. I guess they swam across the ocean into the hands of the guerrillas and not through Nicaragua.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Criticism has been made of the Contras that they are not effective. I suggest that they are effective in interdicting arms, or at least keeping the arms flow down. If you have the Sandinistas busy worrying about the Contras, they are not going to be able to ship in as many arms as they would if there was nobody there between them and El Salvador. So I think they are effective. They have done a job.

The press has also reported that there may very well, indeed, be an August offensive by the rebels in El Salvador. This was in the Washington Post a week or so ago. I suggest to anybody today that if there is an August offensive, that that offensive in El Salvador will undoubtedly be supported and done by arms coming through Nicaragua, assisted by Nicaragua, as confirmed by the chairman's statements today and the committee reports of the past that those bullets, those guns, that ammunition, and indeed the individuals involved in any August or fall offensive in El Salvador will be a direct result of the inability of the United States to be able to control the situation, to be any force whatsoever, and that is why the Contras are important, that is why covert aid is important, and that is why, if we have an August offensive, it will not be on my shoulders, it will be on those people who support section 107 as it is, who supported the position of Boland-Zablocki in the past, who simply do not fear what we fear and what we have tried to articulate here this morning in this House.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLEMAN] for his statement and say that I agree with it, especially with the part about the August offensive. I think that this Congress has dropped the ball, and we may well face some terrible consequences for that.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to consider what is at stake today. Can the United States afford another Cuba in this hemisphere? Can the free world afford it?

The Soviets have benefited for 25 years with their proxy in Cuba. Are we to sit back and allow them another in Nicaragua? Some say there is still hope to redeem the Sandinista regime. To believe that is to believe there is still hope to redeem Castro. Make no mistake, the Marxist-Leninist junta running Nicaragua is just as committed to totalitarian rule as is Castro.

Some say it is morally wrong to try to use covert aid against an established government. What is wrong, however, is to protect a government from its own people who seek democratic government and respect for human rights. You do not protect another government's existence and freedom so that it can destroy the freedom of others. The moral hypocrites who condemn covert aid to the Contras fighting the Sandinistas do not make the same arguments about covert aid to the Afghans fighting the Soviets. In both cases the Soviets are seeking another strategic staging area. It is right to resist them 9,000 miles from the United States in Afghanistan. It is right to resist them 900 miles from the United States in Nicaragua.

To deny Soviet influence and control in Nicaragua is to ignore what the Soviets themselves say. In March 1983, Soviet Army Chief of Staff Nikolai Ogarkov told the then-Grenadian Army Chief of Staff, "the Marshal said that over two decades ago, there was only Cuba in Latin America; today there are Nicaragua, Grenada and a serious battle is going on in El Salvador." Some people say they need a "smoking gun" to believe the Sandinistas are subverting their neighbors. However, the evidence compiled against the Sandinistas is considerably greater than what was known about the Grenadian regime before the U.S. rescue mission in October. That mission uncovered warehouses of arms and ammunition, documents and communications confirming a serious Soviet-Cuban effort to establish another military stronghold in the Caribbean. There was no "smoking gun" in Grenada but the threat was clear, even it was realized only after the fact. There's at least a "warm pistol" in Nicaragua and the threat is even more evident, without the need for an invasion of Nicaragua.

Nicaragua's neighbors in El Salvador, Costa Rica and Honduras have all felt the effects of guerrilla groups operating in their countries with the support and control of the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua. Two months after the Sandinistas came to power in July 1979, their first major planning document discussed the strengthening of the revolution in Central America and Latin America, and the national directorate of the Sandinistas acknowledged that the only way to prevent the defeat of the Nicaraguan revolution was to create a "ripple effect" of the Nicaraguan revolution for the entire region. While some may discount the domino theory, it is obvious the Sandinistas do not.

The Contras fighting the Sandinistas in Nicaragua seek from that regime the fulfillment of their promises to the OAS in July 1979 for free elections and respect for human rights. Before the pressure applied by the Contras, there was no movement whatsoever by the Sandinistas to consider their original pledge, nor was their any letup in their support for the guerrillas in El Salvador. Now that the Sandinistas are finally discussing the issues which concern its neighbors and the United States, it would be foolish to eliminate that pressure.

I urge my colleagues to support the continuations of covert aid for the Contras in Nicaragua just as they have supported covert aid for the rebels in Afghanistan. Do not leave the initiative to the Soviet Union for what happens in Central America. Let us take the initiative and protect what is in our national interest: The security of the United States and our allies in this hemisphere.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO], and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, once again we have under discussion in this House the long continuum of events that have taken place since the President of the United States made a finding back in November 1981 to engage in small-unit disruptions and interdiction of arms inside the borders of the country of Nicaragua, and our Intelligence Committee, after being briefed about the purpose of that mission, about the arms flow that was discovered in 1980 and 1981, decided to go ahead and allow that to happen and proceeded to monitor the activities. And from a finding that was basically to determine that we could use small units of 15 and 20 people and personnel to interdict arms, we have now watched this program grow like topsy, no longer engaged in the interdiction of an arms flow but a hired band of mercenaries that have been collected from around the world to be paid for and supported by the Government of the United States for the purposes of disrupting and overthrowing the Government of the people of Nicaragua.

Now, no one needs to defend the Sandinistas on this floor. My record of differences from my conversations with them is long. But the question is this: Should this Government be engaged in and supporting the efforts to overthrow the sovereign Government of Nicaragua?

Some do not like the way the Government of Nicaragua came to power; some do not like it that certain people will not participate in the elections; some do not like the censorship of the press. The question really is, Does that justify the overthrow of this Government? And the answer, I believe, is that it does not.

But that is what we have done and what we have seen taking place, because, mind you, the Government of Nicaragua has been under siege by the Government of the United States of America for almost 3 years, and what was predicted in the very early days by our Embassy personnel and by our military attachés is simply what we are now seeing played out, that this war, this war supported by the CIA that once was a covert war, is now the basis which allows the Sandinistas to engage in far greater oppression of religious rights, of press rights, and of the freedoms that we would expect, because they make it very clear to their citizens that they are under external attack by the mightiest military power in the world, the United States of America. That was not my prediction; that was the prediction of the officials in the American Embassy when we met with them shortly after this was undertaken, and that is in fact what has come to pass.

But now we no longer see any pretext of arms interdiction because even in the most recent white paper that was put forth by this administration we find out that the evidence that is cited is almost 2½ or 3 years old. We still go back to the famous Volkswagen that was discovered transversing the country several years ago. We still talk about airports that would be of a certain type, that if you were to land these weapons, this is the type of airport used. This reminds me of the briefing of the Cuban-designed soccer fields, the Cuban-designed recreation fields, and the Cuban-designed track fields that Bobby Inman gave to the world just before he resigned from the CIA.

But let us look at what this is. When this report was drafted a few weeks ago, the report suggested that there was a sporadic flow of arms from Nicaragua to the insurgents in El Salvador. Between the time the draft report came out and the time it was sent to the Members of Congress and the press, that sporadic flow became a steady flow. When quizzed as to what the change in circumstances was, why a sporadic flow now became a steady flow, for press publication, the State Department said there was nothing, there was no new evidence. But obviously a sporadic flow does not justify the expenditure of $40 million, and not showing up with, as our Ambassador said, one pistole, because there has been no interdiction of arms.

What we have seen is a war that has grown from the mining of the harbor that incensed the American people and incensed the world community. We saw overwhelming opposition to those actions by the American Government, from the mining of the harbor to the publication of comic books, comic books not to tell people how to interdict arms, not to tell people how to spot somebody who is moving arms to El Salvador, but to tell people to damage books, to threaten the boss by telephone, to make false airplane and hotel reservations, to spread rumors, to plant flowers on state farms instead of vegetables, and to leave the lights on so they use the electricity and the oil. This is a war against the people of Nicaragua.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, this is a war against the people of Nicaragua. This is a war against the Government of Nicaragua; this is not a war about stopping the arms flow.

We just heard the gentleman come in the well and describe the beaches where the landings take place. I ask you, where are the Salvadoran troops? Where are the Salvadoran troops when our planes constantly identify the landing points? Where are the people in the Gulf of Fonseca?

It is not about the interdiction of arms, because what do we know about the flow of arms? First and foremost, we know that the largest flow of arms to the insurgents in El Salvador is from the Army and Government personnel inside El Salvador, either through capture or the killing of Government soldiers or the sale by unethical Government soldiers.

We also know that flows have come in—and the most recent documents show this—flows have come in and have been cited by this administration from Costa Rica and from Mexico. We also were told at the time of the original finding that the weapons were coming in from Panama. In fact, at that time perhaps Panama was the biggest supplier of arms to the insurgents.

Are we declaring war against Panama? Are we declaring war against Costa Rica? Are we declaring war against Mexico? No.

And I say to my dear friends that we also know that one of the very largest supplier of arms is from our friends in the city of Miami who engage in the illegal shipment of arms.

But we are not doing that. No; what we are doing is we are declaring war on the people of Nicaragua because we do not like their form of government. What we ought to do is openly have on this floor a declaration of war and settle the issue once and for all, because we are supplying them, we are training them, we are supporting them, and we are there for the purposes of overthrowing this government.

That is a hostile act. I suggest that that is an illegal act. I would also suggest that the funding is illegal, because never have I seen such magnificant bookkeeping that can allow this $21 million to go the number of months that it has. They are always going to run out just before we take up the bill, but when the bill does not come out the way the intelligence community likes, then they are able to fund it for several months because somehow the economies are worked out. This is the most efficiently run war in history if they can make $21 million go this far. But we know that is not what is going on. There is diversion of other military sources, and there is the raising of money in the private sector to support these mercenaries.

Finally, we see that what this war has done is something even more dangerous. It has led to the militarization of Honduras. We have lunged into the country of Costa Rica and tried to support our efforts there. We have seen acts of violence in both those countries. We have now seen large-scale political demonstrations by Honduran citizens against the role of Honduras in the effort against Nicaragua.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of California was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, what we are trying to do is to take the issue of arms and escalate it into the basis in which we somehow have a right to invade this country. But what we do not have is the courage of our convictions to invade it with American soldiers.

So what have we done? We went out and we hired Argentinian terrorists to help train these people in the early days because there were only going to be a few of them. The Argentinians got upset over the Falklands and left for a while, so that set them back a few months. So finally we got them trained in their activities, and now we are engaged with some 15,000 people in the overthrow of this Government. That is the purpose, and that is what this Congress three successive times has rejected. And it is overwhelmingly rejected by the American people, and no number of fraudulent white papers from this administration will cure the defects in that policy.

One of the things I learned early on when I first went to discover the finding was, I said, how does a finding like this happen? How do you have a finding that allows the President to conduct these kinds of activity, basically Latin America wide?

I was told then that this is what happens in the absence of a policy——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(At the request of Mr. AUCOIN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of California was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I appreciate the leadership the gentleman has shown on the whole issue of Central America.

I understood the gentleman to say that the "comic book" instruction manual that has been distributed in Nicaragua to show how the economy can be crippled was devised or written by our CIA. Is that what the gentleman was saying?

Mr. MILLER of California. It is my understanding that it has been written with and for the purpose of distribution by the Contras.

Mr. AUCOIN. I have a copy of that document in front of me and it may be a comic book format, but it is not funny in terms of what it suggests.

It explains how to construct Molotov cocktails. It suggests that the targets for those Molotov cocktails could be things like police stations.

It describes how to devise clever fire-starting devices that will set economic targets aflame.

It describes how telephone lines can be brought down.

It describes how to throw tools that are in short supply that are needed for the repair of equipment into sewers so equipment cannot be restored.

Mr. Chairman, none of this has anything to do with the interdiction of arms. It has everything to do with overthrowing a government.

What offends me about this is that when I visited the region and talked to CIA representatives there, I questioned them repeatedly about whether or not economic targets were being targeted in the Contra effort.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(At the request of Mr. AUCOIN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of California was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. AUCOIN. Without exception, I was told that economic targets were not part of the effort. Instead, it was arms interdiction.

Now, I find in talking to those from within the agency who have now left, that there is no quantifiable amount of arms that have been recovered. They have testified that the administration started with the assumption that there was a massive arms flow and then they set out to try to prove that assumption. But the evidence is not really there.

Then I see this instruction manual, which is designed not to interdict arms, but to do that which a number of us have suspected from the beginning—to try to bring down a Government that a lot of us do not find terribly popular but we raise the question whether it is a legitimate role on the part of the U.S. Government to move in, pretending to do one thing to the American people, but actually doing something entirely different.

I find that revelation a sad commentary on the candor of the administration and the intelligence community.

I must say one other thing. When we have a President of the United States who returns from The People's Republic of China and then in talking to the press entourage flying with him that China is a so-called Communist regime, something is very haywire. Everyone knows that few countries on the face of the Earth are more Marxist than the People's Republic of China.

Then the administration describes Nicaragua as being some kind of Marxist juggernaut which has a population of about 3 million people, about 50 percent or some such in an age group that is not viable from a military standpoint.

But I wonder how many people realize 60 percent of the Nicaraguan economy is still in private ownership, not state ownership?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(At the request of Mr. AUCOIN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of California was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I find that 75 percent of the businesses in Nicaragua are in private hands, and 80 percent of the farmland is still in private hands.

Given this, I just have got to say that there are a lot of people I work for from my congressional district who think this is quite a curiosity, the President calling the People's Republic of China a so-called Communist regime, and the Nicaragua regime some kind of a pure Communist juggernaut.

I do not defend the excesses of the Sandinista government, but I resent overblowing the situation in Nicaragua and the White House failure to understand that the United States did more to create the Sandinista revolution by our unblinking support of Somoza, who plundered the treasury and brutalized his people, without any serious opposition on the part of the U.S. Government.

I commend the gentleman for the points he has brought out in the debate here.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, boy, you know, I get a big kick out of this guilt complex that many Members of this House have toward our involvement in Central America. I think the No. 1 question is are we going to keep Central America free and are we going to protect the southern soft underbelly of the United States of America? That is my No. 1 concern, whether or not we are going to have our young people involved in a military conflict down there at some point in the future because we did not do the right thing today.

They talked about Nicaragua being a government under seige. What about El Salvador?

You say, well, the gentleman from California indicated that they are getting most of their weapons from within the country, from our supplies that have been sent down there being sold on the black market to them, but the Intelligence Committee said, and I will quote this, in a report in May, 1983, the House Intelligence Committee after reviewing the Intgelligence-based evidence and finding it convincing reported:

> It is not popular support that sustains the insurgents. As will be discussed later, this insurgency depends for its life blood—arms, ammunition, financing, logistics and command-and-control facilities—upon outside assistance from Nicaragua and Cuba. This Nicaraguan-Cuban contribution to the Salvadoran insurgency is longstanding. It began shortly after the overthrow of Somoza in July 1979. It has provided—by land, sea and air—the great bulk of military equipment and support received by the insurgents.

So I think the argument that the gentleman from California made that they are not getting any supplies through Nicaragua and Cuba and other areas is just erroneous.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I will not yield right now.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman used my name. I would appreciate if he would yield just to clarify my point.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I will not yield right now. I will in a moment.

In 1983, the Soviet bloc delivered over $100 million in military hardware to the Sandinistas. They have established a powerful force of artillery, multiple rocket launchers and tanks and an arsenal that exceeds that of the other countries of the region. They are expanding four airfields so that they can accommodate Mig-23 fighter bombers that can reach the southern part of the United States, the west coast, as well as the Panama Canal.

They have just received a whole shipload of Bulgarian amphibious tanks, and you know of all the other multitude of military supplies they have received from the Communist bloc countries, as well as having 10,000 Cubans down there and PLO terrorists and North Koreans and Bulgarians and all those fellow travelers.

So the fact of the matter is that they are a danger.

Humberto Ortega and Daniel Ortega said in no uncertain terms that they want a revolution without borders in Central America and they are going to head for that and if we do not help the Contras and those who are fighting for their own freedom down there as well as trying to interdict those supplies from getting into and out of Nicaragua, then we are going to reap the whirlwind and be directly involved in a military conflict with our kids.

Now, they talked about that we are to blame for the repression in Central America. I had a meeting, as did members of the Republican Study Committee not long ago, with a man named Theofilo Archibold and a gentleman whose name eludes me right now, who is a Miskito Indian, and they did not think we were to blame for the repression, and they live down there.

The Miskito Indians who testified stated that they buried alive, the Sandinistas buried alive 35 of the people in his village.

Theofilo Archibold, the black man with whom we talked, showed us his fingers where they had pulled his fingernails out one at a time. He told where they took 13 people who were mentally ill, put them in a building, poured gasoline over them and burned them to death.

He told of two little children outside a Sandinista military encampment that took two crusts of bread from a garbage can and they shot them in the head and buried them in a mass grave.

Now, I would say that is repression and I cannot believe the United States is responsible for that. Now, if you can draw that kind of conclusion, you are way beyond me.

□ 1200

There is no doubt in my mind or in the mind of anybody who follows the newspapers that the repression is expanding. They talked about free elections. Now, because the free elections are not going to be free, the opposition is not even going to run because it is going to be a sham, and they told the American people that and the whole world.

The Catholic Church has been very concerned about the repression of their church down there, and it is expanding. As a matter of fact, the election, as I understand it, is going to be run pretty much against the Catholic Church and religious involvement in the affairs of state.

So the repression is expanding at a very rapid rate down there. And, of course, censorship. I think the gentleman from California alluded to us being responsible for the censorship down there.

Talk to the people at La Prensa and ask them what they think about that, the paper that for the last 20 or 30 years has been the voice of opposition to the government when Somoza was in power, and now they say the present oppression is much greater than when the Communist Sandinista government took over.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. BURTON of Indiana was allowed to proceed for one additional minute.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. The gentleman alluded to Costa Rica and indicated that we were causing them problems by our involvement in Central America.

Commenting in January 1984 on the threat from Nicaragua, Costa Rican President Luis Alberto Monge said "I never thought I would say, as I do now, that we would have it worse in four years of Sandinista rule than in 40 years of Somoza."

When you start saying we are responsible for all of these problems in Central America, I really believe you ought to get your facts straight and not go off half cocked, telling the people of this country something that is not accurate.

Mr. MILLER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. First of all, I did not say arms were not coming from Nicaragua. I talked about other sources, that arms are flowing into the insurgents in El Salvador to begin with, and I did not say that we were responsible for all of the repression and the terrorism or whatever activities are carried out by the Sandinistas.

What I suggested was that we were told very early on when this was a very small operation by this administration's Embassy people that we could expect to see the repression even heightened.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. BURTON of Indiana was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Because it would be used by the Sandinistas as a pretext for greater repression or restrictions on the press or what have you. That is what I have said, and I think if the gentleman will let me finish, since most of his talk is about what I said or I did not say, the fact of the matter is that that has come to pass. But the fact that the Sandinistas use it does not make it terribly accurate.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. If I may reclaim my time, I would just like to say we have all been listening on this side of the aisle and if my interpretation of what you said is different than my colleagues', maybe they will stand up and refute what I have just said.

Mr. MILLER of California. If the gentleman will yield for a minute, your interpretation is not terribly important. What I said and the facts of it are important.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I do not yield. I just would like to conclude by saying that I think the majority of the Republican side of the House feels that we must pay attention to the soft underbelly of the United States of America, not only from a military standpoint but from an economic standpoint as well, because the very real risk exists that we will get between 10 and 20 million refugees fleeing Central America and Southern Mexico and coming to our country, which will cause economic chaos.

But there is a military threat as well and if the revolution without borders that Roberto Ortega and Daniel Ortega talk about comes to pass because we do not do what is necessary today, then we are going to have to defend with our life's blood the southern border of this country, and those countries that want to remain free in Central America.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in support of the language.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the proposed prohibition on covert aid to guerrillas fighting the present Government of Nicaragua and wish to commend House Intelligence Committee Chairman EDWARD BOLAND for his continued leadership on this issue.

The question before us today is not whether the Sandinista government has lived up to the promises it made in 1979 to the Organization of American States or, more importantly, to the people of Nicaragua. Nor is it whether that government is aligned with the Soviet Union and its schemes for taking advantage of unrest in Central America. The deficiencies of the ruling junta are evident; to belabor that point only further detracts from what we ought to be discussing today.

At issue is whether the U.S. role in arming and training thousands of Contra guerrillas whose attacks in Nicaragua have claimed untold hundreds of lives and risk sparking a regional conflict is responsible to our position as a world leader. And whether, in the final analysis, this policy has furthered essential U.S. interests in the region.

If the apparent confusion in the White House about U.S. goals in supporting the Contras is any indication, it is little wonder that they have fared so poorly as a military force. President Reagan has, as my colleagues are aware, variously asserted that U.S. policy is designed to stem the flow of arms to El Salvador, to prod the Sandinistas to show greater conciliation toward their people and the nations of the region, and to deny the Soviets greater influence in Central America.

While the administration's intentions may be open to debate in the minds of some, the harsh consequences of our involvement are inescapable. Thousands of Nicaraguans are reported to have died or been wounded in U.S.-sponsored attacks. Our complicity in these acts of violence strains the integrity of this Nation and its devotion to law at home and self-determination abroad. How can we stand righteous among the nations of the world in condemning terrorism while providing the very material and expertise for such attacks in Nicaragua?

Another consequence of this policy has been our growing isolation in world affairs. Revelations last spring about the U.S. role in mining Nicaraguan waters prompted a sharp outcry from even our closest alliies—France and Britain. Mexican officials have been particularly outspoken in their criticism of the current U.S. military buildup in Central America, fearing its effect on regional peace efforts. The U.S. withdrawal from World Court jurisdiction has, as my colleagues well know, been widely interpreted as a sign of our contempt for international law and world opinion.

Within Nicaragua itself, it is increasingly evident that the ever-present threat of full-scale war has been used as a pretense for further radicalization and militarization—at the very expense of those democratic elements we seek to encourage. Experience has shown that a nation under attack is less likely to question restrictions on civil liberties or with whom it is allied.

The President has spoken at length about a flood of Soviet arms passing through Nicaragua to the guerrillas in El Salvador, while declining to make public evidence to support his claims. Meanwhile, top Pentagon officials have testified before Congress that they believe Salvadoran guerrillas obtain most of their weapons from captured Government soldiers and corrupt officials. It should not come as any surprise, therefore, that Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte has offered only his most reluctant support for the Contra effort.

Finally, the war being waged in Nicaragua has heightened regional tensions and threatens, as recent clashes along the Costa Rican border demonstrate, to touch off a broader, regional conflict. Invariably this situation increases the likelihood of a direct U.S. combat role in Central America, and offers greater opportunity for Soviet meddling.

Mr. Chairman, the President would have us believe that the United States is safer when it goes its own way in world affairs, when it employs methods of force that it denounces in others, and when it makes diplomacy a secondary priority to military confrontation. I believe there is another, infinitely better way.

On January 8 representatives of the five key Central American states met under the sponsorship of the Contadora nations to develop a framework for implementing the 21-point plan for peace and regional cooperation adopted last fall. Three commissions were established at that time to draft a regional peace plan to include: reductions in the levels of military force in the region, the withdrawal of all foreign military personnel and equipment, the elimination of illegal arms traffic and support for insurgents, the protection of human rights and free elections, and the promotion of regional cooperation on economic and political issues.

That those negotiations continue despite the accelerating military buildup in the region stands witness to the participants' determination to find solutions on the basis on diplomacy, rather than confrontation. The Contadora process offers the endangered forces of moderation a vital opportunity to exert their influence.

Mr. Chairman, no single actor in the Central American drama has a greater capacity to shape the future direction of events than the United States. The Contadora process presents an opportunity to lead us away from the morass of deepening military conflict in Central America. We must act now, before the escalating chaos precludes the option of diplomacy and makes direct U.S. military intervention all but inevitable.

I appeal, at this late hour, to my colleagues to join in repudiating the administration's haphazard and unworthy policy in Nicaragua as a vital first step toward a peaceful settlement. I strongly urge support for the prohibition on all military or paramilitary activities in Nicaragua.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, when the going gets tough, the United States quits. That's the message the United States broadcasts to the Soviets, Cubans, Nicaraguans, and the rest of the world if it cuts off the Nicaraguan resistance at the knees by withdrawing aid.

We will be taking away the last, best hope for a free Nicaragua.

We will be taking away the only capability we have to keep the Sandinista forces tied down inside Nicaragua, instead of turning outward to spread Marxist totalitarianism to neighboring countries.

We will be taking away the only pressure on the Sandinistas to stay at the negotiating table.

And, most dangerous of all, we will be telling our allies in Central America and the rest of the world that, once again, the United States lacks the fortitude to protect its friends and its security interests in the world. If we do not stand up to Soviet adventurism in Central America, we are going to find ourselves facing Soviet adventurism a lot closer to home, a lot sooner than we think.

Only at a great cost of blood and treasure could the United States, by direct action, contain the efforts of the Sandinista regime to export its totalitarian revolution to El Salvador, Costa Rica, Honduras, and Guatemala. It makes more sense for us to support the Nicaraguan resistance to help contain those efforts now, than it does to ignore the problem and hope that we will not be called upon to protect our allies.

The activities of the Nicaraguan resistance disrupt the efforts of the Sandinistas to support guerrilla subversion of neighboring states and tie up Sandinista military resources in Nicaragua. To accomplish these objectives by overt use of the U.S. Armed Forces would cost far more than the few million dollars we should provide in aid to the Nicaraguan resistance.

For a small financial commitment, the United States would reap the strategic benefit of an organized resistance to the forces to totalitarianism in Central America.

The majority members in the House of Representatives would make a grave mistake today in adopting section 107 of this bill to prohibit certain assistance to the Nicaraguan resistance. We should continue that assistance. Such assistance is in the interest of the United States and of the free peoples of Central America, whose number is diminishing as the Soviet-Cuban-Nicaraguan forces advance from their sanctuaries.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUMP. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Just for the record, statements have been made that the United States has somehow pushed the Sandinistas into the Communist camp. At the same time the Soviets were supplying military aid to the Sandinistas we were voting here on the floor of the House economic aid to them. In fact, it was the largest package ever sent to any country in Central America. And by January 1981, we had authorized over $117 million in economic assistance and supported over $200 million in economic loans. We even proposed that we would have Peace Corps volunteers in Nicaragua.

We did not push those people to where they are today. We tried, and I remember the majority leader's pleading statements down here in the well when he asked us to appropriate that money, and the majority of the Members did.

What happened? They ended up turning it around on us to do the very things the gentleman from Indiana indicated. So I think we have to have a balance in our view of what really happened, what the true facts are down there.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. STUMP. I thank the gentleman, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of section 107, the provision prohibiting funds for the war in Nicaragua. This is the fourth time in the last 2 years the House has voted on the issue: There are compelling reasons for voting again to terminate U.S. assistance to the so-called Contras, the rebel groups fighting the leftist Government of Nicaragua.

Funding these covert operations is clearly harmful to U.S. interests, risks widening the conflict, and diminishes the chances for successful negotiations between the United States and Nicaragua.

We must now devote our energies to political negotiations and turn decisively toward peace. The most important move in this direction is to stop our support of the Contras. Many of the policies of the ruling Sandinista regime are objectionable to us. Those policies have created visible discontent in Nicaragua. But it is not up to us to fund guerrillas whose aim is to overthrow a government we do not like.

The covert action program in Nicaragua clearly has not worked. It has brought peace. It has not stopped the flow of arms and other support to rebels in El Salvador. It has not stopped one shipment of arms passing into El Salvador. It has not forced changes in Nicaragua's domestic policies. It has brought neither peace nor democracy to Nicaragua. Rather, it has strengthened the Sandinistas' resolve and provided justification for its increasingly repressive policies. The war allows Nicaragua to wave the banner of nationalism, rather than to defend its repressive regime. It has brought an increased militarization of life and greated Soviet and Cuban involvement in Nicaragua. It has increased the risk of full-scale regional war that could engulf fragile Honduras and Costa Rica.

Mr. Chairman, we need a new approach to relations with Nicaragua. Secretary Shultz' trip to Nicaragua on Junè 1, 1984, represented the start of a worthy initiative to begin the process of dispelling mutual distrust. I hope results ensue. However, any U.S. dialog with the Sandinistas is likely to take place in a poisoned atmosphere while the covert action continues. Only when the covert war ends will the Sandinistas have reason to believe us when we tell them we are prepared to respond positively if they hold free elections, eliminate press censorship, allow open opposition parties, and—most importantly—halt aid to the Salvadoran insurgents. We cannot talk productively to Nicaragua until our support for the covert war ends.

Secretary Shultz' diplomatic talks with Nicaragua must be supported and strengthened. We would not negotiate with a gun at our heads. We cannot expect others to enter productive talks in those circumstances, either.

I urge defeat of the amendment.

I just want to say a word of appreciation to the chairman and to the ranking member of the Intelligence Committee. I think all of us who have served on that committee know that Chairman BOLAND and the ranking member, the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. ROBINSON, are very special Members of this House of Representatives. In every respect they have been conscientious, skillful fair-minded, and energetic. Without any question they are both patriots and statesmen of a very high order. We will miss both of these gentlemen very greatly in the work of the Intelligence Committee in the years ahead.

All of us who have served with them know that they are legislators' legislators and Congressmen's Congressmen; and they have served in this House with great distinction and reflected great credit upon the institution. We are grateful to them for their leadership on one of the most difficult committees of the House to lead.

I want also to express a word of appreciation to those members of the committee who will be leaving the committee because of the Rules of the House.

In addition to Chairman BOLAND and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBINSON] we will be losing the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI], the gentleman for California [Mr. MINETA], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] on the majority side; and on the minority side the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WHITEHURST], and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YOUNG].

All of these Members have served with extreme dedication, and I think this House is grateful for their service on this very difficult committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to thank the gentleman very much for his fine comments with regard to my service on the committee. He is a valuable member on the committee and had contributed a tremendous amount of time in terms of this service on the Program and Budget Subcommittee, and to the process by which it goes about its business, and that makes his comments even more valuable to me and I thank him.

I would now like to suggest, however, that the matter that we have been discussing, the Nicaraguan Contras matter, has now had another thorough airing in the House. I think everyone that wanted to say something on the subject has had a chance to do so. I would now suggest it is the appropriate time for us to proceed to final passage of the bill.

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. One could not sit here and listen to the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana without responding, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBINSON] did, and as I intend to do.

As he has indicated, this is not the easiest committee to run, either on the majority or the minority side. I think one of the things we have done in the years that we have presided over that committee is that we have structured it so that it has become as nonpartisan as a committee could possibly become.

One of the things in which I and the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. ROBINSON, as well as his predecessor on the minority side, BOB WILSON of California, who was the first ranking minority member have taken the greatest pride over the years has been the structuring of a staff which was nonpartisan, that had the ability to understand what the problems were within the intelligence community, and to be very sure that all intelligence activities responded to the laws. I think we have done that, and all of us take justifiable pride in the record we have built as a committee aided by the finest staffs in the House.

I think those who serve on the Program and Budget Authorization Subcommittee staff probably are as knowledgeable in matters of intelligence as any of the witnesses that come from the intelligence community.

In another area, I think that, just as we have helped establish effective oversight of intelligence, we have built up the ability of our Government to collect intelligence and to analyze it in a way that gives essential facts and analysis to our government and provides for the security of our Government.

I have said often, and Mr. ROBINSON has agreed with me, that those suggestions that say that the CIA is a rogue elephant and runs rampant no longer have value.

I think the CIA has the responsibility of doing the intelligence jobs levied upon it by any administration, be it this administration or a past administration.

I think both Mr. ROBINSON and I can leave this committee with a sense of pride in that in our 7 years we have worked with two administrations, one Democratic, one Republican, to build the intelligence community to make it much more capable to respond to the policy of any administration, to supply critical intelligence to the ultimate user, the Commander in Chief, to the President, and to those who require it in the departments and agencies of Government. We have striven to ensure that such intelligence is useful, that it is of high quality and it contributes to the security of the United States of America.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FOLEY] having assumed the chair, Mr. MURTHA, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5399) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, the intelligence community staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency retirement and disability system, and for other purposes; pursuant to House Resolution 520, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. RUDD

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit H.R. 5399 to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. RUDD. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RUDD moves to recommit H.R. 5399 to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 294, nays 118, answered "present" 1, not voting 20, as follows:

Messrs. JACOBS, STRATTON, GILMAN, HAMMERSCHMIDT, ERDREICH, FLIPPO and MICHEL, Mrs. LLOYD, and Messrs. TAYLOR, LEVITAS, and KAZEN changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. [Mr. BONIOR of Michigan]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 5973.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

The motion was agreed to.

□ 1235

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5973) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, with Mr. GEPHARDT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Tuesday, July 31, 1984, title II was open for amendment at any point, and pending was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] in support of his amendment.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. CONTE was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment on behalf of Mr. WOLPE, Mr. SYNAR, Mr. BROYHILL, and myself. It is a bipartisan amendment, intended to bring under control a Synthetic Fuels Corporation and program that have clearly run amuck.

The question here is not one of Democrats versus Republicans or Congress versus the administration. The only question before us today is whether we will vote in favor of the taxpaying workers of this country, or whether we will vote to bailout the pet projects of the fat cat oil barons. Will we prevent the waste of $10 billion on environmentally unsound projects, or will we continue to add to the deficit with little to show except lavish offices and charges of scandal?

Mr. Chairman, the $10 billion rescission proposed in this amendment is real money. Last week, there was some loose talk on the floor about how this wasn't real spending, this was just like Federal Housing Administration loan guarantees. Well, that's baloney.

As SFC Chairman Edward Noble testified in June, the SFC plans to spend $2.5 billion over the next 5 years—not just guarantee, but spend. The subsidies for price guarantees will have to be paid as soon as the plants begin producing—every single day, the difference between the market price and the guarantee price will have to be paid. At current rates, that would be about $63 per barrel or $1 million per day for the Union Two project. That would be $30 per barrel for the Cathedral Bluffs project. Of course if the projects don't work, we won't have to pick up the price subsidies—we'll just pay the billions of dollars of loan guarantees. I don't know about you, but I consider that real money.

There was a lot of talk last week about the gasoline lines of the 1970's, and about how we shouldn't be pulling out of synthetic fuels at a time of instability in the Persian Gulf.

I remember the gasoline lines and the gasoline prices in 1979. But the price of oil at that time—during the Arab embargo—was still less than half of some of the prices of synthetic fuels that we are being asked to pay by the Synfuels Corporation.

Not only has the price of imported oil dropped significantly since 1980, but so has the amount of oil imported. Oil imports are down 33 percent compared to 1980. And despite the economy's recovery—and the misinformation in this morning's Washington Post editorial—oil imports for the month of July were actually 14 percent below July a year ago.

The other thing to remember about energy security is that we no longer obtain the vast majority of our imported oil from the Middle East. Mexico provides an increasing portion of our imported oil—making us much less dependent upon political and military events in the Persian Gulf.

We also now have a strategic petroleum reserve with 410 million barrels of oil—a reserve of more than 80 days' protection against a total disruption of oil imports, and over 200 days' protection against an OPEC embargo. The way to spend $10 billion on energy security is by filling the strategic petroleum reserve, not by subsidizing the pet projects of the big oil companies.

Mr. Chairman, I know that a lot of my colleagues are concerned about projects or potential projects in their districts. I know that my friends from Pennsylvania are concerned about the Keystone project; many Members are concerned about the Great Plains project in North Dakota; other Members are concerned about projects in Maine and Illinois.

But they may not realize that my amendment will permit all of those projects to be funded. This $10 billion rescission will leave $3 billion for the funding of additional projects—enough to fund all outstanding letters of intent if the two massive Union shale technology projects are dropped, and still leave about $1.9 billion left for new projects. Certainly that will be adequate to fund the kind of small-scale projects that are necessary to demonstrate a diversity of technologies. That's where the future of this program lies—not by letting a few large oil companies suck up billions at a time from the public trough. That's where we'll get our energy security—not by paying $1 million a day at a time when production is increasing and prices are falling.

Have any of my colleagues been reading the Wall Street Journal this week? In Tuesday's Journal we saw that refiners were cutting the prices they paid for crude oil by $1 a barrel, and the Soviet Union was dropping its price to Western Europe to $27.50. Yesterday's Journal featured Quaker State's reduction of the posted price of Pennsylvania Crude to $26 and $25 a barrel in some areas.

Let me ask my friends from the great oil and gas producing States of the Nation how their independent producers are going to like getting $25 or $26 a barrel, while you vote billions in subsidies for Occidental and Tenneco and Exxon to charge $92 a barrel.

Clearly, now is the time—as the demise of OPEC is predicted—to take advantage of the distress sales and fill the strategic petroleum reserve—which represents immediate energy security—rather than bet $10 billion on technology that well not make sense for at least another 10 years, if it ever works at all.

Mr. Chairman, as I said at the beginning, the choice here is very clear—corporate welfare or responsible energy security. Waste and abuse, or taxpayer relief.

I urge the adoption of the $10 billion rescission amendment—reject all substitutes.

□ 1240

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to strongly urge my colleagues to support the bipartisan compromise amendment that I and my colleagues, Mr. CONTE, Mr. SYNAR, and Mr. BROYHILL, have offered to rescind $10 billion from the Synfuels Corporation. And I would further urge my colleagues to oppose all efforts to weaken our amendment.

The Synfuels Corporation was created in the wake of the energy panic of 1979. There is no doubting the good intentions of the Corporation's architects. Our distinguished majority leader in particular, has performed a great public service by highlighting the importance of U.S. energy security—a goal that we all share.

Unfortunately, the technical and economic claims made on behalf of the Synfuels Corporation in 1980 have not been borne out—and it is time to change course. This change is not a retreat from energy security—it is simply recognition of the fact that allowing the Synfuels Corporation to waste billions of dollars will actually prevent us from attaining this important goal.

Despite the good intentions of its original supporters, the Synfuels Corporation has become the single largest example of nonmilitary waste in the entire Federal budget. Unless we take action, the Corporation could waste $10 to $15 billion in a futile attempt to commericalize technologies that are technically immature and economically unviable.

A $10 billion rescission is completely justified—both in terms of fiscal policy and in terms of energy policy. Such a cut would still leave the Synfuels Corporation with over $3 billion—more than enough to support a large and diverse group of intermediate-sized projects.

I would also emphasize that our amendment does not affect the $3 billion in awards that have already been made. If our amendment is successful, we would still have in place a $6 billion synfuels program. It is hard to argue that we have gutted a program by reducing it to $6 billion!

I must add that there is considerable sentiment in the House for abolishing the Synfuels Corporation altogether. Mr. BROYHILL has introduced such legislation. I personally share Mr. BROYHILL's view. However, there are many in the House who acknowledge the waste, incompetence, and scandal at the Synfuels Corporation—but are not yet ready to give up on the concept of the Corporation. And so, we have offered the $10 billion rescission is a reasonable compromise position between those who seek to abolish the Synfuels Corporation, and those who seek to allow it to continue in its wasteful ways.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has expired.

(On request of Mr. WOLPE, and by unanimous consent, Mr. CONTE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I continue to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make two additional points: First, it must be emphasized that the problems at the Synfuels Corporation go far beyond the well-known and well-founded charges of cronyism, incompetence, and unethical conduct. The commercialization of synfuels technologies currently faces insurmountable technical and economic problems. Replacing the Board is not enough. Even the most competent and ethical Board of Directors will not be able to make $92 per barrel oil shale competitive in the marketplace.

Second, it must be understood that this is not a vote against synthetic fuels. This is a vote against waste. It is as simple as that.

I agree with Corporation supporters that we, as a nation, cannot afford to turn our back on the development of synthetic fuels. However, I submit that we will actually strengthen our Synfuels Program if we shift the focus from corporate subsidies for unproductive, wasteful, and premature commercialization, and toward a less costly—but far more valuable—research and development effort.

A stepped-up Synfuels Research and Development Program could solve many of the problems that hamper the commercial viability of synfuels technologies at this time.

Mr. Chairman, we have before us a golden opportunity to both reduce out year deficits by $10 billion while strengthening our Synfuels Development Program.

The passage of our amendment is imperative if we are to move toward a synfuels policy that will both contribute to energy security and avoid wasting billions of taxpayer dollars.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support our bipartisan amendment to cut $10 billion in waste, and to soundly reject all efforts to reduce our rescission.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment and want to commend my colleagues Messrs. CONTE and WOLPE on their leadership and courage in offering this amendment today.

The time has indeed come to question our continued commitment to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. We have all heard the horror stories of bad management, spiraling costs of projects, construction delays, and price guarantees reaching $92 a barrel. What price do we pay for energy independence? Does insulating ourselves from another oil crisis require subsidizing large oil corporation ventures that are dubious at best?

We can all agree that at this time this Nation is not energy independent and that this should continue to be one of our No. 1 priorities. But, I submit that we can achieve this goal without continuing our commitment to the revenue-draining Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I am not saying that we should abandon the technologies of synthetic fuels but lets get out of the business.

If we are truly committed to energy independence through the efficient use of our energy resources and the development of alternative fuels, then lets get on with it. We can't be assisting large corporations in exploratory projects on the one hand while on the other we retreat from initiatives supporting energy conservation and the development of renewable energy resources, such as solar, wind, and biomass fuels.

I rise, today, Mr. Chairman to not only support the recession of funds from the SFC but to also offer an alternative. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to study my bill H.R. 5930, the Replacement Motor Fuels Act of 1984, which I introduced along with six of my colleagues on June 26.

This bill offers indeed a viable alternative to the SFC approach. Quite simply, the legislation requires that by 1992, refiners substitute 10 percent of their total gasoline production with alternative fuels. They could mix the fuels themselves, or contract with others to do it. They would have flexibility to alter their percentages at different times of the year and among the geographic regions they serve. If they failed to meet the goal at the end of the year, they would be fined a dollar for each gallon of fuel sold in violation of the law.

This proposal creates an assured market for substitute fuels. Any number of alternatives are available or can be produced to meet this mandate, including alcohol from grains, wood or garbage, synthetic fuel from coal, or oil from shale. The fuels would be determined by marketplace competition. There would be no cost to the Federal Government, except for enforcement.

Our efforts in the past to develop a domestic alternative fuels industry have centered on stimulating production through tax incentives and Government subsidies. Our experiences with the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and the disappointing performance of other alternative fuels in the market has proven that this supply side approach has not worked and has been a revenue drain. This legislation is a demand-side approach. Create a market through a mandate and then allow normal market forces to take over. In fact, Mr. Chairman, this approach does not at all abandon the projects supported by the SFC but rather represents an opportunity for them to be profitable within the market system. Which is more than I can say for them now.

The oil companies today have the technology available to utilize alternative fuels in their production of gasoline. In fact, there is evedence to indicate that this can be done without drastic increases to the price of a gallon of gasoline while improving the octane rating of the resultant fuel.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all my colleagues to give serious consideration to H.R. 5930, the Replacement Motor Fuels Act of 1984, as a viable strategy to attain energy independence. I direct my colleagues to my remarks on this bill, which includes a summary of its major provisions, in the June 29, 1984, Part II CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. YATES TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONTE

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YATES to the amendment offered by Mr. CONTE: after "rescinded" insert the following: ": Provided, That none of the funds from the Energy Security Reserve shall be available for the Union II or Cathedral Bluffs oil shale projects."

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to make sure that none of the funds that would remain with the Synthetic Fuels Corporation in the event that the Conte amendment is accepted or the Ratchford amendment is accepted, or any of the others are accepted, woud be available for the two most expensive synthetic fuels projects that have received letters of intent.

My good friend from Massachusetts, SILVIO CONTE, in an impassioned address on Tuesday talked about Cadillacs and talked about the possible consequences of contracts under the letters of intent that were being issued by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

□ 1250

The two worst offenders in this respect are Union II and the Cathedral Bluffs Corp. These projects, although they do offer additional capacity, do little to enhance the diversity goal that is put forward by the Energy Security Act. They are related to the Union I project. They will offer no new kinds of technical knowledge that will advance the state of the art on synthetic fuels.

Section 126 of the Energy Security Act says this:

The corporation, in discharging its responsibilities, shall employ financial assistance to projects in such manner as will, in the judgment of the Board of Directors, imcorporate a technological diversity of processes, methods and techniques for each domestic resource that offers significant potential for use as a synthetic fuel feedstock.

Currently, Union Oil has a $400 million price guarantee for its Union I project. These additional oil shale projects, Union II and Cathedral Bluffs, essentially duplicate what Union Oil is struggling now to get started.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman from Illinois. We are on the same wave length.

Let me ask the gentleman this question: The gentleman did support me in the full committee on the $9 billion rescission amendment I offered. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, would he support my $10 billion rescission?

Mr. YATES. I would put it this way, I would say to my good friend: If my amendment is adopted, I will support the Ratchford amendment, because the waste that was implicit in underlying the gentleman's amendment will have been removed. The $92 per barrel oil contract is the Union II contract, and if the House accepts my amendment, no funds will be allowable in the future for Union II or Cathedral Bluffs, we have diversity of techniques, we have the opportunity for going forward with synfuels technology.

The thing that remains then is for the administration to correct the disgraceful—the disgraceful—plight of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, and I say that the action of the administration has been disgraceful in not providing a Synthetic Fuels Corporation that did adequate service in reviewing the synthetic fuels industry.

Mr. CONTE. If the gentleman will yield further, does the gentleman agree with me that if our $10 billion rescission is passed, it will take care of this Union II situation?

Mr. YATES. It will take care of part of the situation. I am informed by gentlemen who are associated with the gentleman in his amendment that it is possible for some of the funds that remain to be used on either Union II or Cathedral Bluffs; not on both of them, but it is possible to be used on one of them.

So the gentleman's amendment will not take care of it. However, in the event that the amendment of Mr. RATCHFORD passes without my amendment, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation will then be in a position to provide the additional funds for either Union II or for Cathedral Bluffs, both of which I think are what the House was trying to reach when it voted down the rule last Tuesday.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make sure I understand this amendment. Basically, what the gentleman's amendment would do is to provide no funding for the two projects that he has mentioned.

Mr. YATES. That is correct.

Mr. DICKS. But it would provide funding for the first Union project. That would still be in place.

Mr. YATES. That is correct.

Mr. DICKS. Are there any commitments that the Government has at this point to the second and third projects?

Mr. YATES. To the best of my knowledge, no. There are letters of intent that have been issued, but there has been no quorum of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation which would enable a contract to be consummated.

Mr. DICKS. Would there be any liability to the Government on those two projects if we rescind the money?

Mr. YATES. I asked that question specifically of staff, and I asked that question specifically of those who are allied with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and the answer I have received is that there are no commitments by the Government to any project other than the four projects, which include Union Oil No. 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] has expired.

(On request of Mr. DICKS and by unanimous consent, Mr. YATES was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. YATES. According to the GAO, after adjusting for the inflation index, the GAO concludes that what now may be $67 per barrel could be $92 per barrel in December 1989 when increment I is scheduled to begin production. That is with respect to the Union Oil II tentative agreement.

According to the GAO, Union's phase II project will yield an average annual after-tax rate of return of 20.6 percent. In addition, Union will reap attractive tax benefits from the project. The project will be eligible for $724 million in tax credits, and $3.4 billion in depletion allowance over its life.

The Cathedral Bluffs project is the most expensive of all of them in terms of cost per barrel of capacity. The projected daily capacity of the project is 14,100 barrels of oil per day. The price guarantee agreement is $2,190,000,000, and in the case of Cathedral Bluffs, the cost per barrel of capacity comes out to $155,319.

In summary, both the Union Oil and Cathedral Bluffs projects, which now have letters of intent from the corporation, add little in the way of additional technological diversity since they are derived from the same technology being tried with Union I. They are expensive. Union II may come in at $92 per barrel. Cathedral Bluffs is costly in terms of cost-per-barrel of capacity.

If these projects are excluded, the Corporation will have more room to provide greater technological diversity at what I hope will be a lower cost.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that I find the gentleman's amendment very troubling because I was not aware of it before this moment, and I do not think the other Members of the House had any prior knowledge that it could be offered here today.

What this amendment does is deal with the problem of oil shale in this country. What it does is preclude any option to proceed beyond the Union project with respect to oil shale. What you need to know is that oil shale is our largest single potential reserve. There was great joy in this country over the Prudhoe Bay oil find, and indeed there should have been. It helped to make us a little bit more independent of events in the Middle East, events that trigger our consciousness every day. Prudhoe Bay is about one-tenth the size of the potential reserves that can come to this country through oil shale, should that technology be perfected. No one would agree quicker than I that this technology is difficult—but it is technology that we ought to pursue—not proclude from future consideration. This is an amendment which the Members of this House have not had proper time to consider.

I think that is bad management.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDADE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the point that I sought to make is that I have no opposition to the oil shale technique. It is going forward with Union I.

Mr. McDADE. If the gentleman will allow me to reclaim my time, I think he would agree with me that the Union project is proving to be very difficult. Would the gentleman not agree with that?

Mr. YATES. I agree that the Union project is difficult, but I say further it will not be enhanced by Union II.

Mr. McDADE. Let me say to my friend that I do not think he knows that, and I do not know that. If we are going to have a synthetic fuel corporation, we ought to encourage it to explore all potential technological developments. I do not think we ought to foreclose, by an amendment on the floor of the House at 1 o'clock on a given afternoon, the opportunity to achieve a diversified program.

It seems to me, may I say to my friend from Illinois, that if we are going to look at oil shale, and my gracious, we should, we ought not to be in a position in this country to say, "We are going to try other technologies. We are going to try gasification and liquefaction," and my friend favors that, "but not oil shale." We ought not to say we are going to rely on the Union project to unlock the key.

May I say to my friend that there are no contracts signed, as he has correctly stated. There are letters of intent to go ahead on two additional projects on oil shale. I simply say to the House and to my friend from Illinois, whom I admire very greatly, I do not believe that we ought to close the door on that possibility. If we adopt this amendment here today, we close the door on additional technological development with respect to oil shale.

That would be an enormous mistake. I hope this will be voted down.

I want my colleagues to recognize what we are talking about in terms of this country vis-a-vis the Middle East, and its use as some kind of buffer against events that take place there.

I have a list that I got from the Library of Congress on what has been going on in the gulf since November of 1983, right after the French sold the first Exocet missile. In 1983, November 3 through December 22, four ships either sunk or disabled in the Middle East.

The list is here if anyone wants to come and look at it. It is not my list. It belongs to the Library of Congress.

□ 1300

In 1984 there have been 12 attacks in the Persian Gulf on tankers trying to bring oil to the free world. When we talk about oil shale, we cannot separate it from those attacks in the Middle East. We recognize the fact that the oil shale technology might—and we ought to get down on our knees every night and pray that it will do so—might offer some kind of independence from what is going on in the Middle East and around the world.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment offered by my dear friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts—and I respect him greatly—will be voted down. I do not think it ought to have been offered in this context, and I hope it will be voted down by the House.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, the inquiry is this: Is it too late to raise a point of order against this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RATCHFORD. I have some questions, then, Mr. Chairman, that I wish to direct to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], who is the author of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman request time?

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, does the chairman of the subcommittee feel that there has been an adequate evaluation of these two particular projects so that he is prepared at this point to say that no further funding from this bill shall be provided to these two projects?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RATCHFORD. I am happy to yield to the subcommittee chairman.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois believes that the letters of intent conjure up contracts that are so horrendously expensive that even were the oil shale technology to work out in Union II and Cathedral Bluffs, the cost to the Government would outweigh any possible benefits.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman respond further to a question?

Mr. YATES. Yes, I will be glad to answer a question.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, the question is: Are there studies that the gentleman could share with us that would reflect the facts that he described earlier this afternoon?

Mr. YATES. Certainly. I would be glad to provide the gentleman with the GAO study in that respect.

Mr. RATCHFORD. What is the date of that GAO study?

Mr. YATES. I do not have that date at the moment. I would be glad to provide that to the gentleman later.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Does the gentleman have specific recommendations from that GAO study that he could share with us?

Mr. YATES. Yes. The recommendations from the GAO study were those I stated on the floor. The GAO study pointed out the enormity of the expense facing the taxpayers.

May I say to the gentleman that if my amendment is accepted, as I said, I propose to support the gentleman's amendment, which in turn will leave sufficient funds to take care of the project that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] is interested in and the project that others in the State of Illinois are interested in. It does not do away with the funding that the Conte amendment would.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman certainly is enticed, but I certainly am also aware that there are Members on the floor who do have concerns with the two projects that in effect would be cut off with the impact of this amendment if it were successful.

Mr. YATES. Yes, I know that. I am sure there are Members who would be concerned with the impact of either the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] or the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD]. I am sure there are those who would just as soon not have the gentleman's amendment offered either.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. RATCHFORD TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONTE, AS AMENDED

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RATCHFORD to the amendment offered by Mr. CONTE, as amended: Strike $10,000,000,000 and insert in lieu thereof $5,000,000,000.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment as a middle ground to those who are concerned with what we are taking up, what we are discussing, and what we are debating this afternoon.

I agree with much of what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Michigan. I agree also that the management of this Corporation has been horrendous. These comments come from a Member who sat through hearings as a member of the Subcommittee on the Interior of the Committee on Appropriations when we had a series of witnesses in from the Synthetic Fuel Corporation describing their activities. The only word that I can use for their management of this Corporation is the word that I have used, and that word is "horrendous."

But I think, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Michigan is a classic case of going too far. It is a case of throwing the baby out with the bathwater.

I remember as a new Member of Congress the activity that served as the catalyst for creation of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I remember the gas lines of 1979. I was in my first year as a Member of this body, and I can recall going back to Connecticut, I can recall the agony, I can recall the pain, and I can recall the anxiety and the inconvenience to the motoring public of America as a result of the OPEC countries shutting off the flow of oil to this country. I can also recall the debate in this body in 1980 when Member after Member after Member rushed to the well of the House to suggest that synthetic fuels were the answer to our future and were the key to our energy independence, and they could not wait to bless this proposal as the way to go as far for our future in energy.

But the response in 1984 is typical. We started with great fanfare, we started with great enthusiasm, we started with great momentum, and then in typical fashion we lose interest, we lose initiative, and now we are prepared to pull the plug.

Make no mistake about it, if we approve the Conte-Wolpe amendment, that is exactly what we are doing, pulling the plug. And if we pull the plug on August 2, 1984, I predict that some future Congress will be back reinventing some form of the Synthetic Fuel Corporation, reinventing and providing momentum for a synthetic fuel program, and reinventing it at a more expensive cost than we currently face.

What my amendment does is to rescind the amount of $5 billion. It is a middle position, it is a moderate position, and I think we do need to look at some of the facts. In the flurry of paper that we have seen back and forth in the "Dear Colleagues" on this issue, it is suggested that if the Conte-Wolpe amendment is approved, we would reduce the Federal deficit by $10 billion. Some suggest that if the McDade-Ratchford amendment is approved, we would reduce that Federal deficit by $5 billion. Let me say to the Members that we are not talking about a deficit situation. We are talking about rescinding budget authority, not outlays, and that needs to be on the record.

Second, as far as what would be left, it needs to be stated that the Deficit Reduction Act that this body and the other body passed and was then signed into law by the President calls for a $2 billion rescission in this program. So what we are talking about, if we approve the Conte-Wolpe amendment, is leaving $3.2 billion.

We are talking about the need in this country to develop synthetic fuels for commercial use. I would suggest that this program already has made a modest start in that direction. One facility, the Great Plains gasifier, has already produced high Btu natural gas from coal. In addition to that, there are a number of other projects that will be examined in the future if we allow the authority to go forward.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what we are talking about is whether or not we do pull the plug on energy independence. We hear that we are awash in oil, that we do not have problems currently. As current as today, there was the suggestion on the news networks that OPEC was talking about getting ready to reduce production again so they could put a squeeze on this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. RATCHFORD was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the Members that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] and myself is a middle ground, is a moderate proposal, but what it does not do is to put a roadblock up to the move toward energy independence in this country.

If the amendment is adopted, there is no question that we need further oversight, and that is our responsibility. There is no question but that we need better management and that is our responsibility to administer, to come up with replacements to this Board who are competent in this area; but what we do if we approve of this amendment is to say we are prepared to correct, we are prepared to modify, we are prepared to make adjustments, but we do not want as a country to stop our movement toward energy independence.

I do not for a minute suggest this is an easy vote, but I do suggest it is a necessary vote if we are going to move toward energy security and if we are going to keep this country strong. If we are going to recall all that momentum in 1980, I do suggest that the only way we can move forward is by the approval of this McDade-Ratchford amendment.

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RATCHFORD. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks and to support him.

I have a situation in my district where a constituent has already spent over $4 million of his own money, a small businessman, a small venture, waiting on a quorum of directors of this Synfuels Corporation to act on his application. I hope that all of his work and investment is not thrown out the window at this particular time by any reduction that might deny his group the opportunity to prove what they can do and help prevent an energy shortage in the future.

I would hope, as the gentleman has said, that the administration will see to it that this Corporation is straightened out and begins to function properly in the interest of our country.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

I think that we have been debating here on a lot of philosophy. I think in order to be realistic we ought to take a look at the projects that have been given letters of intent by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and see what the real situation is, why some of us who are sponsoring and supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] feel so strongly that we need to cut back far more from this program than has been suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

This chart lists the eight projects that have been given letters of intent by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The Union shale project is technology that has not worked. That has already been taken care of by the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Also No. 2 here was taken care of by the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES]; but look at these other six projects, if you would. The Great Plains coal gasification plant has already received over $2 billion of Government guarantees from the Department of Energy and they are back asking for almost a billion dollars more. I think it is a textbook example of how you begin funding these huge, enormous, uneconomic projects and you have to keep pouring in even more subsidies.

Now, look at the No. 4, northern peat energy project. Well, that project is to turn peat moss into brickets. And what is that going to replace? That is going to replace wood or coal and it is going to do it at some three times the cost of wood or coal on the open market. Now, does that make sense to you?

Wood and coal are our most abundant resources and the purpose of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was supposed to be developing a liquid fuel, those kinds of liquid fuels that could be used for transportation.

Now, let us look at No. 5, Kentucky Tar Sands.

Mr. Chairman, the sponsor, the Kentucky Tar Sands, has backed out of the project. Even $55 per barrel was not enough to keep them in.

Let us look at No. 6, the final three projects, 6, 7, and 8. They are small, heavy oil and shale research projects and they are very similar to projects that are being undertaken by other companies who have asked for no Federal assistance whatsoever.

Now, what I am asking the Members to do is to take a close look at this chart. These are some of the boondoggles that are going to be funded if the Ratchford amendment passes. We are not going to achieve energy security.

Now, Mr. Chairman, energy security is really the issue here. All of us support cost effective synthetic fuel programs, but these are not. The issue is whether or not you can develop alternative energy supply sources that are cost effective and that do contribute to energy security. In order to do that, they must be reliable. They must be cost effective. They must be environmentally sound and if you develop this kind of industry, it must be able to sustain itself and to grow within the economy itself. None of the projects that are listed here come anywhere close to meeting that kind of criteria. In fact, we find throughout this, we have dropouts, companies like Exxon and Ashland, Sohio, Mobil, and Westinghouse, that are dropping out from the sponsorship of any of these projects.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for yielding. I just want to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks in support of the Conte amendment and emphasize the point the gentleman in the well is just making now.

It is not just that the amount of the subsidy is so great that I would call to the attention of the Members, but if you look down the chart the gentleman has presented to us here, every one of those projects includes not only just a loan guarantee, but a price guarantee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

(At the request of Mr. WEBER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. BROYHILL was allowed to proceed for an additional 2 minutes.)

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

From my standpoint, the loan guarantee is not so objectionable, but the price guarantee tells us something else. It tells us that the product being produced by the process is not competitive in the marketplace and may not be competitive in the marketplace in the foreseeable future.

It strikes me as important that all of the projects the gentleman has listed on the chart include price guarantees, which tells us not just that the initial capital costs are burdensome, which many of us maybe would find palatable, but that in no case do we have a project that has a product that is marketable in today's economy.

Mr. BROYHILL. Well, what we are finding is that the sponsors are asking for huge subsidies and continuing subsidies, which means and indicates to us that these projects are not economically viable at some point in the future. In other words, they cannot be sustained without continued massive subsidies. They cannot survive without these huge subsidies. It seems to me that it does not meet the criteria that I listed a few minutes ago, reliability, cost effectiveness, environmental soundness and being able to sustain itself somewhere along the road. That is what my argument is, that we need to cut back, to pare back this program. The remaining amounts of money can be put into those kinds of projects and then we can learn from that.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BROYHILL. Yes.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would ask the gentleman a question. In the case of those projects, all of which require price guarantees, can the gentleman tell us what happens if we run out of subsidies under the program and the market price of the product produced still is not sufficient to sustain the capital investment in the project?

Mr. BROYHILL. Well, that is my argument, that if they cannot sustain themselves in the economy, they will just have to close down, so we will have dropped a lot of money down a rathole and have done nothing to help the consumer.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BROYHILL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. WEBER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. BROYHILL was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WEBER. There is, of course, Mr. Chairman, a second option. They could come to this body at this point and say, "Well, listen, Congress has put all this money into this plant. It would be terrible to waste all that money now just because the market isn't quite ready. Shouldn't we have an additional subsidy on top of all the money that we have already put into the project?"

□ 1320

Which means that the amount of money we may be saving today by voting for the Conte amendment is far more than the money just embodied, envisioned in this amendment, but over the long term may be billions and billions of dollars.

Mr. BROYHILL. As I pointed out, some of the projects on this list that have received letters of intent are already in that category. They have received massive subsidies already and they are back asking for more before they are even operating.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, today this House will vote on the future of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, and whatever the outcome, Synfuels will be chastened by this congressional review, as well it should be.

A clear and convincing case of mismanagement has been made. The administration which now seeks to wash its hands of synthetic fuels must be held accountable for one of the worst records of Federal appointment in modern memory. Credit must be given to my colleagues, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Congressman CONTE, the gentleman from Michigan, HOWARD WOLPE, and the gentleman from Oklahoma, MIKE SYNAR, for their diligent review of Synfuels which has guaranteed to this Nation a full accounting of the stewardship of this agency.

I listened very closely to the arguments just made by the gentleman from North Carolina and the colloquy on the floor about the market competitiveness of the various projects that are being considered by Synthetic Fuels.

I was not a Member of the Congress when the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was created, but it appears to me that if this agency was created and given the tools of loan guarantees and price supports, then it was certainly created with the notion that the products that were to be produced from this process would not be market competitive immediately. The idea behind this agency was to provide some Government assistance to this production capability so that in the long term and medium term those products which we will need in this country would be available.

I would urge my colleagues as they vent their frustrations over the lackluster record of this agency that their zeal be tempered. A $10 billion cut does more than punish this agency for past mistakes. A $10 billion cut closes the door on the future of our national commitment to energy independence.

Attempting to kill any specific projects by enacting a $10 billion rescission will also mean killing, among other things, a Midwestern coal project which would bring thousands of jobs to a depressed area and new hope to a struggling coal industry.

Coal brought immigrants into my part of the world, and settled many fine communities in my district. But today, most of the mines are closed. The coal is there still in incredible abundance. In fact, one-third of the national reserve of coal is located in the State of Illinois. But the threats of acid rain and the world energy demands have resulted in many of these coal communities becoming ghost towns.

With the $10 billion cut that is being suggested today by the Conte-Wolpe amendment, the hope of this new Midwestern coal gasification facility will die aborning.

Turning the lights out at Synfuels today may cripple our national synfuel industry for years to come. Companies which have spent years preparing applications and millions of dollars will see that there is no evidence that this agency is viable or reliable in the future.

Can we expect any private group if we cut $10 billion today to make a dollar commitment to a project down the line? I think not.

Let us not leave this Chamber beaming with the political victory of cutting $10 billion and expose tomorrow's Americans to the threat of an OPEC blackmail. Let us not leave this Chamber today flush with the feeling of retribution and destroy promising energy resources which our children may need to survive in this troubled world.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes for the Ratchford-McDade amendment and no on the Conte-Wolpe amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. I just want to congratulate the gentleman from Illinois for a remarkably perceptive statement. The gentleman is absolutely right. He understands precisely what it was that we were undertaking to achieve in 1980 when we created the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

The purpose was not to encourage people to do those things that would otherwise be economically successful. People will do those things in any event. The purpose was to encourage private individuals and corporations and businesses to take a risk, a big risk, to invest money in something that was in the national interest, the result of which would be to help us achieve energy independence for the future of the United States.

A great many companies did respond.

While the administration of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation certainly has been far from admirable, in my personal judgment, nevertheless, the results are quite good. They have been exactly what we hoped, not fully what we hoped but they have been in a direction that we had hoped for.

We have expended to date through the Synthetic Fuels Corporation some $53 million of public moneys and have leveraged a total of more than $200 billion of private expenditures. People have spent their own money trying to develop these processes, more than $2 billion worth of private money. That is what we were trying to do. We have saved the Government that much. It would have cost the Government that money, I suppose, if we had undertaken to do it as we did with the Synthetic Rubber Program, as a Government program.

So the gentleman is exactly right. The purpose was to encourage private individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] has expired.

(On request of Mr. TAUKE and by unanimous consent Mr. DURBIN was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. WRIGHT. The purpose was indeed to encourage private individuals and private firms to make those long-term investments in processes that were not economically competitive on the current market and they have been doing so.

So the gentleman is absolutely right. Yes, it will cost the Government some money in loan guarantees, not the whole amounts that are committed, because nobody can judge what the price of oil will be next year. I do not know. Whatever I suggest would be a guess.

But the gentleman is exactly right. It is aimed and was intended for expressly that purpose, to create the production for the energy independence of the United States of processes which would not otherwise be undertaken on a private market.

Mr. TAUKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. TAUKE. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I know that he has a special interest in the project in Illinois. And when he talked about the project in our last debate on this issue, I, too, took an interest in it because I know that it is something that has impact on the Midwest.

As I understand the project which the gentleman has supported, and which he does not want to have stricken as a result of the adoption of an amendment such as the Conte amendment, it is a project called CODA I, which uses a Texaco gasifier to produce anhydrous ammonia. Is that correct?

Mr. DURBIN. That is correct.

Mr. TAUKE. First of all, I guess I have to ask the gentleman why should we produce anhydrous ammonia for the Midwest when we already have such a surplus of the product?

Mr. DURBIN. As the gentleman is well aware, the price of anhydrous ammonia fertilizer to the farmers in the Midwest has been going up in a skyrocketing fashion, and presently costs more than $200 a ton. It is a commodity which our farming communities are using more of each year and finding the cost going up.

At the present time, as a nation, we import anhydrous ammonia fertilizer from Mexico and the Soviet Union. What we are attempting to do is to find a domestic source with a feed stock that we can count on, like our coal, and to bring down the price, or at least stabilize it so that our farmers who are facing terrible overhead costs will not be ravaged by this expense.

Mr. TAUKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. TAUKE. What is the price of the product that is going to be produced from that production?

Mr. DURBIN. The gentlemen from the Coal Gasification Corp. have indicated that the price will at least be at current market levels or perhaps lower. What it will do is stabilize the price of the commodity which has been rising dramatically over the last several years with the increased costs of natural gas in our region, which I am sure the gentleman is well aware of.

Mr. TAUKE. I guess it is interesting to me to observe that my information tells me, first of all, that today our current domestic industry is hurting badly because it is operating only at 70 percent of capacity. In order to employ people in your district, you are going to put people in other districts out of business.

Two, the price of domestic ammonia, in my judgment, is not $200, but substantially lower than that, in some cases as low as $150, because of the foreign competition and the price of the product coming out of your project, as I understand it, is projected to be $275.

Three, the reason that we have the imports is not because we do not have sufficient domestic capacity or sufficient domestic resources. It is because of the fact that the Mexicans and others are subsidizing their natural gas to their ammonia producers and as a result are able to produce it much cheaper.

For us to put money into a project which expands our domestic capacity when we cannot use what we have now, which undermines those domestic industries as a result and which produces a project which cannot possibly meet the domestic competition, much less the foreign competition, does not make a lot of sense to me.

Mr. DURBIN. If I can reclaim my time, I think the figure used by the gentleman of $275 a ton is far beyond any figure I have heard for the production of this facility.

□ 1330

Local domestic producers are closing down because the natural gas prices are going so high that they cannot compete with imports. The gentleman is correct. The difficulty is we have to decide as a nation whether this key ingredient in American farming is going to become an imported product and we will be blackmailed in our farming communities by the Mexican producers and perhaps those in the Soviet Union. Does it not make more sense for us to develop a process that commercially produces anhydrous ammonia fertilizer at a stable price from a domestic source, creates jobs in our region and gives to our farm community some stability in pricing in anhydrous ammonia fertilizer?

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The point has been made that the purpose of the corporation, in theory, is to commercialize those technologies that the private sector will not undertake. Is it not true that the Texaco gasifier technology that the gentleman seeks to subsidize for this particular project in Illinois is precisely the same technology that was developed by the Kodak Co., without a dime of Federal assistance?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] has expired.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request for the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McKINNEY. Reserving the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut reserves the right to object.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think we have had show and tell, pictures and graphs, conversation and I would hope that the gentleman would allow some debate on this issue without an intermediary. So I trust we would not keep continually asking to extend the time.

I will not object.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I will not ask for any further extensions.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DURBIN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOLPE. I stated that Kodak had developed the technology and it was actually developed by Texaco, but Kodak incorporated it into their own process in Tennessee without a dime of Federal assistance.

Mr. DURBIN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he gets to the root of one of the real items that should be brought up in debate. I have heard it said by the gentleman and many others that what we really want to do is to see synfuels develop R&D in this country. That is not the mandate of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The mandate of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is commercialization, to take proven technology and develop it in a commercial fashion so that we can have some energy independence.

The process that I have suggested does not subsidize the Texaco gasification process. It subsidizes the gasification of Illinois coal into anhydrous ammonia fertilizer.

I might also add to the gentleman that even as we stand here and debate as a nation whether we ought to do this, Japan is developing a plant at the present time that will bring coal across the Pacific Ocean from British Columbia, turn it into anhydrous ammonia fertilizer, come back to Iowa and Illinois and sell it at a profit. And when they do, we will still be debating in Congress whether it is a good idea.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me.

Mr. DURBIN. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. RATCHFORD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely correct. What we are talking about is a commercialization; the issue of research and development is contained in other parts of the bill.

We make a strong commitment to research and development for gasification, for liquefaction, for coming up with a clean means of burning coal. But what we are talking about in the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is taking that R&D one step farther so that we can commercialize it and make it available for public use.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DURBIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize what my friend from Illinois has said and what my friend from Connecticut has said, and it is a very basic point in terms of what this debate is all about. This is not an R&D package. We need to understand that.

This is an effort to try to commercialize technology that does not now exist. If you want to find the basis for the R&D effort in this whole field, you go back to Adolf Hitler who ran his entire war machine on this process that was developed back in the 1930's. Cost was not relevant. They simply used technology.

We have been going up that pyramid to try to find a way in this Nation to bring to fruition commercial scale plants that can help back us off our dependence on foreign imports, our dependence on events in the Middle East, our dependence on an inflationary and highly explosive economy that could have millions of people unemployed tomorrow if we do not build that insulation in.

The point the gentleman made, and the point my friend from Connecticut made is fundamental, my colleagues, we are not talking about a pilot-scale R&D project. They are in this bill and in other bills.

What we are talking about, as my friend from Texas said, is developing a workable diversified synthetic fuels program for our Nation's future energy independence.

We should be focusing on the future, not the current energy situation.

The gentleman [Mr. DURBIN] makes an excellent point.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Ratchford amendment.

I remember many years ago standing in front of this group and looking over at my good friend, the majority leader from Texas, and holding up one finger, speech number one.

"The time is late." And how well that Texas oratory could roll forth with that expression. But how right he was. And, boy, how quickly we forget. This is not an R&D program. Mr. McDADE from Pennsylvania, Mr. RATCHFORD from Connecticut covered it.

This was a program set up to commercialize something so that we will not become the patsies of the world. To make possible tomorrow, if need be, every independence.

My friends, you want to talk about spending money? Take a little look at Chicago and a bank called Continental Illinois; you have spent more Federal money paid by your bank customers to bail out a bank because it was so big that nobody else would touch it. Except, guess who did have the money to buy it? Guess who did have the money to buy it? Foreign sources. Guess where they got the money. They got it because of our gluttony, stupidity and pigheadedness in sending 60, 70, 80, 90—who cares, it is too much—billions of dollars overseas to purchase foreign oil.

Are we not satisfied to spend a little bit to try to become independent? Are we going to sit around and have our foreign policy run by the Arabs, our economics run by the Arabs, Israel's future hanging on the Arabs? Is that the way we want this country run? Are we satisfied to sit here and have the eighth largest financial institution in this country be bailed out by the Federal Government and the people that pay taxes and bank fees into the FDIC because we have to really sort of stay away from having the eighth largest financial institution in the United States of America bought by foreign entities? Do we forget what it really is like?

You know, I have heard the Wall Street Journal quoted to day, wonderful newspaper. "Heard on the Street," we have heard about that column, have we not? It seems to me some of our friends downtown are busy about that column.

These guys, this predictor is the same wonderful people that told us about our booming oil business; now all our drilling bit companies are going bankrupt. They told us things would be wonderful so that the Committee on Banking and Currency had to look at the Penn Square failure, one of the worst oil disasters in banking.

But we sit back and say we do not need energy independence.

I wonder; why is the rest of the world smarter? Why are the Japanese doing what they are doing with ammonia? I sat in this very building 6 years ago and spoke to some gentlemen from South Africa. I said, "Gentlemen I do not understand it. You have the gold, you have the diamonds, you have minerals you have not found yet, you are prosperous in natural wealth beyond belief. Why are you building SASOL 1 and SASOL 2?"

Do you know why? They said, "We do not choose to sell our diamonds, we do not choose to sell our gold at the price the Arabs establish."

I then spoke to the Brazilians, who had transferred half of their mobility fuel use to mandatory alcohol use. I said why. We do not even know what is in Brazil, we do not even know what is in Brazil as far as minerals. The Brazilians said the same thing, "We want to control the price of our natural resources."

This issue is simply this: To build a commercialization of synthetic fuels for the United States of America so that when and if—and we hope it does not happen—the Middle East blows up we can protect the integrity of Israel, we can protect the integrity of our economy, we can stop spending billions and billions of dollars overseas. Those dollars come back to haunt us; we can stop looking at banks like Continental Illinois which have 30-day deposits forced on them by the Arabs, and we in fact can be in charge of the greatest nation in the world.

If you do not have energy independence you do not have control of your economy, your manufacturing, your jobs or you foreign policy. You in fact are no longer a world leader. Think about it.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to these arguments and the arguments made before about this program with great care. It is just a myth that is being perpetrated here that the synthetic fuels program has any relevance to energy security. I just cannot understand how this House could possibly buy it.

To commercialize exotic technology now when you have available already the technology to make methanol out of coal at today's prices or below today's prices, makes no sense at all. To go and invest in these exotic technologies at incredible prices is just a way to avoid really doing something, if you want to do something to make ourselves energy independent, to use our coal in an economic way.

We had testimony before our committee by responsible engineering companies that you could make methanol from coal today as low as 40 cents a gallon. Of course, the big oil companies that own most of our coal do not want to do that. Methanol at 40 cents a gallon is the equivalent of—since it has half of the energy value as gasoline—80 cents a gallon, which is still well below today's price.

All of our testimony on methanol was that methanol from coal can be produced at lower than 60 cents a gallon, which is what today's prices of gasoline are in the equivalent.

So, why should we engage in these exotic projects, even assuming you had a competent board in the Synthetic Fuel Corporation, when in fact you could make methanol from coal today at economic prices.

Look at the prices the Synfuels Corporation is contemplating. The price supports offered by the Synthetic Fuel Corporation are just astronomically above today's prices: $60 to $67 per barrel for oil shale, perhaps as the GAO says, up to $92 per barrel from the Union Oil project.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] says, and we have adopted his amendment, that we have done away with the Union Oil and the Cathedral oil shale projects. But do no believe it for a minute. The Senate is not going to go along with that. I would be very much surprised if we did not see those projects reappear again from conference.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OTTINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I will not take much of the gentleman's time. But in addition to the excellent point that the gentleman from New York is making, I want to correct the RECORD on a point made by our previous colleague in the well, the gentleman from Connecticut.

The argument about Japan and South Africa just does not wash. The Japanese situation is totally different than ours. We have a nation there that has basically no energy resources whatsoever of their own, certainly no natural gas resources domestically. The South Africans, of course, are a politically isolated country in the world who have political reasons for desiring to develop energy independence.

I thank the gentleman for yielding. I am sorry that our colleague from Connecticut chose not to yield, but I thought the RECORD should be clarified, at least on those two points.

Mr. OTTINGER. Well, the gentleman is absolutely right.

But let me go down the prices of other projects that the Synthetic Fuel Corporation has guaranteed: $12.50 per million Btu for medium Btu gas from coal. That is four times the current price of gas and you could produce methanol from coal today, if oil companies that own all the coal were willing to do it, at less than today's price for gasoline and you can use it in vehicles.

The Corporation has offered to guarantee $90 per barrel for methanol, $210 per ton for solid peat derived fuel designed to displace wood and coal. What we are doing is just fantasy world.

Now, I am not opposed to developing these exotic technologies. I have always supported my chairman in the Science Committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA], in pushing ahead on synthetic fuels research. I think we should have that technology in the future. But to jump to commercializing that technology when the technologies aren't ready, the prices are outrageous and there is commercial technology presently available to make methanol from coal economically just makes no sense to me whatsoever.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OTTINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Just to reenforce the point the gentleman from New York is making, the words of the manager of Chevron Shell Oil Co., I think, say it all.

The industry doesn't do it today—

Referring to these kinds of technologies—

because we don't have the technology, nor see the market. You can see by the projects that folded they didn't have the technology right. Demonstration-sized research and development projects are a must before you move into full-scale operations.

The issue is energy security. The fact of the matter is to divert billions and billions of dollars and corporate subsidies to companies that are simply trying to transfer their risk to the taxpayer is moving us toward greater energy insecurity, not toward greater energy security. We need to see that those dollars are invested in the kind of research that will allow a sound development of the synfuels industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. OTTINGER] has expired.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to object to any extensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded time and everybody else has. Does the gentleman really mean to object?

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OTTINGER].

Mr. OTTINGER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think this is an important subject and to try and cut off debate is a mistake. I think it is a mistake from the gentleman's standpoint.

Mr. Chairman, I will offer an amendment in due course to do away with all the funds for this Corporation. With the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois you are wasting $8.25 billion. You are leaving $8.25 billion for this Corporation to waste.

The Wolpe-Conte amendment, which I support, is better than the best other alternative. You still have $3 billion to be wasted, $3 billion is a lot of money. We are facing a $200 billion deficit. That money can far better be put to use in the cause of producing energy security, into energy conservation. It would be far better put into the development of methanol as a fuel, but not in these exotic projects that make no economic sense.

Your major actors in industry have all rejected this project. Exxon has withdrawn, Westinghouse, Ashland Oil, SoOhio, Mobile Oil, Panhandle Eastern, EG&G, Texas Eastern, and Grace, they have all halted their projects because they say it does not make any sense.

I tell the Members not to throw $8 billion, $5 billion, $3 billion down a rathole; it just does not make any sense at all.

I urge support of the Wolpe-Conte amendment or my amendment when I have an opportunity to offer it.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am stunned as I listen today to the discussion of U.S. energy policy. It seems as if some of those who want to circle the wagons and protect the synfuels industry fail to recognize what kind of energy policy they are pursuing.

On the one hand, they cry out against high OPEC prices. But, on the other hand, what they are saying is that they want to condemn the U.S. consumer to higher energy prices in the future. OPEC has stopped raising its prices. So what they want to do is put the U.S. Government into the business of developing fuels that will be so costly that the consumer would never be able to purchase them on the open market. So what we will do is force the consumer to buy them through taxpayer sudsidy.

It does not make sense to commercialize products that cannot be sold in the open market. It does make sense to do research and development. But the important point here is that we are not talking about research and development. We are talking about commercialization.

What we are being asked to do is spend billions of dollars to establish commercial projects that will produce vast amounts of products.

□ 1350

That product will be subsidized to a guaranteed price level. But when you are talking about $92 a barrel product, when is it ever going to be viable in the market? It is only going to be viable as long as the U.S. Government keeps subsidizing it.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAUKE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. Is the gentleman aware of this study that was done by the Library of Congress and by the International Energy Agency which showed that if there were a partial interruption—and I emphasize the word "partial," not as we had in 1973, a complete Arab boycott—that the price of oil in the United States tomorrow would be $98 a barrel? Is the gentleman aware of that?

Mr. TAUKE. I thank the gentleman for making that point. I am aware of that study. What is interesting to note is that we have a shooting war in the Persian Gulf right now, and because we have excess production capacity to the tune of 10 million barrels a day in the world, the price of oil is dropping, not going up.

But I just want to say this to the Members: We have to make judgments as to when and if a product that costs $60, $70, $80, $90 a barrel is going to be marketable.

I suggest to you that, given the excess capacity in the world for oil production today, given the trends, it is not reasonable to expect that in the foreseeable future this product will be marketable.

That is why we should continue with the research and development, which we are not talking about here, but why we should stop pouring billions of dollars into the commercilaization of technologies which cannot produce competitive products in the near future.

The Illinois project, which we talked about earlier, is an interesting case history. As I mentioned, we have excess capacity in the ammonia fertilizer industry now. As that project comes on line, we are going to be putting other ammonia producers out of business. It does not have any new technology in it. It is using the coal gasifier that is already being used in other projects supported by the Synfuels Corporation, so there is no new technology being developed.

Interestingly, there is virtually no private investment in that project. The private investors have been smart enough to walk away from commercialization. We, in the Government, however, do not seem to catch on very fast.

And interestingly, not only is there no private investment, but the private participants are making money because they are pyramiding on the project. Five major investors in the project are, of course, making more money as suppliers and subcontractors to the venture than they are contributing to it. That is the kind of abuse that you get when you get into a situation where the Federal Government is trying to market something that is not marketable. That is the kind of problem you get when the private sector walks away from commercial projects and the Federal Government tries to pick them up. It is the kind of problem you get when you take what is rightfully a private risk and make it a public risk.

Mr. Chairman, the questions here are quite simple. Do you believe we should commercialize products that cannot be sold in the marketplace? Do you believe that the taxpayer should take the risk rather than the private sector? If you answer no to those questions, you should vote against Ratchford and for Conte.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Ratchford amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a slightly different perspective on this issue. I sit on the Appropriation Subcommittee that deals with the Department of Energy's civilian research and development activities and a whole range of alternative energy areas in addition to synthetic fuels that we have been talking about here today. I have been frustrated, as I know many others on both sides of this debate have been, about the continuing efforts to cut back on programs in this part of the DOE budget. Solar energy has been cut back from $557 million in 1981 to some $179 million now. And that is only because members of Mr. BEVILL's committee and others across the spectrum have fought to see that we have some semblance of an energy alternative program left in the Federal Government. It could easily have been much worse.

We have placed $3.1 billion in research and development funds into alternative energy projects over the last decade from 1974 to the present time, and yet as it came time to try to commercialize and try to demonstrate these technologies we have fallen back. We have no aggressive energy policy left in the Federal Government. Indeed, the Europeans and the Japanese are taking on potential markets in photovoltaics for example, because they've benefited from our research and development. And if you look to tax credits as a future solution to further investment in solar thermal, photovoltaics, and conservation, in ethanol, methanol, and biomass, you see, given our deficits, decisions by the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee in the other body as recently as the most recent tax increase, to terminate them, to let them fall by the wayside. It is very likely that at the end of next year there will be no continuing tax credits available.

We have, frankly, very little room to make any progress in the development of these forms of energy. I am hopeful, and I hope to engage in some dialog on this issue with the chairman of the Science and Technology Committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA], that we can find the opportunity to redirect the activities of this much maligned Synthetic Fuels Corporation into an area that it was originally allowed under charter to deal in but which it has avoided dealing in, and that is these other forms of energy, renewable energy forms that I think many of us see as at least as capable and perhaps more so of dealing with the question of our dependence on imported oil.

Now, we have reduced that dependence markedly. Today there is some $30 billion a year less than when I came to Congress a few years ago spent on imported oil from OPEC and the Mideast. But it seems to me that we still have a long way to go before we've permanently licked our problem. We may soon find ourselves back in the trap of having fallen asleep, allowing the continued acrimony among Mideastern nations to once again escalate into an energy threat to our independence in this country. And we must deal with it, even though we are currently lulled to sleep by the cheapest gasoline prices at the pump we have seen in the past 5 years; lulled to sleep by the $27 a barrel price of imported oil on the spot market right now. But we cannot allow ourselves much more of this. It seems to me that we have an opportunity by voting for the Ratchford amendment to eliminate a $5 billion additional cut that the Wolpe-Synar-Broyhill-Conte amendment would bring about. And in doing so, to capture some of that difference and redirect it into a series of renewable energy initiatives that have really gone unaided in recent years under this administration.

So I am hopeful that we can make some progress today by sending a message, a needed message, to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and at the same time by beginning the process of broadening the base of the corporations by including all of the initiatives that can be taken to promote more energy independence. I am hopeful that a number of people who may be very supportive of our friends who are trying to make this $10 billion cut would consider the possibility of holding back on that additional $5 billion and redirecting some of their energy into other areas through an amendment to be offered on Mr. FUQUA's legislation, the DOE Energy Civilian R&D Act.

I can tell you that the Renewable Fuels Association, the Renewable Energy Institute, the American Wind Energy Association, and the Solar Energy Industries Association would support my suggestion, the effort that I am engaged in here. They are, I think, understandably desperate to find some future for their forms of technology that have been I think too quickly written off by this administration and possibly, given those huge looming deficits, by the tax-writing committees. I am hopeful that I can have the support of a number of people who are with the authors of the Conte-Wolpe amendment in spirit but who have other values in mind as well. I hope you'll listen to my friend Mr. FUQUA and consider an "aye" vote on Ratchford-McDade and, next week, on his proposal.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from California in bringing——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO] has expired.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MURTHA. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I think the committee spoke last week that the majority of the Members feel that some message should be sent to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation expressing their displeasure at some of the things that are not happening or have not happened, or for other reasons. I accept that, and I rise in support of the Ratchford-McDade amendment.

I would like to explain briefly what I hope we will do and the reason I think this amendment is so important. Either later this week or next week I hope that the authorization bill for research and development for the Department of Energy for civilian programs, over which the Committee of Science and Technology has jurisdiction, will be on the floor for consideration. And at that time it is my intention to offer an amendment to authorize the transfer of some $2 billion from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to the Department of Energy to remain available until spent, to demonstrate some pilot or semiworks projects that I think are very important. It does not limit it to synthetic fuels. It includes solar, geothermal, conservation, and all types of renewable energies. It requires, Mr. Chairman, that these be on a 50-50 basis, at least 50-percent industry and no more than 50-percent Government. Therefore, it will be those projects that we think have, or the experts think, have a potential.

One of the problems I have observed over the last few years has been that we have not followed through with the development or the demonstration capacity of some of these new technologies before we go to large, commercial scale. When you work in a laboratory, you work in ounces and pounds, and then at some point when you go commercial you have to go to megatons that you will be using. What we are proposing is maybe a few tons per day of coal. It could also be in solar or geothermal or whatever, but not large-scale projects, so that we can demonstrate this technology.

Now, if the Conte-Wolpe amendment is adopted, there will not be enough money left for this. So that is the reason that I urge that this amendment, offered by my friend from Connecticut and my friend from Pennsylvania, be adopted so that we can consider my amendment at the appropriate time when the DOE civilian authorization bill comes to the floor.

I would like to plead with our Members that we are putting a cap of $300 million as a maximum the project can cost; 50-50 cost-sharing. In days and days of hearings that we have had before the Science and Technology Committee over the last several years, not starting this year, but over the last several years, industry after industry has come in and said that we cannot afford or take the risk to support projects of this type that cost in this magnitude when the ultimate results are not known.

We need some type of Federal assistance to help us demonstrate technology that is worthy, and we mandate in the amendment that I intend to offer to the bill coming from the Science and Technology Committee, again I repeat, will require a 50-50 matching basis.

I would hope that my colleagues who are sympathetic to the Wolpe position, and I respect Mr. WOLPE and his thoughts on this and the others, would look beyond just where we are today in trying to meat ax the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and try to look at a more long-range program that will offer a long-range good.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time on the debate of the Conte amendment and the Ratchford amendment be concluded in 40 minutes; 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Ratchford amendment. The rescission it calls for will have no effect.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I renew my unanimous-consent request that the time allotted for conclusion of debate on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto shall be for 40 minutes; 20 minutes of which shall be controlled by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD] and 20 minutes by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object, but I would like to get some sense of how many Members are going to speak on both sides of the issue. We could have a show of hands; we could get an idea of how many Members are going to speak for and against the amendment. Then we might have some idea.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I have been informed that eight Members wanted to speak. In view of the numbers that have now appeared to speak on the amendment, I withdraw my request.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous-consent request is withdrawn.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman rom Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Ratchford amendment. The rescission that it calls for will have no effect on the spendthrift ways of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. It will have no effect on the waste of billions of dollars or the provision of welfare for corporations that are more than able to fend for themselves.

If Members think that they can get off the hook by voting for this amendment, and pretending to be helping the taxpayers, they are going to have a rude awakening. The transparency of this purely symbolic amendment is evident, I think, to everyone.

Mr. Chairman, the proponents of this amendment have circulated a "Dear Colleague" letter that is just sufficiently misleading that it deserves a response. They claim that the war in the Persian Gulf requires us to provide an alternative to the Middle Eastern oil. Yet, since the attacks on the tankers in the Persian Gulf, the price of oil from that region has actually fallen down.

Tuesday's Wall Street Journal reported that OPEC production is a million barrels a day above the agreed cartel ceiling. Some Arabian crude is selling as low as $27 a barrel. Of course we need energy security; we all agree to that, but not by subsidizing the rich oil companies to produce oil at $92 a barrel when we can buy it and store it in the strategic petroleum reserve for $27 per barrel. Assistance for a number of smaller, less expensive technologies will do much more for our energy security than the massive Union Oil and Cathedral Bluffs projects.

My good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE], mentioned the International Energy Agency simulation in which oil prices were projected to increase to $98 a barrel in case of an Arab oil embargo. But he did not mention that the simulation assumed no early drawdown on our strategic petroleum reserve.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McDADE. How long will the supply in the strategic petroleum reserve last?

Mr. CONTE. I mentioned it in my debate; we have 200 days.

Mr. McDADE. Yes, it is a couple of months. It is a couple of months, assuming that we do not have to supply anything overseas. The gentleman is aware, I think, serving as he does so ably and for so long in the House, that we have treaty commitments to sustain the supply of oil around the world. Signed two administrations ago, I believe.

We have a direct commitment, by treaty, to ensure the oil supply if Israel comes under attack we have treaty commitments derived from our Internation Energy Agency commitments. That is going to draw down that pool of oil very quickly. May I say to my friend that is my opinion. I respect your position and your opinion. I believe for us to cast our security on the energy reserve, which we fund in my subcommittee, is a woeful mistake.

Mr. CONTE. Well, let me answer that, because I think we have good, solid answers. When the simulation was run it was based on a strategic petroleum reserve of only 120 million barrels of oil. Do you know what we have got in there today? We have 410 million barrels of oil; 200 hundred days protection against an Arab embargo; not 20 days. Instead of wasting this money and subsidizing Union Oil for $92 a barrel, let us invest that money in the strategic reserve. We can buy four barrels of oil for every barrel produced by Union Oil, and put it in the reserve.

Think about that, my colleagues in their offices watching television; think about that for a moment. The Dear Colleague letter points out the need for new supplies, but it fails to point out that millions of barrels of oil have been discovered in the last several months, with more discoveries every day. Drill rigs are in operation at record levels; new discoveries at Prudhoe Bay; at the San Maria Basin; and off the coast of China, give every indication of vastly expanding proven reserves.

My dear friends, the Dear Colleague letter claims that my amendment would eliminate funding for additional projects, while a $5 billion rescission will permit every type of project under the sun from eastern coal, tar sands, to coal water and peat gasification. That is completely untrue. My amendment would permit the funding of all letter of intent projects, plus leave $1.9 billion in additional projects. On the other hand, under the Ratchford amendment, the Union II and Cathedral Bluffs projects could be funded. Even after passage of the Yates amendment.

Nothing would prevent the Synthetic Fuels Corporation from approving a similar project, or even another slightly different Union Oil application.

Mr. Chairman, the Union Oil technology does not even work. The first phase of the project has been delayed about 8 months beyond its scheduled startup, and apparently there are serious problems with the cooling system, such that the spent shale exiting the facility is so hot that it burns through conveyer belts. Complete redesign of the system could cost millions more, and take additional months.

Mr. Chairman, enough is enough. This kind of corporate welfare is disgusting. I urge the defeat of the Ratchford amendment and the adoption of my $10 billion rescission.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to propound a unanimous-consent request again.

I ask unanimous consent that all time on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto end at 3:15.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SYNAR. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it be at 3:30.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must state his request. Will the gentleman state his request?

Mr. YATES. If there is going to be an objection, Mr. Chairman I will not state it.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to it, and I will object.

Mr. YATES. All right. I withdraw my request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I respect the sincerity, the dedication and the commitment of the authors of the amendment which would strike $10 million from the Synfuels Corporation. However, I rise today to support the Ratchford amendment. I have a vivid memory of the gas lines of 1974 and again of 1979. In fact, I had to install an extra 20-gallon capacity fuel tank in the trunk of my automobile because I could not afford the time required to refuel my car once a week.

We learned from the EPA, just this week, that the content of lead in the atmosphere is so dangerous that an order has been promulgated to reduce the amount of lead in gasoline for the reason that more than 100,000 children a year are requiring medical attention because of the lead, emitted from automobile exhausts, in the air they breathe. Scientists estimate that more than 50,000 Americans a year die as a result of excessive chemicals in the air caused by automobiles.

Just a minute ago, our friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDade], reminded us of the enormous military costs involved in our commitment to protect the oil supply in the Middle East. There are contingency plans, which are just contingency plans, that would commit almost 500,000 American fighting men and women to that region in the event of a conflict in order to assure that petroleum supply.

Let us not throw out the baby with the bath water. I do not agree with the management of the Synfuel Corporation. Many of its policies can be improved. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. Fuqua] has said that his Committee on Science and Technology will offer a bill next week which will not only send the Synfuels Corporation a message; he will provide it with legislative authority to change its direction and the management to achieve not only the goal of energy independence but will show the way to achieve diversification of energy supply through the development of other forms of energy.

Certainly cutting off funds available for achieving those goals will not serve our best interests. It will not serve the interests of the American people. It will be an abdication of this body and of our Government of our responsibility to deal with this enormous problem of overdependence on fossil fuels in our society.

I say to the Congress, to my colleagues in this body, that we should face the responsibility of retaining the synfuel funds the Ratchford amendment allows. We must not abandon the goals we have established through years of arduous debate and compromise by taking all of these funds from the Synfuels Corp.

I say let us vote for the Ratchford amendment to retain part of those funds in order that we can begin to achieve the goals that we set out to achieve years ago.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to this debate with great interest, and I think it is a significant debate. It goes way beyond consideration of budget deficits and the concern about the mounting deficit. I really think that we are giving a very close consideration to the direction of U.S. energy policy for the next decade, and indeed beyond. I have only a couple of points that I would add to this debate that I think need to be considered.

We have forgotten, I think, and it has been emphasized here, the purpose for the creation of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. It was created in the shadow of two enormously disruptive oil shortages, and it was designed to help alleviate our really unconscionable or unacceptable dependence on foreign oil. It was a responsible policy action then, and I submit that it is as valid today as it was when we created it in the shadow of those two disruptive oil shocks.

I think no one here is going to argue or try to defend some of the managerial problems that have been apparent in the SFC, but I suggest that gutting the entire program, as I believe the Conte approach would do, as a punishment is really not the responsible path that we should be taking.

I would point out, I think, a significant fact. Although I think there is clear evidence of price-induced conservation by American fossil fuel consumers over the last decade and since the oil shortages and oil deregulation, the fact remains today that American oil reserves are declining and there is no way we can get away from that. We have a depletable resource and it is, indeed, declining. From 1977 to 1982, U.S. oil reserves declined 12 percent, or about 3½ billion barrels. The Department of Energy figures indicate that that decline is continuing.

I think that is a fact that we have to face. That is a fact that makes the Synthetic Fuels Corporation continuation a necessity.

Domestic oil reserves are now less than 9½ times the annual level of production. We need synthetic fuels to help ensure and to further our energy independence. To further illustrate the fact, I think it is startling to note that after a decline during the recent recession, oil imports have risen with the economic recovery by 1 million barrels per day in the last year. The levels of imported oil are now comparable to those at the time of the 1973 Arab oil embargo.

So, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the McDade-Ratchford amendment recognizes that there have been problems with the management of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. It also recognizes that we have to rethink the high levels of budget authority for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation in times of soaring deficits, but it does not emasculate the program, as the other amendment would do, which is so vital to our energy independence.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINGER. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SHARP. I thank the gentleman for yielding, because he is starting to talk about the changing energy picture in this country, which we have got to get a grip on again. We have seen some improvement in recent years. That has been alluded to by many folks who want to go whole hog and cut the whole program.

But the fact is, as the gentleman has pointed out, our picture in oil is again deteriorating. The gentleman cited the most recent example. DOE projects on the basis of statistics the gentleman has already cited that by 1995 our oil production will be in a 4 percent decline position. That is under fairly optimistic assumptions, that by 1995 we will have increased our consumption again by 10 percent, that by 1995 our imports will be back up to 40 percent of our use in this country.

The fact is that the world oil picture is also deterioriating. While there are new funds that have been alluded to, they are nothing like the old super giant fields. We have not seen one of those discoveries in the last 20 years, not since 1964 when Prudhoe Bay was discovered.

The fact is that world oil supplies are also in a situation where we are using up more around the world than we are finding each year, so we can expect the markets to tighten even if there is never a crisis in the Middle East. We can expect oil prices to rise. The only question is how fast and how much.

We can also expect that dependency on the Middle East, which has diminished for us personally, but not for our allies, is actually going to increase again for many people around the world and by 1995 more than half the oil will be produced in the Middle East with no expectation that that is going to be any more stability in that part of the world than there is today.

So I think the gentleman is making a very important point. Let us not be lulled into a view that we have somehow cured our energy problems for the future. While there is not a crisis now, let us not fritter away the time we have.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much for a very valuable contribution.

The inexorability of the decline, of oil reserves I think, is what we are talking about, it is very important that we maintain this program.

Mr. RUDD. Mr. chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I will not take the entire time. I simply want to add a couple of points that have not been brought out so far in the debate.

We have been reminded repeatedly that our memories have been dulled and that we encountered at least two very great crises established by the manipulation of oil in the Middle East during the last decade.

We were importing one-third of our oil imports in 1973 in that first crisis. We are still importing a third of our oil today. The reserves that are available to us, the oil resources, are going down. We are finding a few, but overall they are going down and within the next decade we can be expected to import as much as 40 or 45 percent of the energy that we need.

Now, of the 11 or so projects that were to be funded by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, including the two that my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, struck, the total cost would have been an average of about $1.30 a barrel for the product over the lives of the various projects, because of the profit-sharing clauses and the assistance to contracts and the initial assistance cost, which would have amounted to about $7.9 billion would have been reduced to $1.3 billion as the Government recaptures revenues through profit sharing over the next 25 or 30 years.

So we are addressing ourselves to the needs of the Nation, and we want to make sure that we are not being held captive again to Middle East oil manipulation. We are on the verge of another crisis in that area today. Investment in the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was wise at the time it was adopted, wise at the time it was conceived. It is wise today, and it will help ensure that we are not left helpless as we have been in the past.

If there is a problem in the administration of the Corporation itself, and there is, then we should correct that problem and go ahead with the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The idea is good and if we encounter another crisis, it will not be a question of how much oil costs, it will be a question of whether we have energy available, so we should go ahead with that, and I oppose the Conte amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. RUDD. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, we have debated this for 2 hours at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all time on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto, with the exception of the Ottinger amendment——

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Chairman, I still have the time. If the gentleman wants to use my time to do that, that is fine, too, but I would like to yield first to this gentleman here who has a question.

I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, there have been some horror stories today about the so-called failures of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, the Union Oil project, and also the proposed anhydrous ammonia projects in Illinois.

As a representative of eastern Utah, I would like to mention one of the successful projects. Geokinetics has a small project, a $45 million operation known as Seep Ridge Oil Shale, which is actually producing oil at the present time. It is a very environmentally sound project with no problem of disposing of the spent shale. It is one of the very good projects of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

The project, like all others which have been authorized or have received letters of intent, is in jeopardy because the SFC is paralyzed and will remain so as long as there are threats like the Conte amendment or the Corcoran bill.

The Republican Task Force on Energy and Natural Resources, which I chair, has issued a research report on the SFC which I urge you to study.

Mr. Chairman, I support the Ratchford-McDade amendment.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STRATTON moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Chairman, there is an old saying that goes something like this:

God and the soldier all men adore in times of trouble, but not before. The danger passed and the troubles righted, God is forgotten and the soldier slighted.

A number of Members have already brought out the fact that this Synthetic Fuels Corporation was born out of one of the most serious problems that we faced back in 1979 when there were long lines at the gas stations, and you had to get up at 5 o'clock in the morning to fill your tank. And we had no idea when the OPEC embargo would be lifted. Have we really forgotten those days so soon?

At that time our distinguished majority leader, the current majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] came up with the idea, that there was an alternative. He reminded us that it had already been demonstrated that America was actually the Saudi Arabia of coal. Our vast reserves of coal could be turned into oil to be used in the event that the oil resources of the Middle East were totally shut down.

I was one of the original cosponsors of that legislation, an amendment to the Defense Production Act. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD], was another cosponsor, as was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA]. I remember we met in the majority leader's dining room and we came up with the idea of a Synthetic Fuels Corporation. In fact, a group of us went to Germany to see the original plant that was still standing, where Hitler's Luftwaffe had turned brown coal in Germany into aviation fuel to continue the air flights of Luftwaffe aircraft.

Now we are being told by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] that we have nothing to fear because in the Persian Gulf today whenever a few tankers have been sunk or damaged, the price of fuel has gone down; but I would challenge the gentleman from Massachusetts to predict exactly what is going to happen in this rather insane war that is going on between Iraq and Iran in the Persian Gulf in the next few years.

It is perfectly conceivable that we might end up with a Persian Gulf in which there could be no navigation at all and in which there could be no ships to transport oil and we might be right back again where we were in 1959. Have we forgotten that so quickly?

We ought to learn what history has already taught us. What the Wright legislation, to create a synthetic fuel industry, has done has been to begin to develop a production capacity so that in the event of any new stoppage there will be another source of available fuel.

The Germans developed that capability. We also visited England. The coal board in England, we learned, had a fantastic capacity for turning coal into oil. And with a few additions, the British could even give you various special types of fuel: oil, gasoline, aviation fuel, et cetera, the proper high test, leaded or unleaded, or whatever you wanted.

Reference has already been made in this debate to that same capability in South Africa.

□ 1430

It would be foolish indeed if we were to wipe out that capability and also wipe out that wise decision on the part of the House that has already been developed under the Wright bill, that would provide help were another equally tense situation to develop in the Persian Gulf, and when, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] has already indicated to us, we have commitments to provide oil to our allies in the Middle East; we have commitments to supply and to protect the fuel lines for our Japanese allies, and also for our allies in NATO.

Surely we must not wipe out this great industry simply because today's prices may look a little high. They were high—they were high back in 1979. But it is one thing to have no capacity at all; it is another thing to have high prices.

I urge defeat of the Conte-Wolpe amendment. How much will the desert traveler pay for one cup of cold water?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. ALBOSTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Chairman, I have listened quite extensively to the debate today. I believe that it is wrong to destroy a corporation that was set up to relieve the country of a possibility of an oil shortage—not only an oil shortage, but a depleting of the source of our energy in this country.

It reminds me of last year when we had a PIK Program for agriculture where we put up about $16 billion if you took the storage and all of the costs of that PIK Program and gave it to the farmers in the sense that we gave them bushels of corn not to grow corn. We only did that because we have not established in this country any synthetic fuel production from excess corn, wheat, or cherries, or from excess oranges or apples or whatever you want. All of those things are renewable sources of energy and we ought to be striking toward trying to fulfill not only the need of synthetic fuels from coal and from other products, but we have a need to try to lower the cost of running agricultural programs in this country.

Why not a two-priced system for agricultural products: one for our export and domestic use, and another one where we do not have to pay farmers not to plant but we let the Secretary of Agriculture set a price level for fuel alcohol covering maybe 10 percent of our production one year, a higher or lower percentage the next year, and adjust it, my friends, so that farmers are utilizing all of the agricultural production, the renewable sources of energy in this country that we have the capability to produce with.

Farmers will produce, make no mistake about it. Even with a two-priced system, if you give them the opportunity to grow 90 percent of their crops with a support price that will guarantee them the cost of production, they will grow the other percentages for whatever price they can get.

We must change our energy policy to burn cleaner fuel. For example, southeast Michigan may lose highway transportation funds because of the pollution rate in that part of the State. I just happened a year ago to be in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and you know they are burning 80 percent petroleum products and 20 percent fuel alcohol in their cars, and they are also using 100 percent vehicles burning ethanol. Is it not time that this country tried to catch up with the rest of the world in its production of synthetic fuels? I believe that it is.

So I am supporting the Ratchford-McDade amendment to the Conte-Wolpe amendment so that we can continue to have some type of a Synthetic Fuels Corporation in this country so that we can perhaps switch that Corporation to the emphasis of alcohol fuel, and to switch the agricultural policies in this country toward a two-priced system.

Mr. TAUKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TAUKE. I thank the gentleman for yielding. Just two quick points.

First, I would say to the gentleman in my district we have five alcohol plants that are financed by the private sector and they are producing large quantities of alcohol from corn.

The second thing is that the Synthetic Fuels Corporation does not do one whit for alcohol because that is from energy and agricultural appropriations.

Mr. ALBOSTA. I have an alcohol fuel plant in my district that is not completed, and we have excess corn, and we had a PIK Program a year ago that we took $16 billion to support of taxpayers' money.

I do not think that that was a mistake at that time. I think the planning was a mistake in the first place.

Mr. TAUKE. If the gentleman will yield further, the problem is that it does not come from synfuels, it comes from DOE and A.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STRATTON].

The preferential motion was rejected.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the Conte amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have had a good debate in the Chamber today on a tremendously important issue. My position is fairly well known. I hope the House will not destroy the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I believe it is in the national interest not to do so.

I would like to take us back a little bit to think about what led to the creation of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, how we got where we are today. I think we all know the phrase that history tends to repeat itself. Part of the problem is that very few of us remember the corollary, and the corollary is those who do not know the past are condemned to relive it. And we do not want to relive the past and the energy crisis that we faced in this world.

Let me have you focus, if I can, on just one figure. From 1973 until 1984, today, we exported $625 billion of wealth to the Arab nations of the world, $625 billion. After we started doing that in 1973, you bet it got the attention of the world and this country.

So what did we try to do in this Nation? We tried to establish in our own national and economic interests the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, hopefully to put a stop to that incredible transfer of wealth, the most extraordinary transfer of wealth in the history of this Nation from your constituents to that tiny little group we call OPEC. That is where it went, and that is where it is going today.

My colleagues that have spoken on the issue have told you we are reliving the past. Imports are up. The oil bill is up. We are not able by any projection, by any survey, or by any forecast to disagree on the point that we are running out of fossil energy. We are not going to halt the downtrend of finite fossel fuels. Those are not just my opinions. They are the views of the U.S. Geological Survey, the CIA, and the others who deal with such issues for the public.

I have heard so many times today the phrase that this is corporate welfarism. I am awful tired of hearing that. I guess if we need some kind of a phrase to get attention around here, if that is what we need, some catchy phrase and a gimmick to get the attention of everybody around here, let me suggest to you, to destroy the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is to engage in Arab palimony. That is what we are talking about, Arab palimony, OPEC nations destroying the wealth of this country, destroying the wealth of the free world. And we had better realize that that is what we are talking about.

Let me give you some scenarios. We have seen charts, we have seen all kinds of figures quoted, and I do not want to get into that. I just gave you the figure of $625 billion in transfer of wealth. Now contrast that with what we did when we set up the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. We put out there $14 billion for a period of perhaps 20 years. We hoped to try to develop commercial processes.

Let's take the worst case scenario. Assume we lose every penny of the $14 billion and none of these processes work. You know what that amounts to? Eighty-four days of imported oil. That is what the cost of 84 days of imported oil comes to.

How much money is actually committed by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation? Go check the record: $740 million.

□ 1440

Take a worst case scenario again, we lose it all. Do you know what that costs in imported oil? Do you know what that costs? Four and a half days of our imported oil costs four and one-half days.

If we were to take the projects that we looked at, the DOE projects, and we said they are going to fail, you are talking about 14 days of the cost of imported oil.

That is what is at risk.

I do not believe that is going to happen. But I think we have to keep in perspective the tremendous international and national issue that we are focusing upon and it is to try to stop the draining of wealth out of this Nation. You know, we need to look at what is going on. We just heard conversations about the money we are going to spend for bases in Egypt, for the rapid deployment force, we are spending billions to keep a carrier force operating in the Persian Gulf, billions today. We are the only nation there. We should be there; it is in the interest of the free world to be there.

But think of what the stakes are when you lose $60 billion a year. I have heard a million to this corporation, a million to that corporation. I hope what we will do is to remember that we need to stop Arab palimony and restore our Nation to its wealth and to its rightful place in the world.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the McDade-Ratchford amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I sat through all the debate on the rule last week and I have been here all afternoon listening to this debate. It has been a good one in many ways, one that has been as impressive as I have heard in many a day.

I looked at the charts on the letter of credit and they look awfully good and awfully impressive if you do not give them some thought.

I asked the chairman of the committee, of the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations, my long time and dear friend, Mr. YATES, "What is the significance of a letter of credit?" He said, "Well, it is an offer for an offer." There is no way in the world in which these would finalize.

First of all there is not a quorum on the SFC. So I dismissed that argument.

Then I heard someone say that you are going to save some $9 or $10 billion on the Federal deficit. Actually, you do not save one thin dime, nothing at all on it.

Then someone dismisses rather rapidly the problem of whether or not we are going to face a shortage in the years to come and I think that is the nub of the question. Of all the remarks that have been made on this problem in this bill, last week and this week, I think the best arguments, and the most persuasive ones, have been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MCDADE, and the majority leader, Mr. WRIGHT.

I voted for the huge rescission of $9 billion in the markup of this subcommittee. I voted for the rule last week. I voted for the creation of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, I think it was 4 years ago, and at that time all of us who voted for it knew it was going to be an expensive proposition.

There are indications that the per barrel price of synthetic fuel will rise to probably $95 a barrel. But that was expected. This is a new thrust in the effort to make our Nation energy independent, and if we do not do it we will be right back in the same problems we had, in the 1970's, make no mistake about it.

Mr. RATCHFORD pointed that out; others have pointed it out. You cannot miss it.

The question of sending some 60 billions of dollars overseas to pay for imported oil is one which we ought to look at very carefully. We will continue to do it if we do not achieve energy self-sufficiency.

What of the SFC? I can recall the expectation with which it was created, and the sense of urgency with which it was tasked with developing actual production of 500,000 barrels a day by 1985 and 2 million barrels a day by 1990. We understood then that the strategic petroleum reserve could provide a response to a short-term oil emergency, but that it could not provide a long-term alternative to imported petroleum. That was to be the role of synthetic fuels. What has happened since 1980? Imported crude oil prices have fallen and our memories of gas lines, factory closings, and early school dismissals have faded. We are confronted with relatively high market prices for synthetic fuels and a management record at the SFC that made Continental Illinois Bank look like an enterprise run by business school textbook standards in comparison. In response, some suggest that we pull the plug on the SFC. I cannot agree.

Synthetic fuels represent, in my judgment, our only path to energy independence. We knew when we created the SFC that the road to commercial development was uncertain and likely to be expensive. We also knew, however, that when they were needed, synthetic fuels would look like a bargain at any cost. Now is the time to get rid of those SFC officials who have proven that they have no idea of what the Corporation is supposed to accomplish, and to appoint people who do. Now is manifestly not the time to either abolish the SFC, or to leave it hobbled as to resign it to a future of presiding over demonstration projects so small as to be meaningless. I am therefore going to support the Ratchford-McDade amendment which will provide a rescission large enough to get the attention of officials at the SFC and in the administration without doing permanent damage to our effort to develop synthetic fuels. In so doing, I want to make clear my exasperation with the manner in which the SFC has operated, or has failed to operate, and my expectation that steps will be taken to improve that performance. I also want to make clear, however, my belief that we must proceed to full scale synthetic fuels production. We were warned in 1952 by the Paley Commission that the United States would run out of oil and gas. That prognosis remains accurate, and it remains incumbent upon us to encourage the development of those alternative fuels on which our future will depend. Synthetic fuels are those alternatives, and we must not allow poor management and a complacence brought on by a temporary oil glut to make us lose sight of our need for their expeditious development.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I would be delighted to yield.

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I just wanted to address just one small point of the gentleman's remarks at the early stage, which was the reference to the fact that no money would be saved.

I think it needs to be pointed out that even the advocates of the Synthetic Fuel Corporation have acknowledged and even the industries themselves that they will have every need to use every bit of the price guarantees that are the form in which the subsidies are being presented.

Those price guarantees are tax dollars. They will not be reflected in this year's deficit but they will definitely be savings, if we can reduce those subsidies, savings to the taxpayers over many years in the outyears.

Mr. BOLAND. I appreciate the gentleman's remarks, but a lot of the argument here has been to the tune that this would affect the Federal deficit now and of course it does not.

As I have indicated, I feel the same way about the Synthetic Fuels Corporation as all of you do. It has endured incredibly poor management. But this is not the way to improve management. You cannot pull the plug on a corporation that is going to give us the ability to be free of the dangers associated with our dependence on imported oil.

And I think that is important. Although I was not here in 1952, I recall the Speaker of the House often saying that we had an obligation to get a look at the Paley Commission report which was submitted in that year.

And that report clearly indicated that something ought to be done with reference to our shortage of oil reserves. We are going to run out of oil, no question about it, everyone says this, even the distinguished chairman of the Interior Committee, Mr. UDALL will agree, I am sure. Our resources are finite, we are going to run out of them and we had better be prepared.

So we ought to pay some attention to the Paley Commission report. That report clearly outlined our problem. We ought to face it. If we do not face it now we will never face it.

● Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the amendment offered by my colleagues who seek rescission of the $5 billion in U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation spending authority. The amendment sends a strong message to the SFC, but it does not gut the program.

Today this Nation enjoys a plentiful supply of gasoline and other petroleum based fuels. Prices for some grades of gasoline have actually slipped to under $1 per gallon. We have not had it better since the days before the Arab oil embargo.

But, I challenge my colleagues to recall what it was like before the 1974 embargo. It was much like it is today. Large cars were big sellers and few people concerned themselves with energy conservation. After the oil cutoff there was a tremendous scramble in Congress to devise a cushion against a future economic blow to our economy. One component part of that cushion was the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation. While I was not a member at the time, I know that the framers of the SFC enacting law had the best of intentions.

As we all know, the best of intentions can go astray. It is difficult to translate broad legislative proposals into reality. That coupled with questionable business practices and mismanagement have plagued the SFC since its inception. That is why it comes as no surprise to me that some of my colleagues want to essentially do away with the corporation.

I wholeheartedly agree that Congress must send the SFC a strong message. That message should be: Get your house in order immediately. But, we should not pull the rug out from under this Nation's commitment to a synthetic fuels program. We cannot ignore the future. That would send the wrong message to the oil exporting nations. Just several days ago the news media ran reports that OPEC is having an increasingly difficult time in maintaining unity. Gutting the SFC would give OPEC a ray of hope, because this body would be on record as opposing a meaningful synthetic fuels development effort. OPEC members, while they might not be able to immediately exploit our folly, could rest assured that when oil once again becomes short, they would have our Nation in the palm of their hands, just like they did in the 1970's.

While the Iran-Iraq war is at a stalemate, the conflict could flare up at any time. Both our oil lanes and our oil producing allies could easily fall into great peril. At any moment our oil supply could be reduced to a trickle or totally shut off. While it is true that we are not as reliant on Middle Eastern oil as 10 years ago, our allies still rely heavily on this oil. We would surely be asked to assist them in many oil crisis.

In addition to the potential supply problem from the Middle East, reports have been surfacing in the news media that this Nation's largest oil reserve in Alaska is nearing peak production. No replacement fields are on the horizon of a similar magnitude. The present oversupply of oil makes it even less likely that a new reserve will be discovered because fewer companies are exploring.

This Nation has the human and natural resources to produce a substantial portion of our energy needs for many years. We are the Middle East of coal. We have about one-third of the world's known coal reserves, yet many thousands of coal miners are out of work. We need the technology to efficiently convert coal, oil shale, tar sands, and other oil bearing resources into usable fuels on a commercial sale. We need to continue our commitment to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

If we are to be swayed by myopic vision and dismantle the SFC, we will be the ones who will have to respond to our constituents during the next oil crisis. We will have to explain why we agreed to destroy the program today. Our constituents will justifiably hold us accountable in the future.

On a final note, if we delete funding for SFC today and effectively destroy the program, what will the solution to a future energy crisis look like? Will it be thrown together faster and function less successfully than the present SFC? Let's work with the one we have instead of reinventing the wheel a few years from now.●

● Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, regardless of the outcome of this vote, I believe that this is a sad day for the House of Representatives. The serious consideration of a rescission amendment that would virtually emasculate the Synthetic Fuels Program is a tacit admission that the corporate memory for a national synthetic fuels policy has been lost in the House. Those who support a $10 billion rescission of budget authority with no direct outlays would have us wipe the slate clean. The same curious alliance which defeated the first synthetic fuels bill out of the Science and Technology Committee in 1976, H.R. 12112, has once again banded together to defeat progress.

With the exception of two or three meaningful projects, the alliance of free marketers and disbursed technology advocates would have us believe there is no need for a Government role in synthetic fuels development. The curious rationale here is that without attractive economics, the need for such development is less urgent. Paradoxically, with soft oil prices, the need for a Government role is much more critical. Thus, they are telling us to walk away from another Government commitment in energy development, which added to the uncertainties of a Federal nuclear policy, and abandonment of almost every significant demonstration project which the United States has undertaken since the creation of the Energy Research and Development Administration in 1974.

I am afraid that we are setting ourselves up for a charge of gross negligence by the American people. Today we can play the role of "responsible budgeteers," but today's short-sighted, illusary budget cutting will be viewed as irresponsible and cavalier by tomorrow's standards. It is a simple fact that unless we build these plants at significant scale, we cannot be assured that they will work reliably and we cannot even begin to improve the economics of operation. It is difficult to protect this program because of the tragic way in which the Corporation's board has functioned. I would hope my colleagues will not use this reckless performance as an excuse for gutting this program that is directed at national security.

If there is one person who must be laughing up his sleeve today, it is David Stockman, who has worked hard to kill synfuels within the administration since he took office.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.●

● Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, I have heard arguments about the need to preserve the ability to develop synthetic fuels for the future. I agree that it is appropriate national policy. I have also heard the argument that we should continue to fund Synfuels Corporation and will reform it later. The fact remains that almost no one defends the record of the Corporation to date, which is abysmal.

It seems to me imprudent to continue major funding of the Corporation prior to making the reforms that most reasonable people recognize must be made. I supported the concept of the Corporation, and will in the future continue to support that concept. I think, however, it is prudent now to restrict their funding significantly until we can effect the changes needed to ensure that it can fulfill, efficiently and effectively, the responsibilities and goals the original legislation envisioned.●

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to propound a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that all time on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto excepting the Ottinger amendment end at 3:30.

Mr. OTTINGER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move that all time on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto end at 3:30.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I will yield.

Mr. SYNAR. I thank the gentleman. The problem that this gentleman has is the fact that we do not mind setting a time limit, but we would like it equally divided between the two sides.

If the gentleman would extend his unanimous consent to divide that time equally I think both sides could agree.

Mr. DICKS. Reserving the right to object, how can we have a time agreement to vote at a certain time?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to propound my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman. I do not understand how you are going to have a time certain if we are going to have an unlimited amount of debate on the Ottinger; would not you have to say we are going to have 30 minutes without a limit on the Ottinger amendment?

Mr. YATES. I do not believe the Ottinger will take that long.

At any rate, I have a present problem that I am trying to address.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all time——

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move that all time on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto with the exception of the Ottinger amendment end at 3:30, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that time cannot be allocated between sides or between Members except by unanimous consent.

Mr. YATES. I see.

The CHAIRMAN. But the motion only to limit debate is in order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. YATES. Yes, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. If the gentleman's motion passes I will not object to the unanimous-consent request at that time to divide the time.

Mr. YATES. This gentleman was going to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] whether if this gentleman propounded a unanimous-consent request with time to be allocated equally to both sides, which is the only way I can obtain the equal allocation, the gentleman would object?

Mr. FRENZEL. If the gentleman would yield further, I would respond to the gentleman that I do not wish to limit debate and I shall object to the unanimous-consent request.

However, if the gentleman has a motion that carries, I will not object to unanimous consent to allocate the time.

Mr. YATES. I reclaim my time and I renew my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion has been stated.

The question then occurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] is to end all debate on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto except the Ottinger amendment at 3:30.

Mr. YATES. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

□ 1450

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count for a quorum.

Does the gentleman from Minnesota insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. FRENZEL. I do, Mr. Chairman.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, my parliamentary inquiry is whether or not the vote that the gentleman from Minnesota has requested will come out of the 30 minutes allocated for debate or the 3:30 time limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Evidently a quorum is not present.

Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question, following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following Members responded to their names:

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, the time has been limited to 3:30. I ask unanimous consent that the time be expanded to permit 10 minutes on each side, with those favoring the Conte amendment to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and those favoring the Ratchford amendment to be controlled by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The Chair now intends to allocate 6 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and 6 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

The Chair intends that the debate will end with Mr. RATCHFORD.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RINALDO].

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Ratchford amendment and in support of the Conte amendment. I believe that the rescission of these funds will send a strong signal to the American people that we are serious about fighting the deficit. The large budget deficit is a subject that is of great concern to the American people. The $175 billion deficit this year brings with it higher interest rates which pose a serious threat to our economic recovery.

Citizens throughout this country have asked their elected representatives to take action to reduce this deficit. Waste in military and domestic spending does indeed exist, and it is important that each item of the budget be scrutinized in order to assure that the taxpayers money is not squandered.

One example of unnecessary wasted Government spending is the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Plagued by poor management, the SFC has done nothing other than subsidize ventures which threaten to consume billions of dollars of subsidies while providing little, if any energy security. Therefore, it is important that that immediate action be taken to prevent this corporation from spending additional funds on nonproductive ventures. The commitment of $13.3 billion to rapid commercialization is neither sound fiscal policy or effective energy policy.

While we must never abandon our goal of achieving energy independence and security, we should take every possible step to ensure that it is done in the most cost effective way so as not to burden our taxpayers with additional debt. Private industry has responded to the decontrol of oil by drilling for additional supplies, and they, and not the taxpayer should take the risk in investing in this program. Alternative energy sources such as solar, geothermal, wind, and hydroelectric promise to produce energy at a much lower cost, and Government policy over the long run must be directed toward fostering their development. In the short term we must continue to fill the strategic petroleum reserve with all deliberate speed to minimize the risks that are associated with an oil embargo.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARNEY FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that we are not being given more time to talk about a major public policy issue. I hope that the Ratchford amendment is defeated. Its sponsors have come forward and told us that, yes, they agree there are terrible problems with synfuels and, yes, there ought to be some kind of rescission, and that is presumably why they made no effort in those directions until the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Michigan came forward.

We are also told by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] that we owe this to our allies in part because we have commitments to them. Then why do we not do it? Our allies are in the wonderful position of sitting back and having us spend $10 billion of American taxpayers' dollars. They are in the wonderful position of having us spend all of our money.

If the Japanese are so much in need of this, let them do it. We can sell them the coal and help reduce our imbalance of payments.

There is no way that people can be serious about talking about reducing, over the long term, American spending commitments and keep in place the $10 billion full synfuels or even $5 billion Ratchford amendment.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Let me say my colleagues that today, as I speak, there is a plant on the prairies of North Dakota that is producing synthetic gas. It was built on time, under budget, and it is now involved in the commerical production of synthetic gas. It works.

Two hundred miles away there is a $1½ billion shell that is vacant that was the ABM system. That was a failure.

I know the difference, I think, as I fly over that State, between failure and success. We have success in synthetic fuels. The SFC is important. We ought not to be lulled to sleep. We can do the right things for this country's future. I think the right thing is to stick with the gentleman from Connecticut and support his amendment.

We should produce a number of technologies for this country's energy future. I think the success in my district and other districts around this country, of what we have done in synthetic gas, and what we are doing in other technologies is critical to this country's energy future. That is why I rise in strong support of what the gentleman from Connecticut is trying to do here today.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP].

Mr. SHARP. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, there is good reason to cut this program down by at least $5 billion today, adding to the $2 billion we have already cut it, but I suggest to my colleagues there are important reasons to continue this program that we have with the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, with new management.

We talked about the energy picture, which is our first and foremost concern, but second, what we have got to get straight in this debate is what the purpose of this program is. It is the purpose of just producing so many barrels of oil into our society. That is not it at all.

The purpose is to get some pioneer plants out there in the real world so we will learn from those plants, learn what the technical problems are and the improvements to be made, learn what the environmental problems and the improvements that can be made, learn what the managerial problems are and the improvements that can be made.

Second generation plants almost always cost less if they are worth doing again. That is what we have to find out. SASOL III in South Africa cost $1 billion less than SASOL II and took considerably less time to produce the energy.

That is what we are trying to find out, the capacity to produce fuel for America's future.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL].

Mr. UDALL. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time.

Mr. Chairman, I was an original sponsor of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation back in the late 1970's, convinced and persuaded by my good friend the majority leader that we could do what we did when the Japanese cut off our rubber in World War II, and we were able to defeat the Germans and their allies with vehicles running on synthetic rubber.

So I believe in this concept. The question is: How do we salvage it? We have all reacted unfavorably to the conduct of these corporate officers, and I think it is a shame and a disgrace, but how do we salvage what was and is a good idea? How do we send the strong message that should be sent in this situation?

It is a judgment call, but I come down on the side of Wolpe-Conte and the others who have supported this amendment.

There are just two or three factors that I would want to leave with my colleagues that were important to me.

There is an assumption around here that if we pass Wolpe-Conte there is no money left. The fact is that there will be $2 billion left to obligate. They can still look around and find smaller projects. We are not destroying the program. We have $3 billion committed already in ongoing projects. If Wolpe-Conte passes, we will have $2 billion in lending authority, in price-support authority, left.

Another important factor that impresses me is that we had a proposed amendment here when this thing was first debated which would bar the eight major oil companies from participating in this program. It was right that this money go to smaller, technically qualified companies. I think we are going to move toward more projects, smaller projects, and better projects in the long run if we go with the $10 billion rather than with the $5 billion cut.

So it is a judgment call, but I come down on thinking that the wise decision for the country is the Conte-Wolpe amendment.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE].

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Ratchford amendment. The news about the Synthetic Fuels Corporation in the last few years has all been remarkably bad. Incredibly overpaid bureaucrats, using outrageous amounts of money for personal perks, have rightly drawn the heated criticism of Members of Congress and the people at large. There has not been one new ounce of energy added to the Nation's capacity because of the efforts of the SFC. The situation became so bad that last week the House defeated the rule for the Interior appropriations bill because that rule would not have allowed amendments to do some constructive paring of what everyone realizes is a wasteful operation.

We have the opportunity today to take some of those needed corrective actions. I rise today to express my concern that in doing so, we do not overreact to the serious problems that exist in the SFC, and put ourselves in a situation where we allow our legitimate outrage over slipshod operational procedures to blind us to the very real need that the SFC was created to address. That need is still very much with us today. It is the need to assure our energy independence, to make sure that never again will our economy, and, by extension, our national security, be held hostage to the arbitrary and unjustified machinations of cartelized foreign energy sources. That was the primary reason that the SFC came into being, and I would simply ask all of my colleagues today to remember that.

I reluctantly supported the formation of the SFC when it first came into being, and many of the reservations which I held about it at that time have unfortunately been realized. Still, at the time of its authorization, and at the present time, the overriding concern about our vulnerability to foreign control of vital energy sources, the stark realization that naturally found petroleum is a finite resource, and the equal realization that we have, within our own borders, the natural resources which, with the right technology, could free us from any future dependence.

I am not a particularly enthusiastic supporter of many of the project technologies which the SFC is underwriting, or considering underwriting. In fact, it has long been my contention that we are not adequately addressing one of the more exciting and efficient fuel resources currently available to us. That resource is grain derived alcohol fuels. Nevertheless, I would not let my admitted enthusiasm for this other alternate energy source blind me to the fact that there may well be other alternate sources which can and should be explored. The mission of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation remains an important one, one whose vital necessity for our security must not be overshadowed by the mistakes, arrogance, and inefficiencies of its present Board of Directors.

It is because of those mistakes, inefficiencies, and arrogant actions that I will, today, support a $5 billion reduction in the loan guarantee authority of the SFSC. I will not, however, support any measure which will completely destroy the mission with which this organization was first charged. That is the production of alternate synthetic fuels which will assure our energy independence.

I will also support many of the provisions contained in H.R. 5893, the Synthetic Fuels Reform and Budget Reduction Act. I believe, as do the authors of this bill, that the proper role of government involvement in synfuels is to encourage research and development of technology, rather than commercialization. I further believe, as do the authors, that congressional oversight on the Corporation needs to be significantly strengthened, and that, further, the Corporation's activities should be open to public view, through removing the Corporation's exemption from the Freedom of Information Act, conflict of interest requirements, Government in Sunshine, and the Administrative Procedures Act. As a matter of fact, it is precisely because of these lack of public safeguards, guaranteed through tough congressional oversight and open public access, that the Corporation has probably become enmeshed in its current mess.

Therefore I will, today, support the effort to reduce the funding authority for the Corporation and I will support the Fuqua amendment next week to shift $2 billion in Synthetic Fuel funds to renewable energy. These funds will be invaluable to us in developing an industry that has done well without the advantages given other fuels by the Government.

We need those funds. We need to continue to confront our dependency. We need to develop alternative fuels.

By supporting the Ratchford amendment today and the Fuqua amendment next week, we will be doing just that.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask, does the gentleman from Connecticut intend to have any more speakers, so we can balance this out?

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would indicate to my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts that I intend, at an appropriate time, to yield the balance of my time to the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. CONTE. How much time is there remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD] has 3 minutes remaining, and the Chair stated earlier that the gentleman from Connecticut would conclude the debate.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR].

Mr. SYNAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, in the 3 minutes that I have, I would like to try to summarize and focus today's debate by asking three simple questions.

First of all, what is at issue here? Is it energy security? I think when you ask that question, you have to pose: Is it in our energy security to announce to OPEC that we are prepared to pay from $60 to $92 a barrel for oil? Is it energy security to announce to the world that we are prepared to pay any price for energy? And is it energy security to commercialize uneconomic, unreliable technology? I think the answer is no.

The second question I think we need to ask ourselves as we try to focus and summarize this debate is: What is the difference between the McDade-Ratchford proposal and the Wolpe-Conte proposal?

Very simply, it comes down to this one issue: It is an issue of whether or not the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is going to be forced to make tough economic decisions.

My colleagues, if you support the McDade-Ratchford approach, basically what you are saying is that you are prepared to throw another $8.5 billion at the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and not only fund all the letters of intent, but potentially projects like the Union and Cathedral Bluffs.

□ 1530

If, however, you support the Wolpe-Conte proposal, you will have to force the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to do something it has not had to do up to this point, which is to make these tough economic decisions with respect to our synthetic fuels future.

What this vote means, finally, I say to my fellow colleagues, is that it is time to put our money where our mouth is. The final question we must ask ourselves today is, what does this vote mean? It means, very simply, that we now have the opportunity to put our money where our mouth is.

All of us go home each weekend and talk to our Rotary Clubs, our Optimist Clubs, our Democratic Clubs, and our Republican Clubs, and we talk about balancing the budget. We can continue to nickel-and-dime our way to balancing the budget, but today we have a unique opportunity to stop $10 billion of future Government deficits. It is very plain and simple.

As we conclude this debate, I ask my colleagues to ask themselves to look at three things: First, to look at the facts and separate those from the emotion and rhetoric we have heard today; second, to use their common sense and logic, and decide whether or not we want to continue to throw billions of dollars at ill-advised projects; and finally and most importantly, I want to remind you of why you ran for Congress and whom you are here to represent, whether it is people or corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield first to my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KOGOVSEK].

Mr. KOGOVSEK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the majority leader for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Ratchford/McDade substitute. I do so because it is the responsible vote—and the responsible action this body must take. I say it is responsible for many reasons. We had an oil crisis a few years ago—that is a fact.

This country has a limited amount of crude oil, and we must import about $60 billion worth a year—that is a fact.

We have just gone through years of recession that has caused a temporary decrease in our oil consumption—but we are still not energy independent—and that is a fact.

But in addition from these sound arguments about our energy needs that have been told, I would like you to also view this debate through my eyes.

Many of my friends will support guarantee loans for veterans—or for housing—or for education—or even direct tax credits for business investment or solar energy.

So, what is the difference here?

All of these guarantees and credits are to benefit our country. So is this.

One difference is that we—the Federal Government—asked for this program—it was you and I—asking the country—go out; find a way to make us independent and when you find that way, we will help you. Just like telling a student—go out; get accepted to college; and we will guarantee your loan. Except this loan guarantee is for your children, for my children, and for all the children of this country.

Many Members of my side of the aisle have joined with me in criticizing some of the inconsistent policy changes in the past few years. We say, and rightly so, that with these constant changes, the country cannot maintain consistent policies—be it education policies or trade policies—and I say, you, too need to be consistent—if constant policy changes can hurt our environment, or our schools, a vote for a policy change now, makes this just as wrong.

We in Congress have often been accused of being shortsighted, having poor memories and being able to act only in a crisis. Please, let us not make that mistake again. The gas lines of the seventies can very easily, and may well happen again. If they do, the world's mightiest industrial giant can only sit helplessly by and watch it happen. We have, time and again, placed the very foundation of our entire economic structure at the whim and fancy of some of the most unstable countries in the world.

We have here the means to take the first steps toward removing ourselves from this dependency. At the present time, there is more oil trapped in the Colorado mountains than in all of the OPEC nations combined. Estimates range up to 3 trillion barrels. Ladies and gentlemen, that is enough to keep this Nation independent for over 200 years at our present rate of consumption. Sooner or later, we are going to tap that. Does it make good sense to wait for an emergency? I think not. These plants have a 4- to 5-year lead-time before they can start producing. We are late already. Let's not make matters even worse.

I would ask my colleagues to consider the worst possible scenerio. What would you be willing to do? What sacrifices would you be willing to make, if the OPEC nations suddenly stopped our supply of oil? Would you be willing to send in the Marines and invade those countries in order to keep our country moving? Would you be willing to sit and do nothing and let our entire industrial complex grind to a halt? What would be the consequences of doing nothing? What would be the consequences of sending in our Armed Forces? Facing just such a choice is not beyond the realm of possibility. Just removing that uncertainty is worth many times this investment. And it is, in fact an investment in our future for many generations to come.

To quote this morning's Washington Post—who has never been known as a good friend of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation—

> Synthetic fuels development is insurance against the slow, gradual tightening of supplies that may emerge over the coming decades. If domestic oil production fails—and that seems likely—synthetics offer substitutes from domestic sources; to abandon synthetic fuels development would now be wanton.

I could not agree more. I thank my colleagues for offering this substitute and urge you to please support the Ratchford/McDade substitute.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I support the McDade-Ratchford amendment for the simple reason that we have to make tough economic decisions, but we also need an orderly procedure to develop alternative energy technologies.

It is not a matter of marketing the product; it is a matter of having the technology onstream. If we fail to do that, we will once again have government by crisis. The next time there is a shortage at the gasoline pumps, we will rush in here and throw money at the project and waste it, whereas we have an opportunity today to develop an orderly program.

Mr. Chairman, we should not be trying the poor management; we should be supporting the principle of developing the technology.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, to those who are honestly in doubt and want only to do what is best for the United States, let me pose three questions for their very serious consideration.

The first question is this: How shall we expect the United States ever really to be taken seriously in the world if, only 5 years after the second Arab embargo brought our Nation to its economic knees for the second time in a decade, we abandon the goal of energy independence by doing away with the one long-term program that is set in motion to achieve that goal? What message does that send to the Khomeinis and Qadhafis of this world? Does it not invite yet another Arab embargo? And if such an embargo should come, what would you say to those you represent if you voted to do away with the one program that we have in motion?

The second question is this: How shall we ever expect the Government of the United States to have any credibility or believability among the American people if, after having induced private individuals to spend more than $2 billion of their own money on projects that we asked them to undertake in the public interest, we pull the rug out from under them, abandon them, and leave them and walk away from what was supposed to be a joint commitment? Who would believe us in the future?

The third question, one which is maybe more important than any of them, is this: How shall we expect to do anything about these glaring balance-of-trade deficits which this year have made us for the first time in our history a debtor nation if we are willing continuously to shell out $60 billion every year to feed our addiction to foreign oil, but are unwilling to invest $5 billion in a long-term program to free us of that shameful dependency?

Let me state for the record that I believe those who have been appointed to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation have not handled it well. Some of them have mismanaged it very badly. But we have had cases of mismanagement in the Pentagon. We do not do away with the military establishment; we try to get rid of the bad people and put good people in to straighten it out.

We have the resources in this country of ours to be energy independent, if we have the will. We have untapped energy sources in the byproducts of the farms, the fields and forests of this country. We have the waste products. And, yes, we have the coal that lies under our ground.

We have one-third of the world's coal reserves. We can be the Middle East of the world in coal, and there exists the methodology to turn that into a high-grade, low-sulfur-content motor fuel. It has been done in other countries at other times. Do we lack the will to do it for ourselves?

We have on the western slope of the Colorado Rockies more of this pure golden distillate oil locked up in the shale rock of those mountains than exists in all of the Persian Gulf. And we have a way to extract it.

May the vast future not lament that we lacked the vision or the will to do what was necessary to make this Nation of ours energy independent while still there was time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RATCHFORD] to the amendment offerd by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Sundquist for, with Mr. Marriott against.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the McDade substitute.

Mr. Chairman, in this debate I fear that many of my colleagues are losing sight of the long range needs of this Nation. The capability of the United States to satisfy its domestic and defense energy requirements still remains beyond our grasp if we are to use domestic energy sources.

In today's seemingly plentiful sources of oil and gas—

We have forgotten the painful lessons of 1973 and 1979.

We have forgotten the energy shortages which created long gasoline lines in every community throughout the Nation.

We have forgotten the giant increases in energy costs which sent shock waves through our economy.

We have forgotten the sense of helplessness and the dread occasioned by the realization that we were dependent upon foreign and unstable sources of energy to run our factories, produce our electrical power and to fuel our automobiles.

We have forgotten our national resolve to become energy self-sufficent—to develop our own vast reserves of energy.

As soon as the big oil sheiks—both foreign and domestic—filled up their tank farms again and temporarily stabilized fuel prices, we seemingly forgot about our grim determination just a few years ago never to be caught in such a trap again.

I think it is time for this Congress and this administration to wake up. We are all snoozing our way toward disaster.

Our resolve for energy self-sufficiency should be as important today as it was in 1973, and as important as it was in 1979 when we took the wise step of passing the Synthetic Fuels Act. Not just because it is essential for national security, but because it is essential if we are to have any control whatsoever over our own economic well-being.

To a large extent I share my colleagues' dissatisfaction with the way the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has been mismanaged and bungled. To the detriment of the national economy and in reckless disregard of the long-range energy needs of this country, the Corporation has virtually abandoned its coal gasification and liquefaction programs.

It has wasted money and it has permitted so many greedy hands to reach into its cash drawer that it almost amounts to legal free-booting.

The Corporation seems to think "coal" is a four-letter word that shouldn't be mentioned in polite company.

No one can claim a monoply on wisdom, Mr. Chairman, but I am as certain today as I was 30 years ago that the answer to our short-term and long-range energy needs lies in the rich seams of coal that underlie our land.

We have ignored the technology that already exists for creating clean forms of coal-based energy—technology that is in existence since World War II and before.

There are companies in this country today that are building and operating synthetic fuel plants in other parts of this planet to the great profit and advantage of the people there. But in the United States, it appears to me that the barons of big oil and their allies have decreed that there shall be no synthetic fuel production from coal until the last drop of petroleum is extracted from this land.

These are very shortsighted people, and it is a dangerous game they play with our national future.

More than 30 years ago, I stood on this floor and begged the administration of President Eisenhower and the Congress of that day to cut off a little $2 million program to keep in operation the pilot plants that were producing synthetic fuel from coal. But a big oil man from West Virginia was in charge of the energy policy advisory body and the administration would not relent. And the pilot plants were shut down.

Time has proven me right about that. And I am equally certain that time will prove me right again. We must not let this last, best hope for energy self-sufficiency slip away.

Here in the East, the utilization of our vast coal production capacity is far below what it should be. Coal production facilities and expertise and our highly refined coal production technology are underutilized and in danger of being lost to the Nation.

We are not only being shortsighted in not using our coal capabilities, but we are turning our backs on the men and women to whom this Nation has turned in hours of great need and emergency in the past to produce American's energy.

In the two great wars and in the Korean crisis, five generations of miners rose to the occasion and supplied our war production needs. They will do it again, but will we be technologically able to match their production efforts? Will we have on line the synthetic fuel plants necessary to convert coal to gasoline?

Oh yes. The technology exists. It has been done. It has been demonstrated. What we lack is the determination to pursue a program of building the plants that can utilize our enormous reserves of coal to produce our domestic energy.

While I deplore the operations of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation in its shortsightedness, in its inability to pursue vigorously development of coal conversion plants, I do not want to see it cast aside.

It is to this agency that the Nation should look for the appropriate development of its energy resources, just as the Nation in the past has looked to the Federal Government for the development, first of its waterways for navigation and to its railroads for commerce and defense.

The prudent course for us today is to mandate the Corporation's reform—not its dissolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title II?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WEAVER

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEAVER: Page 42, line 11: Strike out "$234,048,000", and insert in lieu thereof "$231,048,000".

Page 40, line 23: Strike out "$120,710,000", and in lieu thereof "$123,710,000".

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, forests are one of our Nation's most precious natural resources. I am sorry to report that our timber industry is in terrible shape, prices deeply depressed, unemployment and bankruptcy high.

But we hope to recover. So long as our forests are healthy, we will survive.

But in recent months a series of scientific studies have revealed that U.S. forests are suffering from the same afflictions that have devastated many of Europe's most productive forests. From New England to the Southwest and from the Pacific Northwest to the South, forest researchers are discovering an alarming decline in the productivity of American forests. Athough the problem has been identified, its causes have not. There is increasing evidence, however, that air pollutants are primarily responsible for the observed decline in productivity.

In June I chaired a hearing of my Subcommittee on Forest Management to examine the effects of air pollution on forests. Scientists and professional foresters from the United States and Europe testified about their increasing concern that air pollutants are damaging our forests around the world.

Three years ago, leading European foresters and scientists were witnessing the same symptoms that we are seeing in American forests today. They were convinced, however, that no serious problem existed.

Within 18 months those same foresters and scientists were shocked to find the trees dying at an alarming rate and they did not know what to do about it.

Let me tell my colleagues what my hearing revealed. It is shocking. You are talking about forests in this country worth $100 billion.

In Germany they now know that the trees were dying for 15 to 20 years, but they did not know it at the time. The damage did not show up in the foliage of the trees.

Suddenly in 1981 7 percent of the German forests were dead, 7 percent, including the Black Forest. Then, with shattering suddenness, in 1 year, one-third of the German forests died. From 1982 to 1983, one-third of the entire forests died. Can my colleagues imagine what would happen if one-third of all the forests from New England down through the Appalachians into Alabama died? Well, they are dying now. The red spruce in the higher elevations in our Appalachian forests are now dead. Other trees in the higher elevations are starting to die. It is a most serious thing. We are not finding out enough about the problem, particularly in the West. We have added some money for research in the East.

So I have asked this body to increase the appropriation for forestry research as to air pollutants by $3 million in this amendment, just $3 million, but it does not increase the bill because we take it away from another factor in the appropriations bill, roads. And we are not harvesting as many trees in our Western forests because of the depression and therefore, we do not need as much road money at this time.

The following has been submitted by the Chief of the Forest Service as the things that could be done in research on air pollution affects on forests. It is this which I intend to implement with my amendment.

An additional $3 million

Forest Inventory & Analysis	$1,300,000
Fire & Atmospheric Sciences	300,000
Wildlife Management & Rehabilitation	650,000
Timber Management Research	750,000

The following research would be added to the above level:

Forest surveys and assessments expanded to include the extent of tree growth decline and possible causes in the Eastern United States.

Effects of acid deposition on sensitive, high elevation ecosystems in the West.

Effects of acid deposition on forest soil productivity, including impacts and fate of toxic heavy metals.

Effects of acid deposition on tree growth, reproduction, and physiology.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEAVER. I yield to my distinguished and dear chairman of the Interior Appropriations Committee.

Mr. YATES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's arguments are very persuasive. He has indicated a very serious problem which our forests are facing.

I agree with the thrust of his amendment. I am willing to accept his amendment on our side.

Mr. WEAVER. I thank the chairman very much and I appreciate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WEAVER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MAVROULES].

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage in a brief colloquy with you regarding land acquisition by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

I thank you and the committee for allocating $400,000 for the acquisition of land for the development of administrative offices and a visitors' center for the Parker River National Wildlife Refuge on Plum Island in Massachusetts.

In a letter I wrote to your committee I pointed out that the wildlife refuge itself is an extremely fragile habitat, and is incapable of sustaining extensive development.

Now, therefore, is it correct that these funds are intended to be used solely to acquire property off the island to develop the headquarters facility for Plum Island?

Mr. YATES. The answer to the gentleman's question is "Yes."

Mr. MAVROULES. I thank the gentleman very much for his response.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I want to commend the chairman for the excellent work he has done in providing for the many, pressing needs of the national parks in this appropriations bill.

Mr. Chairman, I note that the budget justifications of the administration provide for specific full time employment levels for the various parks in the system.

Is that correct?

Mr. YATES. The answer to the gentleman's question is "Yes."

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, am I correct in understanding that the funding levels in the appropriations bill provide sufficient flexibility to permit, during fiscal year 1985, transfer of full-time equivalents within the Service to those areas which might have unusual demand or areas which cannot carry out the mandates of this bill without additional employees?

Mr. YATES. The answer to the gentleman's question is "Yes."

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the chairman very much.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

Mr. DICKS. I thank the gentleman for yielding for the purposes of a brief colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, is it your understanding that the funding we have provided in this bill for the National Endowment for the Humanities is sufficient to keep all State programs at least funded at last year's funding levels?

Mr. YATES. The answer to the gentleman's question is "Yes." My understanding is that the funding level we provided is sufficient and that no State programs will have their funding reduced because of a shortage of funds.

Mr. DICKS. I thank the chairman.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1620

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. OBERSTAR

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The portion of the bill to which the amendment relates is as follows:

STATE AND PRIVATE FORESTRY

For necessary expenses of cooperating with, and providing technical and financial assistance to States, Territories, possessions, and others; and for forest pest management activities, $61,485,000, to remain available for obligation until expended, to carry out activities authorized in Public Law 95-313: Provided, That a grant of $3,000,000 shall be made to the State of Minnesota for the purposes authorized by section 6 of Public Law 95-495: Provided further, That not less than $35,000 in pest suppression funds shall be provided for suppression of oak wilt in the State of Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OBERSTAR: Page 41, line 5, strike "$61,465,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$61,810,000".

Page 41, line 11, strike the period and insert in lieu thereof ": Provided further, That $325,000 shall be made available to the Disabled Veterans Recreation, Inc. for construction of and other improvements to the Disabled Veterans Wilderness Retreat in Ely, Minnesota, for purposes authorized by section 18(d) of Public Law 95-495.".

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to carry out and honor a commitment Congress made in the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness Act of 1978.

The funds to be appropriated by this amendment will make it possible for a veterans organization in Ely, MN, to complete the remodeling of an activities center for disabled veterans on the edge of the Boundary Waters Wilderness.

The 1978 law, Public Law 95-495, section 19(d) includes this clear statement of policy for the Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the U.S. Forest Service:

The Secretary, in cooperation with the State of Minnesota and other appropriate groups, consistent with the purposes of this Act, is authorized and directed to develop a program providing opportunities for a wide range of outdoor experiences for disabled persons.

Congress terminated all motorized activity within the BWCAW in that law; but, in compensation for loss of motor boating and snowmobiling inside BWCAW, directed a "program of dispersed outdoor recreation development on the Superior National Forest outside the BWCAW, as designated by this act."

Among the activities intended were "outdoor experiences for disabled persons."

My amendment to H.R. 5973, the Interior appropriations bill would add $325,000 for construction of and improvements to the Disabled Veterans Wilderness Retreat in Ely, MN, initiated last year as an outdoor recreational experience for disabled vets in a wilderness setting.

Mr. Chairman, I have just come back from visiting the site, and want to tell you how impressed I am with what has already been accomplished but, more important, with how desperate the need is for these moneys to carry out further improvements and complete the project.

Although this particular retreat was not envisioned at the time the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness Act—Public Law 95-495—was enacted, the legislation clearly foresaw the need for such a facility, both from the standpoint of the disabled servicemen it would serve, and as a replacement for the economic and tourist activities which had been the backbone of the local economy of the area, and which were sharply curtailed by the new "wilderness" designation.

Under that act, the Forest Service has bought out 18 resorts and expects to buy about 22 more. The area has already lost 15,000 tourists each year and will lose more as the acquisition program is completed. Clearly, the act has taken a heavy economic toll in the area.

As compensation to the area, the Boundary Waters Wilderness Act, in section 18, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to "expedite and intensify the program of dispersed outdoor recreation development on the Superior National Forest outside the wilderness. The Secretary is further authorized and directed, in subsection (d) of that section, to develop a program for disabled persons, in precise legislative language I have already cited.

Today we have the beginnings of such a program, in the Disabled Veterans Wilderness Retreat. The Disabled Veterans Retreat, Inc., a nonprofit local organization, has established the center and acquired the facilities—but much more work must be done on the center facilities to fulfill their potential.

Twenty-seven cabins need to be remodeled to accommodate the veterans, and furnished. At the moment, the cabins are totally bare. A new water system is also needed. The present water supply is brought in by aboveground pipelines from another resort, because the existing system, of galvanized pipe, has totally fallen apart. The cabins must be winterized for year-round service to the veterans. Perhaps worst of all, there is no heating for the baths and kitchens. Further, the cabins, boat access area and the grounds must be adapted to accommodate wheelchairs and to meet the other needs of handicapped people.

I want to emphasize the fact that this is an appropriate expenditure of public funds. The land is owned by the U.S. Forest Service. The buildings are now in the hands of a nonprofit organization, the Disabled Veterans Retreat, Inc., which will make no profit on the funds provided by my amendment. The activity is authorized and directed by Federal law. Under existing conditions, the retreat could accommodate 5,000 veterans each year. With the improvements, the retreat will be able to provide a wilderness experience for 6,300. This year, nearly 500 persons, disabled vets and their families, from 27 States and the Province of Ontario have used the retreat.

The retreat now provides employment for 27 people in the summer, although some must be laid off in the winter months. With the improvements, it will provide 40 year-round jobs; ultimately, that figure could double.

The retreat will thus be an important boost to the local area's economy. Forty jobs is a lot in the community of Ely, where about two-thirds of the work force is currently unemployed. The Government promised, in the act from which I quoted earlier, to provide alternatives to the active tourist industry which has been seriously diminished by wilderness designation and the depression in iron ore mining. So far, the Congress, and the Forest Service, have failed to make good on that promise. These funds and this facility will represent a good faith down payment toward fulfilling our commitment to the people of the area, and at the same time provide an outstanding source of enjoyment and new adventure for at least some of the men and women who served our country in time of war, and have paid for that service with permanent and severe disabilities.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, we have had an opportunity on this side to examine the gentleman's amendment. We consider it to be a good amendment and we are willing to accept it on our side.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I thank the chairman for his comments.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has kindly discussed this amendment with us. We think it is a good amendment, and we will accept it.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title II?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read title III.

Mr. YATES (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title III be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Are there any points of order to title III?

Are there any amendments to title III?

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, during the consideration of the fiscal year 1985 Interior appropriations bill, there has been considerable discussion concerning the Upper Delaware Wild and Scenic River corridor, a portion of which flows through my district.

I take a great deal of pride in this piece of legislation. It is a unique departure from past practices used in the creation of components of the Wild and Scenic River System. Congressman McHUGH and I, with the support and assistance of many of our colleagues, fashioned a program that fits the needs of the upper Delaware region.

It is designed to avoid condemnation and it permits local citizens and local governments to shop all major decisions. In fiscal year 1985, no funds are provided for land acquisition.

Even more important than the limitation on the Federal Government is the mandate we designed for land management. The development and oversight of the management plan for the upper Delaware River corridor relies on heavy local involvement—the local communities, governments, and citizens.

In my estimation this component is critical. It gives the local community the opportunity to play the key role in developing the land use plan and management that will govern the river. This is almost without precedent in previous wild and senic river corridor development.

Protecting the natural beauty of the upper Delaware and respecting the rights of the local citizens is ideal in the development of any riverway. I am proud of the program that has been developed for the upper Delaware.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF FLORIDA

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Florida: Page 72, after line 2, add the following new section:

SEC. 314. None of the funds provided by this Act to the Fish and Wildlife Service may be obligated or expended to plan for, conduct, or supervise deer hunting on the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, today, I am offering an amendment to the Interior appropriation bill (H.R. 5973) to prohibit the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service from conducting a deer hunt in the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge.

The issue is not deer hunting per se. It is deer hunting in the Loxahatchee Refuge.

Last year's hunt was not biologically justified in the refuge because the deer are few in number and not anywhere near a stage of overpopulation. Also, the hunt posed a risk of harm to other endangered species of animals, mainly waterfowl, that could be frightened away from nesting grounds by hunters.

It was not financially or recreationally justified because it cost $92,000 to supply 31 hunters with the opportunity to bag two deer—both does, and because other deer-hunting areas are available in south Florida.

There is no indication this year that the herd needs thinning, but there is every indication that the hunt will again drain both Fish and Wildlife Service funds and personnel.

Because it does not make sense to pursue a policy of opening the Loxahatchee to deer hunting, I urge you to vote for this amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, we have examined the gentleman's amendment on this side. We think it is very constructive, and we are willing to accept it on our side.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment of our colleague from Florida to prohibit the Fish and Wildlife Service from conducting a deer hunt in the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge.

I have already gone on record against the plans for the deer hunt by joining others in our delegation in urging the Department of the Interior not to conduct the hunt.

However, the reply from the Department was not reassuring. It is proposing regulations which would provide for a deer hunt in November, 1984, with certain restrictions. More permanent action is called for and this amendment provides it.

Prior to the current administration, Department of the Interior officials had concluded that deer hunting in the refuge was unwarranted and it had been banned for 31 years. It was opened for the first time last year to permit recreational hunting. The cost of this hunt, however, far outweighed the benefits to the 31 hunters who participated. The 1983 2-day hunt preparations, which included environmental reviews, public hearings, law enforcement, and biological surveys, cost the taxpayers $92,000 and netted the hunters a total of two does. Costs must also be calculated for the lawsuits the 1983 hunt generated and are likely to generate again this year if the hunt is permitted to take place.

There is no environmental or biological reason, such as overpopulation or damage being caused by deer, to warrent a hunt this year. Despite the Department's contention that costs would be less this year, it seems to me that any cost associated with this questionable activity is too much. Therefore, I urge our colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments?

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I use this procedure to take this time to thank the Committee for a commitment that is made to the people of the State of Connecticut in allowing us, if the Senate goes along, to set aside four important areas for a wildlife refuge in the State of Connecticut. We are talking areas along our southern coast, a coast that is highly developed, highly urbanized, and densely populated. But this is an area, Mr. Chairman, that if we lost it today we do not lose it just for today and tomorrow and next week, we lose it forever. What we propose to do here, with the backing of the Committee, is to set this land aside for a nature refuge and a wildlife refuge.

This is one of the areas that is more rich in bird life than any in the United States, and what we are trying to do for not only our children and their children but future generations is to keep a commitment to quality of life, to keep this land from being consumed by the developers, converted to condominiums and, like the raven, never more.

I thank the Chairman and the Committee for their support.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RATCHFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I would like to commend the gentleman for his advocacy on the subcommittee and on the committee for this important step forward.

In my district there are two of these locations that are contained in this bill, Falkner Island and Milford Point, and these are areas of great ecological importance, and they are one of the few remaining wildlife areas on the coast of Long Island Sound. Through this acquisition as a wildlife refuge by the Federal Government we will ensure that this land is kept in an undeveloped form and that the wildlife in particular, birds that are in danger of becoming extinct, will have their continued habitat maintained.

There is no question with respect to Milford Point that if we do not act quickly we are going to be faced with a situation in which development is going to occur. It is a very prime piece of land, but it is a piece of land that the people of Milford and the city government of Milford want very much to preserve in its natural state. Yet they are facing a landowner who is looking to realize the value of his land and is willing to sell the land to the Federal Government in order to preserve it but if he has no other alternative he will move forward with development plans that will be bad for the environment of the area and also bad for the surrounding area in terms of development that cannot really be borne by the city services that exist.

So I think this is an extremely important step. I very much appreciate the leadership of the gentleman from Connecticut in bringing about the funding which we hope will be available in the final bill.

Mr. RATCHFORD. I would applaud the gentleman for his involvement. I know what it means in his district and to the shore area of Connecticut.

I would also applaud the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON] who were directly involved in this effort.

Again we are talking about a very urbanized State, and we are talking about a State that cares about quality of life, and a commitment to quality of life is contained in this decision to set aside the land, so that we will not just have on the coastline of Connecticut condominiums, skyscrapers, corporate headquarters, as important as they are, but we will set aside some land in its natural form for our children, their children and future generations.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. If the gentleman will yield further, I would just like to emphasize that one of the additional good things about this expenditure is that it comes from funds that are already set aside for this purpose and in no sense is this a budget problem. In other words, this is not going to increase budget deficits, it is not going to require new tax revenue. There are offshore leasing fees that are available to pay for just this kind of acquisition to preserve the environment. So from the budgetary standpoint, it makes sense, as well as from an environmental standpoint.

Mr. RATCHFORD. The gentleman is correct.

Again, we thank the committee for its indulgence.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title III?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MC DADE

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCDADE: On page 72, after line 2, add a new section as follows:

SEC. 315. Each amount of budget authority provided in this Act, for payments not required by law, is hereby reduced by 3 per centum.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I will explain the amendment. It is a 3-percent cut across the board on the appropriation bill.

May I say to my dear friend from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, that I know his sensitivities on the issue and his interest in the bill, and may I say that I share them. We have a difference of opinion about how we get this bill signed into law. The only way to get this bill signed into law as it leaves the House is to get the bill to an acceptable level where the White House will concur. It is my judgment that because the House unanimously rescinded a little over $200 million in unused forest roads and trails money that if we take a 3-percent cut across the board it will add about $200 million, roughly, and we will come in at a figure that then is acceptable to the administration and we can get this bill signed into law.

It is an important bill, it is a bill that I have worked on for most of my congressional career. I do not believe a 3-percent cut will harm irreparably any of the programs that are in here. I do not believe that a 3-percent cut will cause grave difficulties. I am asking my colleagues to vote for this amendment so that we can have a bill signed by the President. I am asking my colleagues to vote for the bill so that we can go to conference with the other body on a bill that will be in a position to conference and come back to you for final judgment as a conference report. Let us try to get this bill signed into law. I hope you will vote for what I think is a modest cut of 3 percent across the board and get the bill into a signable position.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDADE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. I was just curious about the gentleman's amendment. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it is line item by line item, so that the administration cannot make a single large reduction out of one area to satisfy the 3-percent cut.

Mr. McDADE. Let me say to my colleague that we need the legislative history because it is in the form of a 3-percent cut, but may I say to my colleague that what I am attempting to do is not provide discretion to the administration to take it anyplace they want to. I want it account by account. That is the intent of the amendment, may I say to my friend.

□ 1630

Mr. DICKS. You mean account by account, that means line item by line item?

Mr. McDADE. That is right.

Mr. DICKS. I simply wanted an understanding of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. McDADE. It is an effort to take it item by item across the board on all the accounts, in order that they might all bear some burden for the problem and get it over to the Senate and I hope get it signed into law.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LOEFFLER].

Mr. LOEFFLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman for offering this fiscal amendment so that we can get the Interior appropriation bill in line with what the administration and I believe to be a sound and solid number.

I further join my colleague from Pennsylvania in pointing out that in no way will this 3-percent across-the-board reduction in the entire line-item amounts within this bill unravel or upset the priorities that the subcommittee, the full committee, and now, this body, have deemed appropriate as far as the entire aggregate amount of spending in this bill.

I urge my colleagues to do the responsible thing: to adopt the McDade amendment, that will, in essence, save some $250 million. That, coupled with the rescission earlier offered by the gentleman and chairman of our committee, Mr. YATES, puts this bill into a position where we can go into conference with a bill that can be signed into law.

I commend my colleague from Pennsylvania for offering this amendment, and also for his 20 years of service on our Interior Committee.

Mr. McDADE. I thank my colleague from Texas very much and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have seen the evolution of this cut from 6 percent in the full committee, to now 3 percent on a basis that I do not quite understand. Is this intended as an across-the-board cut? Line item by line item, may I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

I yield to the gentleman for his response.

Mr. McDADE. As I said to our colleague, a member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Washington, it is intended to be 3 percent on all the accounts across the board. The amendment at 3 percent needs that kind of clarification, and I am glad the gentleman asks the question. It is all the accounts in the bill; 3 percent. No discretion to the administration; 3 percent on the line items.

Mr. YATES. No discretion to the administration.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKS. As I understand it, when you say account, there are a number of line items within an overall account. So we are not saying line item by line item. This amendment allows the administration, in a broad account, to zoom in and take out important congressional initiatives.

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE] for his response.

Mr. McDADE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

May I assure my friend that it is the intention of the author of the amendment to do it account by account. I do not want to see that kind of discretion given any administration. It is the intention of my amendment to do it line by line, item by item.

Mr. YATES. I just want to reiterate what the gentleman from Washington is saying. There is a difference between an account-by-account reduction and a line-by-line reduction.

Mr. McDADE. Line by line, may I say to my friend.

Mr. YATES. That is not what the gentleman's amendment says.

Mr. McDADE. We are stating legislative history to make sure it does say that.

Mr. DICKS. Would the gentleman amend his amendment?

Mr. YATES. Yes; but legislative history does not control the language of an amendment. What I would suggest to the gentleman, of course, is that he withdraw his amendment, which I think would be the best solution. Failing that, I think he ought to look at the language.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I will yield in just a moment. Well, I will defer talking about one of the darkest chapters in the history of baseball until I am through yielding to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AuCOIN. I appreciate the gentleman yielding because to further make the point that the gentleman is making, I have the language that Mr. McDADE has offered, and it does refer to amounts of budget authority. That is quite different than a reference to specific line items.

To give the Members an understanding of what we are talking about here, the amount of budget authority for the National Forest System is $1,041,459,000. That is the amount of budget authority for the National Forest System. That would be reduced under the McDADE amendment by 3 percent. But, if you look at all the categories on page 69 of the committee report, the line items in the budget for the Forest Service, within that budget authority we find minerals, we find real estate management, we find maintenance of facilities, fire protection, fighting forest fires, trail maintenance, timber sales, reforestation, research and development, habitat, and all the rest. What this amendment would mean is that finding the amount of money that would be a 3-percent reduction for that particular amount of budget authority, we leave it to the administration whether the cut is in minerals or reforestation.

Mr. YATES. Could the administration cut minerals under Forest Service by the full 3 percent?

Mr. AuCOIN. It could go beyond 3 percent for any one of those specific subitems that I have just listed, and leave some of them absolutely untouched, and that is a very different thing than saying each one of those specific items is going to be reduced by 3 percent. That would be a line item-by-line-item approach. That is not what the amendment says. The amendment refers to amounts of budget authority, and what we are really dealing here in this one particular instance that I offer to my colleagues as an illustration, we are simply saying take the National Forest System appropriation account and find wherever you want to, the places, the particular line items to find the 3-percent reduction.

Mr. YATES. I ask my friend from Oregon, could the administration, under this amendment, take the full 3 percent from the timber cut, for example?

Mr. AuCOIN. It could take it completely from the timber-sales program.

Mr. YATES. Completely from the timber-sales program and let other items in that particular account go without a cut?

Mr. AuCOIN. Go untouched. Or in the alternative, they could take it completely from road maintenance and leave parks or park-like facilities and other areas untouched.

Let me just read some of the subcategories that are available for the administration to pick and choose among in deciding where to find the aggregate amounts that would reach the 3-percent total reduction for the National Forest Service. Minerals, real estate management, land line location, maintenance of facilities, fire protection, fighting forest fires, cooperative law enforcement, road maintenance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] has expired.

(On request of Mr. AuCOIN and by unanimous consent, Mr. YATES was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman continue to yield?

Mr. YATES. I will in just a moment, but I want to ask the gentleman a question.

For example, under title II, the Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, could the administration take the full 3 percent from the account which seeks to obligate construction of forest roads by timber purchases?

I yield to the gentleman for his response.

Mr. AuCOIN. The gentleman is correct, and the point is, there must be, I have not counted the standing here, the exact number of subcategories which do represent the line items, but there appear to be some 25 of them, and I have listed a number. They are very critical. Each one represents a particular value or a priority. I think it ought to be the business of this Congress to set those priorities to decide where the increases ought to be; where the decreases ought to be. That is what budgeting is all about; that is what appropriations is all about. That is what the power of the purse strings is all about.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania's amendment says take the National Forest System Administration, and find a 3-percent reduction. Now, we have got about 25 categories where they can find that 3 percent reduction in, and how they arrive at it might be all together different than the committee would have or the Congress would have arrived at it. I am offended by that, because I do not like a number of the ways, the priorities of the administration had been presented to us. On a bipartisan basis, the committee agreed.

We have had hearings in which we have spent 43 days. We have listened to more than 800 witnesses. We have carefully arrived at a system of priorities, and the gentleman's amendment is not line by line, I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McDADE. Let me say to my friend that it is, and I have repeated this about four times, the intention of the author of the amendment to make clear that it is a 3-percent across-the-board resolution. If there is a problem further, and if the gentleman wants to support a 3-percent amendment, I will introduce into the RECORD the committee report that we have, line-by-line, item-by-item, 3-percent cut on each of the individual items in the report.

That is what I am trying to do; if my friend would feel better about the amendment, and vote for it, or if he does not, I will offer it. But, of course, I do not think the gentleman would vote for it no matter what I did, to be honest with the gentleman. But I will put in the report.

Mr. YATES. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is the gentleman intending to have an across-the-board cut by 3 percent?

Mr. McDADE. It is the gentleman's intention to take the bill, which is over the budget by about a half billion, apply a 3-percent cut to the gross budget items, and then apply them within the accounts, every single account in the bill, by 3 percent, every line item.

May I say to my friend that I believe the amendment is technically correct. I am advised that it is parliamentarily correct. I will put into the RECORD to make certain that no one is misled and there is no misinterpretation. I will put in the committee report, on each line, a 3-percent cut, to assure my colleague that I do not want to see discretion.

Mr. YATES. May I say to the gentleman that it is a sad day when my good friend from Pennsylvania offers this kind of amendment.

You know, Mr. Chairman, I do not think my friend from Pennsylvania is old enough to remember one of the blackest chapters in the history of baseball, the White Sox scandal of 1918.

Mr. AuCOIN. 1919.

Mr. YATES. At that time, one of the stars on the White Sox team who was involved was Shoeless Joe Jackson, who was one of the great stars in baseball, and he was caught in a bribery charge. One of his young admirers came up to Joe Jackson with tears in his eyes, and he said, "Say it ain't so, Joe." But Joe said it was so.

That is what is happening today. I am moved to ask my friend, "Say it ain't so, Joe." I have asked him that before, and he said, "It is so."

Mr. McDADE. It is so, Sid.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I can only say in response that there are countless taxpayers around this country who are expressing their admiration for the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I think that some of them will be saying they only wish the 3 percent were 15 or 20 so we could balance the budget.

Mr. YATES. I am sure that the gentleman speaks for them with great authority and with great eloquence.

But Joe says it is so, and Joe, I am moved to say, come back to the way you used to be; come back to yesteryear when you fought those who were offering amendments of this type. But something has changed.

It is kind of interesting, because in subcommittee you really offered no 3-percent cut. It was only when we got to the full committee that you offered a 6-percent cut. Now that 6-percent cut has become 3 percent, and I am glad it is cut in half. But what happened between the time we met for our subcommittee markup and the full committee markup?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. YATES was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that at that time, in that interim, our good friend from Massachusetts, SILVIO CONTE, said that our friend from Pennsylvania met "The Young Slasher." "The Young Slasher," the head of the Office of Management and Budget, said, "You have got to cut this by 6 percent," and my friend, who will remain my friend no matter how this comes out, just fell into line and he said, "OK, we have got to have a bill."

He said it is a good bill, in his remarks in the report. Read the report. You will find that my friend from Pennsylvania says it is a good bill, it is a very good bill. My friend from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] says it is a very good bill. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] says it is an excellent bill. And the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. LOEFFLER] said that he cannot support the bill because it is too much of a good thing. Those are the words that he used: "too much of a good thing." It is a good thing. It is a good bill. It is an excellent bill.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Will my distinguished chairman yield?

Mr. YATES. Always, to my distinguished friend from Texas.

Mr. LOEFFLER. Precisely. That is just what I said. It is $500 million too much of a good thing. With the reduction we are working on now, coupled with your rescission of 2 days ago, this comes into the real thing.

Mr. YATES. Let us look at the real thing, may I say to the gentleman. Look at this bill we have before us today. We bring $12 billion in to the Treasury through this bill. This is a bill in balance. This is a bill that provides $4 billion in surplus to the Treasury over what is being spent. Today we cut another $5 billion in budget authority in the synfuels amendment. On Tuesday, we cut $226 million in budget authority from the Forest Service road account.

Is that not enough of a cut, may I say to the gentleman? Why do we have to compound what we did there with this kind of 3-percent cut?

What if my friend from Pennsylvania had met "The Young Slasher" and "The Young Slasher" had said, "We have to cut this by 10 percent?" Would the gentleman then have said that as long as this is the way to get the bill, which is the premise that he used in his remarks in the report, would then have favored a 10-percent cut?

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I always yield to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman, and I think he knows before he even asked the question, that if I considered the figure to be arbitrary or capricious, I would not support it; that if I thought the recommendations of the Office of Management and Budget were totally without merit, I would not support them.

As my colleague knows, in this instance I believe that we have gone beyond the bounds that can see this bill written into law and I am, therefore, constrained to offer the amendment, and that is why I did it.

Mr. YATES. All right, but what is the effect of a 3-percent cut? The gentleman from Minneapolis, my good friend [Mr. FRENZEL], has a number of Indian tribes up there. They are going to be hurt by this amendment. They are going to have their hospital funds cut by 3 percent.

The Rosebud Sioux, after 10 years of waiting for a hospital, found that we went over the budget to approve money for a new hospital for the Rosebud Sioux. With a 3-percent cut, which my friend says is applicable to them, they will have to go back to the drawing board to draft a plan for a hospital that will provide for 3-percent less in cost than the other.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio, who I am sure is glad to support this bill for the full amount.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman mentioned the two cuts, in the Forest Service roads account and in the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

Mr. YATES. Yes.

Mr. REGULA. Would it not be good management to make cuts in some of the other programs? I should not use the word "cut." What the gentleman from Pennsylvania is doing is restraining the growth. This bill is $486 million over last year's appropriation level. The proposed amendment would still allow an increase of a couple hundred million over last year. So "cuts" is not the right word.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, let me reclaim my time and tell the gentleman why it is over.

Did I understand the gentleman to say $480 million over last year?

Mr. REGULA. $486 million over last year.

Mr. YATES. The reason for that, if I may tell the gentleman, is because of the request for increases that the administration wanted. It is because of the programs that were approved by the Congress and signed into law by the President last year that were in last year's bill. It is because of a pay increase that we have approved for the Department of the Interior, as well. So the sum total of these, all good accounts, totals that amount of money.

I tell the gentleman that every account in this bill is a good account.

Three percent is a substantial cut. For many of the programs a 3-percent reduction bites through whatever fat there might be and takes muscle and bone with it.

Dave Stockman wasn't at our committee hearings; he didn't hear the testimony; he doesn't know the needs of the agencies. He only knows that he wants the bill cut by 3 percent and my friend from Pennsylvania has decided to go along with him.

"We must reduce the total funding in this bill to assure its acceptance by the White House," says my good friend from Pennsylvania. I am moved to ask, suppose David Stockman had demanded a 10-percent cut? Or a 20-percent cut? Would my friend from Pennsylvania have marched to that command because that level was required to assure its acceptance by the White House?

Since when is acceptance by the White House to be the sole test for this House?

Is Congress to have no role to play in the determination of the level of appropriations to be approved to meet the country's needs?

Must we in the House march to David Stockman's command?

David Stockman speaks for the President—is he also to be the spokesman for the Congress to tell us what we must do?

We, too, have our obligation to write a bill--and in performance of that obligation, our committee acted seriously and responsibly.

Look at our hearings—12 volumes. Were our hearings conducted over several months a mere charade?

Was the parade of over 800 witnesses to our committee table a travesty?

Were the 250 Members of Congress who appeared before our subcommittee to urge appropriations for their districts aware that they were testifying to no purpose?

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] asked so appropriately in our full committee markup:

> Why spend months in hearings when we can find out what we are supposed to do in a half-hour meeting with David Stockman?

Three percent will be approximately $240 million across the board. Some agencies will be hurt more than others. It will fall hardest on the Indian people.

Let me give you one example. For 10 years the Rosebud Sioux have waited for a new hospital to take care of the needs of its people. year after year they waited until this year in this bill we provided the funds to build that hospital. If this cut goes through, they will have to wait again, years perhaps, because the hospital will have to be redesigned.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says "we know any of the agencies can take a 3-percent cut." He may know that. I don't know that—and I was the one who sat through all the hearings.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania is wrong when he says an across-the-board cut is the fairest cut of all. That is just not true—the across-the-board cut is the cruelest cut of all. Maybe some agencies can take a 6-percent cut. Some, like the Rosebud Hospital case, can't even take a 2-percent cut. It will send them back to the drawing board.

And what in the world is the purpose of the Appropriations Committee if at the end of its long, long hearings, which are the basis for a discriminating, thoughtful allocation of funds by the subcommittee their efforts discarded by this across-the-board cut?

What this 4-percent-across-the-board cut says to our Appropriations Committee is that you haven't done a good job. That's the incongruous part of the approach taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He agrees our committee has done a good job—but then he sides with the White House which listened to none of the hearings.

I believe this House of Representatives has a responsibility of its own—and a right to its own decisions without threats from the White House. Suggestions yes; but no threats. Don't tell us we must do this—or else.

The President can veto this bill if he chooses—that is his prerogative—but let's not anticipate what he will do. Let's do what we have to do as the House of Representatives.

Please don't take the 3-percent solution. Please don't take this across-the-board cut. Let us go to the Senate with our bill so that we are in a position to negotiate without the crippling effect of the 3-percent cut.

This is the wrong time to listen to any threats from the White House. We are in the beginning of the budgeting process. There will be many reductions by the Senate—there will be reductions in the conference when we come back with our conference report—that is the time if you believe our bill is too high—you can send us back to cut the bill. But not now—this action is so premature—please do not reject us now.

I ask you to reject the 3-percent solution.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DICKS TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MC DADE

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. DICKS to the amendment offered by Mr. MCDADE: Substitute the words "line items" for the word "amount".

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment. It just clarifies the amendment offered by Mr. MCDADE.

I want to make one thing very clear. I am in support of the chairman's position against the McDade amendment, but I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania wanted to make it clear that his amendment was to apply to line items. I think my amendment makes it as clear as we can make it, when added to our legislative history.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment may not carry out the gentleman's purpose, because the use of the term "line items" does not carry with it budget authority, which I think is what the gentleman intended.

I think perhaps the gentleman may want to withdraw his amendment at this time and redraft it, if he intends to reach budget authority.

Mr. DICKS. Would the words "budget authority" be more appropriate than "line items"?

Mr. YATES. If the gentleman would yield further, would the gentleman withdraw his amendment at this time so we can redraft it properly?

Mr. DICKS. It would seem to me that the words "line items" are much clearer than the word "amount." I was not informed there might be a problem with the use of the term "line items" when I drafted the amendment.

□ 1650

If the subcommittee chairman would like to substitute words, I have no objection, but I am not going to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, then I think the gentleman's amendment does not provide the kind of relief that the gentleman wants, and with due deference to my friend—and he is my friend—I believe his amendment will be as inadequate as is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what we are arguing about. I think we are trying to do the House a service by showing legislative intent, by pinning down what has already been pinned down. I would be happy to take the gentleman's amendment and use it as a method of saying that we are doing exactly what we intend to do. I think it is a good amendment, and I am happy to accept it.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time, and I ask for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, have we disposed of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] remains pending.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AuCOIN] is recognized.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to speak to the amendment that is pending to the McDade amendment because it is unclear at the moment as to what its effect is. I do know what the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is, and that effect would be to leave some 25 specific line item accounts up for grabs.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AuCOIN. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I use the example of the National Forest System as one of the many illustrations. When you use the term, as the gentleman does, "amounts of budget authority," and you say that that will hereby be reduced by 3 percent, you are saying, for example, that the National Forest System will be reduced by 3 percent.

I count 25 line item accounts in that area, "amounts of budget authority," and you are really allowing the Administrator or Stockman or someone to pick and choose among them as to where you find the dollars to reach the need for that amount of budget authority.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AuCOIN. I will yield now to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has stated his opinion of what the amendment does. I have made it crystal clear as the author of the amendment, No. 1, that I do not believe that is what the amendment does. May I say to my friend that I have been advised by the Parliamentarian, who looked at the amendment, that it does do what you and I wish it to do.

My friend, the gentleman from Washington, has an amendment pending. Is the gentleman for that amendment? We can save a lot of time here.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I am not sure that the gentleman from Washington perfects the situation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania may believe that. I differ with the gentleman.

Mr. McDADE. Well, we have a difference of opinion.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I will keep my time if the gentleman will allow me.

Sometimes the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I have differences of opinion. We did not with the last amendment; we do with this amendment. I do not happen to believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington perfects the situation at all. I do not believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, applying a 3-percent across-the-board cut, is sound, even if it went to a line-by-line or a line-item-by-line-item situation.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AuCOIN. I do not believe his amendment does that, but if it were to do that, it would be only modestly better, and let me tell the gentleman why.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. AuCOIN. I will yield to my friend in just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to explain to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, why I think it is shortsighted for us to be dealing with an across-the-board cut of any percentage, much less 3 percent.

The chairman of the subcommittee, who has presided over the hearings, during which we have listened to over 800 witnesses and taken 43 days to develop a hearing record on a basis on which we can legislate, stated the case very well a moment ago. He pointed out to the membership and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has been on the committee himself for 20 years and knows this, that many of the accounts we are funding here are moneymakers for the Treasury.

I keep coming back to the National Forest System as an immediate example. It is important to my region of the country. There are many other accounts similar to this, but I want to use this illustration. In the timber sales program, if the gentleman's amendment were to be applied to this line item, the timber sales program would be subjected to a $5.7 million cut. That would reduce the timber sales program by 450 million board feet of timber. That means lost revenue to the U.S. Treasury because for that timber and for that harvesting the Treasury gets receipts. The amount of lost revenue to the Treasury would be $59 million.

So for the savings that the gentleman seeks, an outlay of $5.7 million in budget savings, we would lose and forgo $59 million in revenue receipts to the Treasury.

The gentleman is cutting into moneymaking parts of the budget that benefit the entire Treasury, and it is woefully shortsighted for that reason. In terms of jobs forgone as a result of that lost revenue and that lost economic activity, we are talking in terms of the timber sales of the Forest Service, which is only one small part of the program, about 7,000 jobs lost.

Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to defeat both pending amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] has expired.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago we moved to limit debate. I am going to withdraw my reservation, but I do so with the expectation that we will not have motions to restrict debate if we are going to let Members proceed beyond the 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like a direct a question to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, and the question is this: Is it the gentleman's understanding that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] would also reduce the land and water conservation fund accounts as well as those which are funded by general revenues?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, that is the expectation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If our staff's interpretation is correct, the money could be used to reduce it significantly; yes.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the subcommittee chairman for his answer.

Mr. YATES. If the gentleman will permit me to complete that, let me say this.

Mr. LEVITAS. I yield further to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. The amount in this bill for the States under the land and water conservation fund is $75 million, and that is above the budget because the administration made no recommendation.

Mr. LEVITAS. And it is my understanding that there is approximately $300 million in funding from the land and water conservation fund sources, as opposed to general revenue sources, that would be reduced by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. YATES. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the subcommittee chairman for his answer to that because it seems to me there is clearly a difference between those projects and those programs which are funded out of general revenues and those which are funded from the land and water conservation fund, where there are earmarked and dedicated purposes for the revenues from the offshore leasing and from the exploitation of the public lands for those purposes for which money is to be replowed into the national patrimony.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would hope that, even if this amendment is adopted, projects which are funded out of the trust fund will be treated differently, since the use of those funds are from an earmarked source and cannot be used to reduce the deficit on general revenue programs.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's answer to my question. The reason I make this point is because this bill contains vital funding, from the land and water trust fund, for the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area. This park has unanimous bipartisan support in the Georgia congressional delegation and we are grateful to this subcommittee for their action in funding this national park.

Mr. Chairman, I am extremely pleased that the House is considering the Interior appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985, H.R. 5973. This bill contains $2 million for land acquisition for the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area. This is the first time in several years that this funding has been in the committee bill, and that is significant. This appropriation is a matter of importance not only for Georgians but for the entire Nation because of the national significance and use of this park.

I would like to make several points in support of this funding today. First, the area we are speaking of is a unique one, and needs the Federal protection that was given to it as a national recreation area. In addition to its recreational values, which are so special because of its proximity to our urban area, this is a region in which nationally significant historic and archeological resources exist.

The Chattahoochee, first named by the Creek Indians "River of Flowered Stones," has outstanding geological formations and an ecological community which protects endangered species and some very rare areas of flora and fauna. There are sites and relics of historic interest dating back to prehistoric times and covering major periods until the present including some significant Indian and Civil War sites.

Its water not only supplies the entire water supply to metropolitan Atlanta, and one-fourth of Georgia's needs, but also supports a wide variety of fish, abundant fowl, and unique plant life. While major portions of the river are still a largely undeveloped and unspoiled natural resource, it is located between two principal interstate highways so that people from across the Nation have easy access to its many marvels.

Second, it is important to fund some of the most development-threatened tracts this year, for if we don't, it is likely that we will lose portions of the park, particularly because it is near a large urban area that is experiencing continued rapid growth. Local landowners and developers have patiently waited for us to purchase this land, but time is running out.

In 1978, by overwhelming margins, Congress authorized the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area and authorized $72.9 million for acquisition of the property. Of that, this committee and Congress has wisely and quickly appropriated $67.92 million and acquired approximately 3,600 acres in the Chattahoochee corridor.

I feel that it is important for the Federal Government to continue its commitment to this area, showing our strong support and backing of the State and local effort in support of the park. Ever since the creation of the park, many concerned individuals, citizens groups, and public officials have worked together for the preservation of this area.

The superintendent of the park organized and has met repeatedly with a public advisory group which is composed of homeowners, developers, public officials, environmentalists, and Park Service representatives. In addition, the Park Service has held several hearings to which the public was invited, and held workshops in conjunction with the Atlanta Regional Commission. A coalition of concerned groups was formed, the Chattahoochee River Coalition, specifically to study the area and make suggestions to further define the park.

The State has already donated over 685 acreas to the National Park Service. When I served in the Georgia House of Representatives, I was the principal sponsor of the Metropolitan River Protection Act [MRPA] which set standards for controlling development along the river. That legislation was the first multijurisdictional land use law in our State. Last year, the State strengthened MRPA and also entered into a "concurrent jurisdiction agreement" with the National Park Service to enforce the laws along the river.

The local governments have, to the limit of their ability under law, tried to protect this corridor. The Atlanta Regional Commission [ARC], the planning body for the local governments, was instrumental in drafting and working for passage of MRPA and the ensuing amendments. With this input into MRPA, the localities have increased their ability to control development along this area. In addition, the ARC has completed a metropolitan Atlanta water resource study and a study of the recreational needs of the area, to better determine the needs of this urban region.

These State and local actions and agreements show the interest of the State of Georgia to preserve the resources along the corridor, and work with both Federal and local citizens to achieve the best national park that is possible.

I would like to thank the chairman for his successful effort to allocate $2 million this year for the Chattahoochee. The House of Representatives has recently reaffirmed its commitment to this area by unanimously passing H.R. 2645, a bill which defines the final boundaries of the park and increases the authorization ceiling for the Chattahoochee Park from $72.9 million to $84.6 million. This legislation is currently awaiting action in the Senate, where it is sponsored by both Senators from Georgia.

The land in the boundaries of the Chattahoochee Park that has not yet been acquired is in great danger of being developed. The Chattahoochee Park is a unique area consisting of 14 parcels of land, strung together by the river like pearls on a necklace. We are indeed fortunate to have such a precious resource so close to Atlanta and the surrounding metropolitan area. We must act now in order to preserve this area for future generations.

Several areas have already been lost to development, even in the last year, such as part of the Jones Bridge tract, the Neeley Farm area, and the Island Ford tract. Many more of the areas currently authorized for the park are under threat of development, or actually being developed into apartments, townhouses, and single-family residential houses, such as the Holcomb Bridge tract, the Island Ford tract, and the Suwanee Creek tract.

Further, some of the new areas authorized in our bill, H.R. 2645, are also threatened by the same type of development. Further development for the land would not only hurt the area's recreational values, but more importantly it would cause inceasingly damaging pollution and destruction of the natural beauty and wilderness. It is crucial that we move to buy this land now before these resources are lost to us.

This park is a shining example to the rest of the country. Last year alone, over 2 million people from all over America used the park for fishing, hiking, rafting, canoeing, camping, cycling, and a number of other outdoor activities, even though the park is far from full completion. While the park fulfills many recreational needs, it is essential to protect our natural resources from destruction. In these days where pollutants clog our air and toxic wastes contaminate our water and land, it is of utmost importance that we take the necessary steps to save our precious and limited resources.

As we see the exploitation of some of our resources, let us act to protect those that we still have. Let us show a shining example to the rest of the country and acquire this land now before it is too late. Once these resources are lost, they are gone forever. Let us look to the future and make wise choices now. There will be no second chance.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my original amendment to the McDade amendment be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DICKS TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MCDADE

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKS to the amendment offered by Mr. MCDADE: ": Provided, That no project or activity funded by that budget authority may be reduced by more than 3 percent.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I think my amendment achieves what everyone here wants to achieve. It clarifies the McDade amendment so there is no question that the 3 percent only applies line-item by line-item.

□ 1700

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. YATES. It is still a bad amendment, is it not?

Mr. DICKS. Yes. I am opposed to the McDade amendment, but this is a slight improvement so that the administration does not have the ability to dismantle imporant congressional initiatives.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I heard it stated earlier that this bill was above the budget. Now, I would like some clarification on that. Is it above the budget requested by the President or is it above the budget approved by the House?

Mr. DICKS. I think it is very important, and I will yield to the chairman to clarify this point, that this bill is not above the section 302 allocation within the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee is allocated a block of money. We then reallocate it subcommittee by subcommittee. This bill is within our section 302 allocation. The overall allocation is within the budget authority.

What we have done, according to congressional priorities, is put a little more money into this bill because we know that we are going to take money out of other bills, like Defense, for example, that will be substantially below the President's budget.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, this is then not over the House budget that was adopted by this House?

Mr. DICKS. That is right.

Mr. LEVITAS. Even if it might exceed the request of the President, whose budget I think had one vote, that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] and nobody else, so that we are within the budget which a majority of the Members adopted.

Mr. DICKS. That is why I strongly oppose the McDade amendment, but support the Dicks clarifying amendment to the McDade amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division has been requested.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his request for a division.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] is a simple one. It is similar to my own so I shall not be obliged to offer mine. Had I moved my own I would have supported it as follows:

Our budget resolution indicates that nondefense discretionary spending ought to increase no more than 3.5 percent over last year's levels. I have tried to make sure we do not exceed that number. Unfortunately, this House has not made my task an easy one.

According to my analysis, based on CBO estimates for this bill and the conference report for last year's Interior appropriations bill, last year's spending for this category was $7,953,783,000. Of that, $73,100,000 was for mandatory programs, in which the Appropriations Committee simply provided the funds as required under previous legislation. The remaining portion, discretionary spending, amounted to $7,880,683,000. That is the portion of spending which our budget indicates ought not to exceed 3.5 percent.

This year's bill calls for a total of $8,509,496,000. Of that, $71,430,000 is for mandatories; $8,438,066,000 is discretionary spending. It is a simple calculation to determine that this is an increase of $555,713,000, or 7 percent over last year's appropriation bill.

My amendment reduces aggregate growth of discretionary spending in the bill to 3.5 percent. I reach that figure by making a 3.3-percent reduction in each discretionary category. My intention was to match the proportions of spending reported by the committee.

I want my amendment to be solely a fiscal decision, not one of priorities between programs and agencies. My amendment would hold total spending in the bill to $8,231,039,900. The affected portion of the bill, discretionary spending, would be $8,159,609,900. That is an increase of just a bit over 3.5 percent. Mandatory spending would be unchanged from the committee-reported bill. My amendment will reduce spending by $278 million.

It is important, as well, to point out why I have used the original appropriations bill number, rather than the bill after supplementals, as reported by the committee. At some point in our process, we have to compare apples with apples and oranges with oranges. If supplementals were a rarity, used only to meet some unforseen emergency, then I would agree with the analysis of the committee. However, supplementals are the rule, not the exception. We are told that this bill is an increase of only about 6 percent, if one takes into account supplementals. We were given the same sort of analysis last year. But we have also added, already, another $69,378,000 to last year's appropriation. How much will our supplemental be this year?

I believe that it is instructive to look at prior years' supplementals. In fiscal 1978, we added about $1.3 billion. In fiscal 1979, we added $746.5 million. Fiscal 1980, with a huge increase in funds because of the synthetic fuels program, actually saw a decrease of $3 billion. In fiscal 1981, we returned to form, and added $953 million. In 1982, we cut $178 million, and in 1983 we added $1.1 billion. Our average supplemental in the past 6 fiscal years has been about $141 million. We have, on average, increased spending about 5 percent over the committee-reported bill.

My judgment is that we ought to compare our spending bills to the unsupplemented originals. Otherwise we fall into the trap of arbitraging percentage increases over prior years, without any recognition of the contribution of supplementals to the growth in spending.

My amendment is a modest one. I have tried to construct it as carefully as possible, so as to do no damage to mandatory programs in the bill. Because a 7-percent increase in spending is unacceptable, and because the McDade amendment is so similar to my own I urge an affirmative vote on it.

Mr. Chairman, I have a very similar amendment to that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and it is similar also to amendments that I have been offering to many of the appropriation bills as they have passed through this Committee. Because my amendment is quite similar to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE], I will not be offering it. Therefore, I speak in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

The first item that I think is important to discuss with respect to the McDade amendment is whether it is above or below the budget approved by the House. Yesterday I read into the RECORD a statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of the Budget Committee, at the time the budget was passed. He said that this budget contemplated restraining discretionary expenditures to a nominal 3.5-percent growth rate.

In this bill there are about 99 percent discretionary domestic expenditures, which under the chairman's description of the budget resolution we passed exceed our budget resolution by about twice. You have about a 7-percent increase in this resolution.

Now, we have played the arbitrage game with the Appropriations Committee and they have shuffled their numbers around and they have funded discretionaries and held back on mandatories and they have switched their money to certain favored subcommittees from others which are not so favored; but if you want to support our budget you literally have to support the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Now, yesterday when I attempted to reduce another spending bill down to the level which a majority of our colleagues bravely voted for when they adopted the House budget resolution, my amendment was described by its fun-loving opponents as a "meat ax," a "chain saw," and as some sort of weed infestation in a rose garden. Now, I do not know how they overlooked steam shovels, piledrivers, backhoes, and steamrollers, but somehow those were not included in the description.

After my work had been blessed with these kinds of colorful epithets, the ranking member and the subcommittee chairman went on to warn the Committee of all the wonderful programs my amendment would gut. Somehow education was going to be decimated; cancer research was going to be stopped cold, perhaps the Republic was not going to fall immediately, but my amendment would in general have a cataclysmic effect.

Now, today we have got a different subcommittee chairman, but we are hearing the same thing. The first thing that is mentioned is Indian health and how we are going to rob some group of a hospital they waited for for a long time. Well, Indian health in this bill is raised 11 percent, giving effect to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, all that raises is 10.6 percent.

Now, my judgment is that somebody is going to find that hospital in the 10-percent increase, which is three times the CPI increase this year and there is plenty of new money in there. You are not going to shipwreck anybody.

Well, if you want to be accused of wielding a chain saw and a meat ax or maybe if you are faint of heart and do not like those weapons and are allergic to poison ivy, we had better retire to the Speaker's lobby during this debate.

On the other hand, if you believe in living up to the budget resolution that you voted for, you might want to listen to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

If you have any respect for more than 100 million American taxpayers, you might even want to consider his amendment and if you have concern for Americans who will suffer from inflation or small businesses which have been crowded out of the credit market or even would-be homeowners who cannot afford a house at today's interest rates, you may even want to vote for the McDade amendment.

What the gentleman is trying to do is not that tough. He is trying to hold discretionary domestic spending to an increase something over 3½ percent.

He is not trying to force cuts on any homeless people. There are no needs tested programs in here. His amendment, just like many of the unsuccessful predecessors that this House has rejected, as it has covered its tracks in voting for the budget resolution over the years, is not a harmful one. It merely increases those things, those increases to 3½ percent.

It is a sad fact that statutes are never raised to or schools name for the people who labor in this House in the name of fiscal sobriety.

If you vote for Joe's amendment, you will be called a meat axer or a chain sawer.

On the other hand, some day somebody will call you a hero.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FRENZEL) there were—ayes 12, noes 20.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 212, noes 181, not voting 40, as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DICKS

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKS: Insert the following new section at the end of the bill:

SEC. 315. No project or activity funded by that budget authority may be reduced by more than 3 percent because of section 314.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a good amendment. We will accept it on this side.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, we are delighted to accept the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the fiscal year 1985 appropriations for the arts and humanities contained in the Interior appropriations bill (H.R. 5973). I commend the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee and Chairman SIDNEY YATES for their work in response to the demonstrated need to increase these levels.

H.R. 5973 calls for $175 million for the National Endowment for the Arts, an 8-percent increase; $145 million for the National Endowment for the Humanities, a 3-percent increase; and $27 million for the Institute of Museum Services, a 35-percent increase.

It is important to point out that the NEA level contained in H.R. 5973 is only $17 million above the fiscal year 1981 level and the NEH level is still $6 million below the level of fiscal year 1981, which was the last year before the Reagan administration's major slashes in these programs.

This is the fourth consecutive year that it has been necessary to fend off these attacks on Federal arts funding. The NEA and NEH Chairmen recommended budget cuts that would seriously impair the programs of their agencies. The requests were accompanied by a reiteration of the administration's stubborn and misguided belief that private sector funding can offset the reductions in Federal funding.

The futility of turning to the private sector to compensate for Federal cutbacks has been well documented over the past several years. Federal arts funding clearly acts as a catalyst, stimulating State, city, private, and other sources of funding. But this effect acts in reverse also, with Federal cutbacks spurring reductions in other funding sources. Moreover, private corporations and foundations are currently overwhelmed with requests from worthy organizations. Many corporations and foundations are now focusing on programs to help the hungry, the homeless, or the unemployed, rather than on donations to the arts.

Reports of substantial increases in private giving to the arts should be viewed with skepticism. First, the reports do not agree on what the increases in private giving have been. The figures range from a 32-percent increase in 1982, reported by the Business Committee for the Arts, Inc., to a mere 6-percent increase in 1982, reported by the American Association of Fundraising Council, which compiles private and Government surveys. A variety of factors, such as individual gifts of private works of art, tend to distort the overall picture of private giving.

Whatever the real increase may be, it has not resolved all of the problems created by the cutbacks in Federal funds. Moreover, private donors usually avoid supporting unusual or controversial efforts. Corporations risk the least and gain the most by contributing to established cultural institutions such as the symphony orchestra, or to projects that are likely to have widespread popular support. We risk choking off the spontaneity and innovation that are the lifeblood of artistic creativity when we depend too heavily on private funding.

I am especially concerned about the overwhelming financial problems facing this Nation's nonprofit professional theatres, many of which are located in my congressional district. Their support from the Federal Government grew by only 1 percent last year, according to the Theatre Communications Group, a national organization that surveys nonprofit professional theatres each year. Its 1983 report indicates that rising operating costs continue to outstrip increased revenues from private sources and box office receipts.

The growing dependency on these two sources does not bode well for the theatre community. Productions are increasingly selected on the basis of popularity and marketability. Rather than developing new plays theatres are running each play for a longer period of time. The number of touring theatre productions has fallen sharply over the past three seasons. Directors are being forced to devote more and more time to fundraising and less to artistic endeavors. Despite these frantic efforts to survive, a growing number of nonprofit theaters have closed down permanently, reversing the growth and expansion that occurred during the 1970's.

Similar problems are afflicting other areas of the arts, including opera companies. Opera is a young field in this country, with many of the existing companies having been founded during the 1970's. As they entered the 1980's, these new companies found their opportunities for stability and growth considerably diminished by the retrenchment in arts funding fostered by the NEA cutbacks, according to Opera America, a national organization that assists opera companies. More than two dozen out of nearly 70 companies had deficits in 1982. Meanwhile, the average total attendance for opera companies dropped by 3.8 percent in the 1981–82 season, possibly as a direct result of increased ticket prices.

Museums, too, are in financial trouble. Although approximately half of them report that they are breaking even, that accomplishment often means fewer resources spent on care of collections or services to the public, according to a recent IMS survey. For museums, a growing dependence on corporate support means that new exhibits and services are planned so as to please future or existing donors.

I am convinced that if we are to keep our cultural life vital and thriving, we must turn to the public sector for an increasing proportion of our support to the arts and humanities. For this reason, I am urging my colleagues to support these increases. I believe that they constitute a wise economic decision, since we have repeatedly seen powerful evidence that the arts create jobs and invigorate business communities. Surveys show that the American public is supportive of increased funding for the arts. Long-term economic stability for arts institutions creates a climate in which creativity can flourish and public participation in the arts can thrive. I believe that this is one of the best investments that we can make in this Nation's future.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the fiscal year 1985 Interior appropriations bill which contains funding for our national cultural programs. I applaud the subcommittee chairman, SIDNEY YATES, for his continued strong support of America's arts and humanities against the administration's proposals to weaken our vital Federal cultural agencies. On behalf of the nearly 200 members of the Congressional Arts Caucus, I would like to express our great appreciation for his efforts.

Mr. Chairman, over the past two decades, support for America's cultural organizations has evolved into a complex partnership of all levels of government, corporation, foundations, and individuals. Each partner's involvement adds a unique and necessary aspect to the overall fiscal foundation of our Nation's museums, libraries, and performing arts institutions. In 1983, private contributions to culture totaled more than $4 billion; State government support was an estimated $300 million; and the Federal Government's share through the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities [NEA and NEH] and the Institute of Museum Services [IMS] was just over $322 million.

Although averaging only $0.73 per person, this Federal portion is a vital part of the entire system. In fact, many of the private contributions were raised through Federal matching programs. Since 1977, for example, when the NEA Challenge Grant Program was launched, $110 million in Federal challenge funds has been matched by more than $800 million in private donations.

Federal funds for the arts and humanities are essential, and the efforts of my colleague from Illinois and his subcommittee have been principally responsible for holding that support at a consistent level in spite of continued attempts by the current administration to reduce it.

The funding specified in H.R. 5973 for our cultural programs—$175 million for NEA, $145 million for NEH, and $27 million for IMS—must be approved to meet some very specific concerns of the arts community. Long-term financial stability continues to elude many of our cultural institutions. According to a national survey published by the Theater Communications Group, theaters must continue to devote substantial amounts of money to fundraising and marketing. According to Opera America, more than 80 percent of America's professional opera companies were forced to raise ticket prices in 1982–83 to meet increased expenses. As budgets became tighter, the total number of orchestra performances declined in 1983, and for the first time in a decade, there was no growth in the total professional orchestral audiences they serve. In addition, after 15 years of dynamic growth, the dance field has entered a no growth period, at a time when national studies indicate a potential audience four times greater than those currently attending.

Efforts to achieve long-term financial stability have caused artistic deficits nationwide—few new works are being performed, while time and money for experimentation has decreased. The funds provided by H.R. 5973 are essential to help cultural organizations nurture American creativity.

These funds will also help support individual artists—another area of concern to the arts community. Dancers—the lowest paid of the performing artists—average $8,000 annually and are often hired for only a portion of a year. Additional Federal support, including the $5 million specified in the bill, will offer many more opportunities for all artists to work and study in their chosen fields.

Finally, as cultural institutions attempt to balance all these concerns, they are often forced to eliminate many specific programs. Those least able to afford access to the arts—the disabled, the elderly, other minorities—are finding that the outreach programs are being eliminated. Museums have had difficulty maintaining educational programs, as well as projects dealing with conservation. Funds in the bill, for example, will allow at least 173 institutions to provide for conservation programs.

Mr. Chairman, the funds provided by H.R. 5973 for America's cultural activities will help our Nation's artists and arts institutions in their quest for long-term financial stability, a climate which nourishes creativity and originality, and broadens the accessibility of the arts to the American people.

I urge my colleagues to approve the bill.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, as a Representative from the State of California and as a member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, I must object to the inclusion of yet another blanket and temporary moratorium on certain offshore lease sales in this bill.

Another moratorium, the fourth in 4 consecutive years, is unwise and unnecessary.

The moratoria contained in the pending bill are unwise because they deprive our country of timely development of much needed domestic energy so that we can continue to reduce our dependence on foreign sources of oil. This development of oil and natural gas on the Outer Continental Shelf can take place without undue risk to the environment. In fact, the OCS Lands Act and other statutes require the Secretary of the Interior to implement an OCS leasing program which balances our goals of energy independence and sound environmental protection.

We cannot afford to become complacent about our energy situation and its relationship to our economy. Last year we had a record merchandise trade deficit of $69.4 billion, of which $53 billion (or 75 percent) represented purchases of foreign oil. While our trade deficit is expected to top $100 billion in 1984, our oil purchases are continuing at the pace of $50 billion annually. For the 4 week period which ended on July 6, 1984, we demanded petroleum and petroleum products at the rate of 15.7 million barrels per day. During the same period, we imported crude oil and petroleum products at the rate of 4.8 million barrels per day, or fully one-third of our total requirements. At an average acquisition price of $29.11 per barrel, the annual cost is slightly more than $50 billion. This is a drain on our economy which we have the means to arrest if only we will permit the offshore leasing and development process to move forward.

The trend lines are indeed disturbing to observe. On the one hand, domestic production will decline in the next several years unless we develop new sources of oil and natural gas. Domestic production has been basically flat for the last decade because of the supplies coming from the North Slope through the trans-Alaska Pipeline. However, this production is expected to peak in the next 5 years and then decline. The offshore leasing process can take up to 10 years, from initial studies through the start of actual production. Therefore, if we are to tap the offshore resource base in the near future to offset declining production elsewhere, we must allow the lease sales to continue as scheduled.

The trend in Congress, however, has been at odds with the trend lines in domestic production. In fiscal year 1982, the Congress placed a 1-year moratorium on four basins in the central and northern California planning area covering 736,000 acres. In the fiscal year 1983 bill, the moratorium was extended to include over 35 million acres of the planning area. The fiscal year 1983 Interior appropriations bill also prohibited leasing in portions of the Midatlantic amounting to 318,000 acres. Finally, the fiscal year 1984 Interior appropriations bill extended the fiscal year 1983 moratoria for central and northern California, added a moratorium for portions of the southern California planning area, included portions of the North Atlantic, and also selected areas in the Eastern Gulf of Mexico. As a result, we went from 736,000 acres under moratorium status in fiscal year 1982 to over 52 million acres off limits in fiscal year 1984. The pending legislation, while it does not continue the Eastern Gulf of Mexico moratorium, largely keeps the same overall acreage under limitation.

The moratorium, which its sponsors annually describe as temporary, seems to have a life of its own without regard for our energy needs or for the current administration of the OCS program. As the Secretary of the Interior, Judge Clark has shown great sensitivity to State concerns and to the interests of other Federal agencies such as the Department of Defense. In addition, California Gov. George Deukmejian has communicated his opposition to a blanket moratorium to the Congress, as have others in and out of government. A tract-by-tract review of leasing areas, with removal of those that are particularly sensitive, is a more rational approach to offshore leasing policy.

Despite the unfounded fears of a few, the alternative to this moratorium is not an indiscriminate and unyielding lease sale schedule. The Interior Department has already stated that no lease sales will occur in the areas covered by the bill in fiscal year 1985. So this moratorium is not only unwise, but unnecessary. However, a continuation of the moratorium for another year gives it a permanent status which robs the country of a steady and long-term leasing program and denies the authorizing committees of the House their role in setting energy policy.

It is my hope and expectation that the conference committee which will eventually meet on this issue will terminate the moratorium and give it the proper burial it so richly deserves. The one-vote margin by which the Appropriations Committee defeated an attempt to delete the moratorium language is an indication that time is running short, and properly so, on this temporary provision of law.

On another matter, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the members of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior for including in this legislation a directive and the resources to implement a methanol vehicle fleet demonstration program. Under the terms of the committee report, this project would be administered in accord with section 105 of H.R. 5048, the Energy Department authorization bill. This section was added to the bill in the Committee on Energy and Commerce through an amendment I offered for myself and other members of the committee.

The Federal Government, through the General Services Administration, already purchases 12,000 to 15,000 vehicles each year. The 1,000 vehicle methanol demonstration fleet would replace vehicles which would otherwise be purchased.

Methanol has the potential for offering our country a means to reduce air pollution and back out large volumes of imported oil. The South Coast Air Quality Management District, the air quality agency in southern California, testified before our committee that the complete substitution of methanol for gasoline and diesel powered cars would bring the Los Angeles basin within the ambient air quality standards of the Clean Air Act.

We need a demonstration fleet to develop more data on tailpipe emissions, fuel efficiency, operating characteristics and other pertinent information.

I am pleased to report that Energy Secretary Donald Paul Hodel has recommended to the President that the executive branch undertake a 5,000 vehicle fleet. While this option is under review, the fleet embodied in the pending appropriations bill is a significant step forward.

Bills to establish a more comprehensive methanol policy are pending before the Committee on Energy and Commerce. In addition, agencies such as the EPA are looking at regulatory action on methanol and the Department of Transportation is considering grant applications for methanol buses.

If we are serious about improving air quality and reducing our dependence on foreign oil, almost half of which is used in transportation, we must carefully examine the methanol option. The vehicle demonstration fleet will give us more of the real world experience we need to make methanol a feasible alternative.

● Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate my very strong support for H.R. 5973, the fiscal year 1985 appropriations bill for the Department of the Interior and related agencies.

At the outset, I want to compliment the distinguished subcommittee chairman, Mr. YATES, and the distinguished ranking member, Mr. MCDADE, for the work they have done, and the outstanding leadership they have exhibited, on this bill. In addition, I want to thank the subcommittee's staff who has done an excellent job of providing information, advice, and assistance to the members of the subcommittee and other Members of the House.

I am a relatively new member of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee. I asked for a seat on the subcommittee bacause I had an interest in some of the programs that I knew were within its jurisdiction, especially those dealing with the use of our publicly held natural resources. I did not fully appreciate, and I continue to be amazed by, the diversity of this subcommittee's responsibilities. From timber sales to energy research, from fish hatcheries to the Smithsonian Institution, from hospitals on Indian reservations to the resettlement of Bikini Atoll in the Pacific, the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee recommends funding for programs as disparate as any which come before this body. I guess that is part of the reason why the subcommittee this year heard testimony from 800 witnesses, and produced a hearings record of some 13,000 pages.

Out of the hearings process and subcommittee's deliberations has come a bill which I believe deserves the support of this House. It is a bill which takes seriously our national responsibility to protect our natural resources by providing funds for the Forest Service, the Fish and Wildlife Service, and the National Park Service. By funding the Smithsonian Institution, the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities and the Institute of Museum Services, the bill insures that the work of the scholars, artists, and craftsmen of past generations will continue to stimulate those of the next generation. In making funds available to insure that our strategic petroleum reserve is filled at a rate of 186,000 barrels a day, that the homes of our poor are weatherized, and that needed research is done on the development of alternative fuels, the bill moves us along the path toward energy independence.

All of these things are not only desirable, they are important to our future as a nation. They are also expensive. I believe, however, that the bill strikes a reasonable balance between what we need and what we can afford. I urge my colleagues to support the subcommittee and to reject any attempts to apply an across-the-board cut to the bill.●

● Mr. REID. Mr. Chairman, earlier today, I cast my vote in favor of the Ratchford amendment to the Conte amendment to H.R. 5973, the Interior Department and related agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985. For some unknown technical reason, the electronic recording device failed to register my vote on roll No. 346. Thank you.●

● Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5973 with some mixed emotions.

First, however, I want to again commend the Interior Appropriations Committee Chairman SIDNEY YATES for his outstanding overall work on this legislation. His understanding and appreciation for the needs of Native Americans is evident in the funding that has been set aside in this bill for Indian programs.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation makes certain that most Indian programs are funded at adequate levels. A number of important programs in my home State of New Mexico were treated generously by the committee. The Southwest Indian Polytechnic Institute is provided $2.9 million for fiscal year 1985 which is $400,000 more than that requested by the administration. Last year, we were successful in thwarting the attempts of the administration to close the only postsecondary institution in the United States specifically designed for native Americans. Their exemplary performance over the last year has convinced the committee to provide additional funding in order to upgrade and expand existing programs.

I strongly commend the committee's decision to provide $9.1 million for the continued construction of the Navajo Indian irrigation project [NIIP]. Although the administration requested no funds for NIIP in fiscal year 1985, without an adequate appropriation, construction of this irrigation project would have come to a complete halt. NIIP is of great importance to the Navajo nation and to the northwestern portion of New Mexico. Upon completion, NIIP will furnish water for the irrigation of 110,638 acres and is vital for the success of the Navajo agricultural product industry. NIIP is half complete, and it would make little sense to give up on such a worthy project at this time.

I also want to express my strong support for the committee's endorsement of forward funding for Indian education programs. As the committee accurately states, this is the only major federally-funded education program that is not forward funded. Forward funding will permit better planning and effective use of every dollar. As it stands now, many schools don't receive their advice of allotment until well into the school year, thereby precluding any rational attempt to plan ahead.

I am, however, disappointed regarding one aspect of the fiscal year 1985 Interior appropriations bill with respect to Public Law 93-638 Indian self-determination grants. Last year, Congress reduced 93-638 grants by roughly 3 percent. However, the BIA office in Albuquerque informed Pueblos in my district that rely heavily on these grants to expect a 25-percent cut. It appears that the funds set aside for self-determination grants in fiscal year 1984 were used to offset ADP expenditures which were exceeding congressional limits. Regrettably, the fiscal year 1985 bill does not allow for an increase to compensate for this huge cut in funding. The Pueblos in my district desperately need 93-638 grants in order to build the internal administrative structure that will enable them to function as independent local governments and effectively compete for 93-638 contracts. I plan to continue working closely with Chairman YATES to assure that these grants are brought back up to acceptable levels. At stake is the future economic development of the small Pueblos in my district.

I am also somewhat disappointed by the committee's decision not to fund Indian preschool programs at this time. I hope the Bureau will follow the report language and assist tribes in locating alternatives sources of funding for pre-K programs.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5973 provides $242 million more than what the Reagan administration requested for Indian programs in fiscal year 1985. Although the President continues to profess his strong support for self-determination among Indian tribes, his words do not match his deed. A number of Indian tribes possess valuable natural resources which, if properly developed, could provide tribes with the funding they need to achieve economic independence. However, the administration has not worked closely enough with the tribes to assure they receive the best return on their mineral resources. In fact, the Bureau of Indian Affairs does not even have adequate staff in this area as the committee report accurately points out.

Furthermore, the administration has recommended a $2 million cut for Indian education programs and funding reductions for a number of important Indian services. While I also support the self-determination efforts of Indian tribes, I have quite a different view than the administration on how we should reach that goal. The Federal Government must assist Indian tribes in their efforts to achieve economic independence. Perhaps more importantly, we cannot neglect our legal and moral responsibility to provide for the health, education and welfare of our native American citizens.

I commend the Appropriations Committee and Chairman YATES for rejecting the administration's proposed cuts and protect the programs that will assist Indian tribes in my district and across that Nation gain economic self-sufficiency. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.●

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Chairman, as we progress in the debate associated with the important issues contained within the Interior Appropriations Act, I believe it is very important for this Congress to pay close attention to the concerns being voiced by constituents and public servants in local government. The decisions we make today will effect the direction of natural resource development and environmental preservation for years to come. As such, every American has a stake in the decisions and a role in the decisionmaking process.

The San Mateo County Board of Supervisors represents the legislative arm of government in the county forming better than 90 percent of California's 11th Congressional District. As a concerned and committed group of citizens, they have demonstrated an admirable determination to address significant issues affecting the quality of life and future conditions for our communities by the San Francisco Bay and Pacific Ocean.

Because of their unique awareness of the issues which can impact San Mateo County, I am delighted to have received a series of resolutions unanimously adopted by the board of supervisors expressing the strongest support for environmentally sound actions involving proposed oil and gas leasing on the Outer Continental Shelf [OCS] along the California coast.

The four resolutions passed by the San Mateo County Board of Supervisors state emphatically the body's strong support for a moratorium on OCS oil and gas leasing in the northern, central, and southern California OCS planning areas, and the board's endorsement of attempts to protect the role of affected States with respect to review of Federal activities under the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972. Specifically:

Resolution 45475 endorses provisions in the fiscal year 1985 Interior Appropriations Act which would preclude funding for the conduct of certain OCS leasing activities along the California coast.

Resolution 44725 endorses H.R. 2059, which would place a moratorium on OCS drilling activities in several areas, including portions of the California coast.

Resolution 43755 endorses H.R. 6365 which would place a moratorium on OCS drilling activities in certain areas along the Pacific coastline of the United States.

Resolution 45881 endorses H.R. 4589 and S. 2324, which would clarify congressional intent with respect to the role of affected States in decisions about Federal activities under the "consistency" provision of the Coastal Zone Management Act.

I believe it is vitally important for Congress to hear the words of local government officials who represent areas which stand to be dramatically impacted by decisions on OCS oil and gas leasing. Clearly, the members of the San Mateo County Board of Supervisors have given serious thought to the widespread and irreversible damage that could be brought to the gorgeous coastline of our county should efforts be made to proceed with oil and gas drilling on the Outer Continental Shelf. The men and women of the board of supervisors have thrown their support behind a long-term moratorium for leasing, and have asked Congress to remember the substantial role that affected States are entitled to play in development strategies. I commend them for their thoughtful and well-reasoned approach, and thank them for working closely with my office to ensure that the voice of the people of San Mateo County will be heard on these issues.

Mr. Chairman, I join the San Mateo County Board of Supervisors in urging my colleagues to fully support a long-term moratorium on oil and gas drilling along the Outer Continental Shelf of California as embodied in the fiscal year 1985 Interior Appropriations Act. In addition, I believe it very important for Congress to guarantee the role of affected States in the decisionmaking process to ensure full representation of public opinion on development plans involving our natural resources.●

● Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Chairman, I strongly endorse this bill before us. It represents good policy and sound fiscal restraint. While there are budget increases contained in this bill, they represent necessary efforts to restore funding to programs gutted over the last 4 years. We must make certain budget increases to ensure proper management of our Nation's natural resources.

While I support this measure and urge its passage, I must register my disappointment that this bill ignores a previous congressional action of historic significance. In March of this year, the Congress successfully overrode the President's veto in passing the Water Resources Research Act, representing only the 90th time in history that such efforts have been successful. Furthermore, it was the first time in history that a freshman Congressman was the author of a bill that became law in this fashion.

But more important than the historic value of this action is the fact that the Water Resource Institutes established under this act are a necessary endeavor that must be continued. The State Mining and Mineral Resources Institutes is also a target for zero funding under this bill. These two programs represent our best assurance for the proper use, management and development of our precious natural resources. These two programs were restructured to ensure greater accountability and increased local cost-sharing.

I do not need to go into a long soliloquy detailing the benefits and necessity of these two programs; the Members of this body are acutely aware of the importance of these programs—in voting to override the President's veto in passing the Water Institutes bill and in suspending the rules to pass the Mining Institutes bill that awareness was demonstrated.

I had considered offering amendments today to restore funding to these two vital programs. However, I have received assurances that funding will be provided for these programs in the Senate. I simply regret that this body fails to recognize its past accomplishments and a good program.

Again, thank you Mr. Chairman. Despite my misgivings in the failure of this body to maintain a consistent policy regarding these two programs, I recognize the good work of my colleague, the chairman of the subcommittee, and I urge passage of this bill.●

● Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues my concern over language contained in the Interior Department appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985 that would result in a reduction of timber sales in our national forests. Language from the Appropriation Committee report, now included in the bill, notes that the Forest Service has incurred losses on its timber sales; for example, revenue from the sales did not cover the Forest Service's cost of preparing for the sale. In some cases, the Forest Service sold timber below fair market value when there was only one bidder for the timber. The Interior appropriations bill prohibits increases in timber sales above previous-year levels in certain national forest areas. Areas would be prohibited from increasing sales if the money collected from those sales is less than the costs incurred for developing timber sales in previous years.

The lack of a sound accounting system will place restrictions on timber sales nationwide. I am concerned that restriction will have an adverse impact on New Mexico's vital timber industry and on timber companies across the Nation. Approximately 3,500 New Mexicans earn their livelihoods from jobs in the timber industry—should they face an uncertain future because the Interior and Agriculture Departments lack a sound system to ensure that timber sales on our public lands are not a losing proposition—I think not.

The Forest Service has suggested in its report to the General Accounting Office that better financial data could improve timber sale planning and decisionmaking as well as help the agency keep Congress better informed. The Interior Appropriations bill sets aside $400,000 for the Forest Service to develop a cost accounting system. My opinion is, if there is a problem let's fix it and dissolve the restrictive timber harvesting language.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to join with me in urging both Interior Secretary James Clark and Agriculture Secretary John R. Block to ensure that a sound Federal cost accounting system is implemented to govern timber harvesting on public lands—before the November election—so we can proceed with timber harvesting on a rational economic basis.●

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

□ 1729

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MURTHA] having assumed the chair, Mr. GEPHARDT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5973) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

□ 1730

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF OHIO

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. In its present form, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MILLER of Ohio moves to recommit the bill H.R. 5973 to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 336, noes 57, not voting 40, as follows:

Mr. RITTER changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 1904, CHILD ABUSE AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1904) to extend and improve the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978, that the House agree to the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. PERKINS, GAYDOS, BIAGGI, SIMON, MILLER of California, MURPHY, CORRADA, WILLIAMS of Montana, ECKART, ERLENBORN, GOODLING, COLEMAN of Missouri, BARTLETT, and MCCAIN.

PERMISSION TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT TOMORROW TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT AND MAKING IN ORDER ON TUESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1984, OR ANY DAY THEREAFTER CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 5712, DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION, 1985

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tomorrow, August 3, 1984, to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 5712) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes, and that it shall be in order on Tuesday, August 7, 1984, or any day thereafter, to consider the conference report and amendments in disagreement and motions to dispose of said amendments on H.R. 5712, the provisions of section 303(a) of Public Law 93-344 and clause 2 of rule XXVIII to the contrary notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

REQUEST FOR PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT, MONDAY, AUGUST 6, 1984, TO FILE REPORT ON H.R. 5640, SUPERFUND LEGISLATION

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means have until midnight Monday, August 6, to file its report to accompany the bill, H.R. 5640—the Superfund legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

TRIBUTE TO ARNOLD LIGON

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I speak today in tribute to and in memory of a longtime friend of mine, Arnold Ligon, who died on July 30, at the age of 66 at the Regional Medical Center in Madisonville, KY.

Arnold Ligon will be remembered in western Kentucky for his business successes in the trucking industry and his devotion to religious causes, particularly church-related television. He was described by Madisonville journalist Susan Simmons in an obituary appearing in the Madisonville Messenger on July 31 as "a go-getter in the business world who achieved prosperity and success in the material world as well as a close communion with his spiritual world." One of Arnold Ligon's outstanding achievements was the construction of a Christian television station in western Kentucky, a project on which he spent hundreds of thousands of dollars and countless hours of his time.

I am proud to have represented this outstanding businessman and philanthropist as his Congressman in the U.S. House of Representatives, and I am proud to have called Arnold Ligon my friend.

Survivors include his lovely wife, Mrs. Carol Ligon, of Madisonville; three sons, Herb Ligon, Jr., Tommy G. Ligon, and James H. Ligon; one daughter, Deborah Ligon; and a sister, Mrs. Bonnie Workman, all of Madisonville; and six grandchildren.

Funeral services for Arnold Ligon are being held today at Life Center, his home church in Madisonville, KY.

I extend my sympathy to the survivors and friends of this outstanding Kentuckian who was an inspiration to those of us who knew and loved him.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 534 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3987.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3987) to improve the preservation and management of Federal records, and for other purposes, with Mr. GONZALES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Monday, July 30, 1984, all time for general debate had expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the reported bill shall be considered by titles as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each title shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Archives and Records Administration Act of 1984".

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, an editorial in Tuesday's Washington Post, which I sent to every Member, tell why it is so important for us to establish the National Archives as an independent agency, accountable and responsible for its own operations. That editorial described the magnificent exhibit at the main Archives building to commemorate the Archives' 50th anniversary and went on to say:

As rich as the exhibit is, it contains only the tiniest portion of the Archives' wealth—a wealth that has threatened to overwhelm the Archives since it was created. From the start, the Archives lacked the resources needed to catch up with more than 100 years of neglected records. After it was buried within GSA, the Government's housekeeping agency, it found it even harder to make its case for the specialized staff and resources that record preservation requires. Without more control over its own affairs, the Archives will be unable to keep up with the burgeoning records of modern Government, much less to stop the deterioration of old treasures.

Mr. Chairman, to establish the Archives as an independent agency, armed with sufficient authority and resources to do its job effectively, will demonstrate to our constituents and their children how much we value the documentary history of our Nation and how important it is that that history be preserved for generations to come. H.R. 3987 will accomplish that purpose, and I hope that it will achieve favorable consideration today.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLINGER. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to echo the gentleman's remarks about the necessity for this very important bill which would restore independence to the Archives on its 50th anniversary, which I think is a very appropriate time to do that.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3987 comes before us at the right time and with some remarkable history. The Senate, with administration support, passed companion legislation by unanimous consent. Both the chairman of the Government Operations Committee and the ranking Republican member favor it. In hearings before our committee this spring, all witnesses from private sector testified in favor of the bill. The present and both former Archivists of the United States have urged its passage. The Congressional Budget Office finds that the passage of the bill would involve a net offset and would not create additional administrative costs. The archival, historical, library, and genealogical communites strongly support H.R. 3987.

The purpose of the bill is to restore the independence of the National Archives and Records Service separating it from the General Services Administration. As my colleagues know, it was exactly 50 years ago that the Congress created the National Archives and created it as an independent agency. It is appropriate that in this year in which the Archives celebrates its golden anniversary we return it to that independent status.

Let met quickly review the background to the independence question. After the Second World War President Truman appointed former President Hoover to head a commission to consider ways to streamline Federal functions. That commission on organization of the executive branch of the Government amalgamated the record-keeping functions of the then-independent National Archives with the newly created housekeeping agency, the General Services Administration. Then, as now, this was a misunderstanding of the mission of the National Archives.

Since that time, the National Archives continues to be misallied with the General Services Administration. As we learned during our committee's hearings, the basic missions of the two are incompatible, and the Archives' role as a cultural organization has been diminished during its years in GSA. For more than three decades historians and Archivists have criticized the placement of the Archives, and it is now abundantly clear to every observer that the Archives must be separated from GSA.

Let me summarize the reasons for separation:

The National Archives is a cultural and educational organization serving the Government, scholars, and the public at large. The General Services Administration is an administrative conglomerate providing housekeeping services to other Government agencies.

The records of the Nation must be managed by the best professional Archivists in the land, and managed in accordance with established archival principles.

The administrators of GSA—and there have been eight in the last 12 years—have had neither the time, inclination, nor background to make sound archival policy. Frankly, separation would benefit GSA as well as the Archives by focusing its mission more precisely.

The funding for the National Archives should be judged by the standards of a cultural and research organization. In the past, GSA has judged Archives funding only on the principles of profit and loss. This is appropriate to other parts of GSA, but totally unrealistic when applied to the preservation of our documentary heritage.

Some critics of this legislation have questioned whether this is the right time for passage. They argue that we have not considered all sides of the issue. Let me point out that this is the second consecutive Congress in which this legislation has been introduced: That oversight hearings for many years have raised the issue of the appropriateness of NARS placed within GSA; that we have 34 years of the record to look at. If anything, we have moved too slowly, not too quickly.

These critics also suggest that the problems of the Archives could be solved by leaving it within GSA but giving it greater autonomy. In fact, they propose a collegial body for a management structure. Now I ask the Members of the House, how many of you feel a committee could effectively direct any agency, much less one charged with protecting America's heritage of documents? What the Archives needs is clear authority over its professional program, not an authority divided among GSA, an executive director, and a management committee.

This is not the time to try out yet one further experiment of management upon the National Archives. This is the time to complete the passage of the legislation to restore the independent status of the Archives. This bill neither strips the Archives of essential functions nor does it add unrelated authorities to the Archives. It maintains the archival programs as a coherent whole. It gives the Archives control of its essential support services. That's all it does, but that is enough.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues, let us rectify the mistake we make in 1949. Let us remove this agency that guards our fundamental historic documents from an umbrella agency largely concerned with materialistic ends. Let us restore the independent status of the National Archives as a hallmark of the dignity we ascribe to the protection and the preservation of our Nation's documentary heritage.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I thank Mr. CLINGER for his dedication to the preservation of our national records. He has long been a historian, and we appreciate his contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate title I.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The text of H.R. 3987, following section 1, is as follows:

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INDEPENDENT NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 101. Section 2102 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2102. Establishment

"There shall be an independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government to be known as the National Archives and Records Administration. The Administration shall be administered under the supervision and direction of the Archivist.".

ORGANIZATION AND GENERAL AUTHORITY

SEC. 102. (a) Chapter 21 of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating sections 2103 through 2114 as sections 2107 through 2118, respectively; and

(2) by inserting after section 2102 the following new sections:

"§ 2103. Officers

"(a) The Archivist of the United States shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Archivist shall be appointed without regard to political affiliations and solely on the basis of the professional qualifications required to perform the duties and responsibilities of the office of Archivist. The Archivist may be removed from office by the President. The President shall communicate the reasons for any such removal to each House of the Congress.

"(b) The Archivist shall be compensated at the rate provided for level III of the Executive Schedule under section 5314 of title 5.

"(c) There shall be in the Administration a Deputy Archivist of the United States, who shall be appointed by and who shall serve at the pleasure of the Archivist. The Deputy Archivist shall be established as a career reserved position in the Senior Executive Service within the meaning of section 3132(a)(8) of title 5. The Deputy Archivist shall perform such functions as the Archivist shall designate. During any absence or disability of the Archivist, the Deputy Archivist shall act as Archivist. In the event of a vacancy in the office of the Archivist, the Deputy Archivist shall act as Archivist until an Archivist is appointed under subsection (a).

"§ 2104. Administrative provisions

"(a) The Archivist shall prescribe such policies, standards, criteria, procedures, rules, and regulations as the Archivist finds necessary or appropriate to carry out the functions of the Administration. The head of each Federal agency shall issue such orders and directives as may be necessary to conform the activities of the agency with the policies, standards, criteria, procedures, rules, and regulations prescribed by the Archivist.

"(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, the Archivist may delegate functions to designated officers and employees of the Administration, and may authorize such successive redelegations of such functions as the Archivist may deem to be necessary or appropriate. A delegation of functions by the Archivist shall not relieve the Archivist of responsibility for the administration of such functions.

"(c) The Archivist is authorized to establish, maintain, alter, or discontinue such regional, local, or other field offices as the Archivist finds necessary or appropriate to perform the functions of the Archivist or the Administration.

"(d) The Archivist may establish advisory committees to advise him with respect to any function of the Archivist or the Administration. Members of any such committee shall serve without compensation but shall be entitled to transportation expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence in accordance with section 5703 of title 5.

"(e) The Archivist shall advise and consult with interested Federal agencies with a view to obtaining their advice and assistance in carrying out the purposes of this chapter.

"(f) Each Federal agency is required to furnish to the Archivist, upon request, any information or other data which the Archivist finds necessary to carry out the duties of the Archivist.

"(g) If authorized by the Archivist, officers and employees of the Administration having investigatory functions are empowered, while engaged in the performance of their duties in conducting investigations, to administer oaths.

"§ 2105. Personnel and services

"(a) The Archivist is authorized to select, appoint, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, pursuant to part III of title 5, as are necessary to perform the functions of the Archivist and the Administration.

"(b) The Archivist is authorized to obtain the services of experts and consultants under section 3109 of title 5.

TRANSFERS

SEC. 103. (a) The National Archives and Records Service of the General Services Administration is transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration.

(b)(1) All functions which were assigned to the Administrator of General Services by section 6 of Executive Order No. 10530 of May 11, 1954 (19 Fed. Reg. 2709; relating to documents and the Administrative Committee of the Federal Register), and by Executive Order No. 11440 of December 11, 1968 (33 Fed. Reg. 18475; relating to supplemental use of Federal exhibits and displays), shall be exercised by the Archivist of the United States.

(2) All functions pertaining to the maintenance, operation, and protection of a Presidential archival depository which were assigned to the Administrator of General Services by the Act of September 6, 1965 (Public Law 89-169, 79 Stat. 648), relating to the Lyndon Baines Johnson Presidential Archival Depository, and by the Act of August 27, 1966 (Public Law 89-547, 80 Stat. 370) and the Act of May 26, 1977 (Public Law 95-34, 91 Stat. 174), relating to the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Library, shall be exercised by the Archivist of the United States.

(3) All functions which were assigned to the Administrator of General Services by the sections 5.1(b) and 5.2(a) of Executive Order No. 12356 of April 2, 1982 (relating to national security information and the Information Security Oversight Office), shall be exercised by the Archivist of the United States.

(c) Prior to the appointment and confirmation of an individual to serve as Archivist of the United States under section 2103 of title 44, United States Code, the individual holding the office of Archivist of the United States on the day before the effective date of this Act may serve as Archivist under such section, and while so serving shall be compensated at the rate provided under subsection (b) of such section.

TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL

SEC. 104. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the personnel employed in connection with, and the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available to or to be made available in connection with the functions and agencies transferred by this Act or the amendments made by this Act, subject to section 1531 of title 31, United States Code, are transferred to the Archivist for appropriate allocation. A percentage of the funds and associated positions in the General Management and Administration appropriation for the General Services Administration, proportionate to the percentage of National Archives and Records Service employees in the General Services Administration, is transferred to the Archivist for appropriate allocation. Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this subsection shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

(b) The transfer pursuant to this title of full-time personnel (except special Government employees) and part-time personnel holding permanent positions shall not cause any such employees to be separated or reduced in grade or compensation for one year after such transfer or after the effective date of this Act, whichever is later.

SAVINGS PROVISIONS

SEC. 105. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, grants, contracts, agreements, permits, licenses, privileges, and other actions which have been issued, granted, made, undertaken, or entered into in the performance of any function transferred by this Act or the amendments made by this Act shall continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, superseded, set aside, or revoked in accordance with law by any authorized official, a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(b)(1) The transfer of functions by this Act and by the amendments made by this Act shall not affect any proceedings, including notices of proposed rulemaking, or any application for any license, permit, certificate, or financial assistance pending on the effective date of this Act before the General Services Administration; but such proceedings and applications, to the extent that they relate to the functions so transferred, shall be continued. Orders shall be issued in such proceedings, appeals shall be taken therefrom, and payments shall be made pursuant to such orders, as if this Act had not been enacted; and orders issued in any such proceedings shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or revoked by the Archivist, by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to prohibit the discontinuance or modification of any such proceeding under the same terms and conditions and to the same extent that such proceeding could have been discontinued or modified if this Act had not been enacted.

(2) The Archivist is authorized to promulgate regulations providing for the orderly transfer of proceedings continued under paragraph (1) from the General Services Administration to the Administration.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (e)—

(1) the provisions of this Act and of the amendments made by this Act shall not affect actions commenced prior to the effective date of this Act, and

(2) in all such actions, proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered in the same manner and effect as if this Act had not been enacted.

(d) No action or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any officer of the United States acting in his or her official capacity shall abate by reason of any transfer of functions by this Act or by an amendment made by this Act. No cause of action by or against the General Services Administration or by or against any officer thereof in the official capacity of such officer shall abate by reason of any such transfer of functions.

(e) If, before the date on which this Act takes effect, the General Services Administration or any officer thereof in the official capacity of such officer, is a party to an action, and under this Act any function in connection with such action is transferred to the Archivist or any other official of the Administration, then such action shall be continued with the Archivist or other appropriate official of the Administration substituted or added as a party.

(f) Orders and actions of the Archivist in the exercise of functions transferred by this Act or by amendments made by this Act shall be subject to judicial review to the same extent and in the same manner as if such orders and actions had been by the individual holding the office of Archivist of the United States on the day before the effective date of this Act or the Administrator of General Services in the exercise of such functions immediately preceding their transfer. Any statutory requirements relating to notice, hearings, action upon the record, or administrative review that apply to any function transferred by this Act or by any amendment made by this Act shall apply to the exercise of such function by the Archivist.

REFERENCE

SEC. 106. With respect to any functions transferred by this Act or by an amendment made by this Act and exercised after the effective date of this Act, reference in any other Federal law to the office of the Archivist of the United States as in existence on the date before the effective date of this Act, or the National Archives and Records Service of the General Services Administration, or any office or officer thereof, shall be deemed to refer to the Archivist or the Administration.

TITLE II—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

COPYING AND AUTHENTICATING CHARGES

SEC. 201. Section 2116(c) of title 44, United States Code (as redesignated by section 102(a)), is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Archivist may charge a fee set to recover the costs for making or authenticating copies or reproductions of materials transferred to his custody. Such fee shall be fixed by the Archivist at a level which will recover, so far as practicable, all elements of such costs, and may, in the Archivist's discretion, include increments for the estimated replacement cost of equipment. Such fees shall be paid into, administered, and expended as a part of the National Archives Trust Fund. The Archivist may not charge for making or authenticating copies or reproductions of materials for official use by the United States Government unless appropriations available to the Archivist for this purpose are insufficient to cover the cost of performing the work.".

NATIONAL ARCHIVES TRUST FUND BOARD

SEC. 202. (a) Chapter 23 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out sections 2302 through 2305 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§ 2302. Authority of the Board; seal; services; annual report; bylaws; rules; regulations

"In carrying out the purposes of this chapter, the Board—

"(1) may adopt an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed;

"(2) may utilize on a reimbursable basis the services and personnel of the National Archives and Records Administration necessary (as determined by the Archivist) to assist the Board in the administration of the trust fund, and in the preparation and publication of special works and collections of sources and preparation, duplication, editing, and release of historical photographic materials and sound recordings, and may utilize on a reimbursable basis the services and personnel of other Federal agencies for such purposes;

"(3) shall submit to the Congress an annual report, by account, of the moneys, securities, and other personal property received and held by it, and of its operations, which shall include a listing of the purposes for which funds are transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration for expenditure and to other Federal agencies;

"(4) may adopt bylaws, rules, and regulations necessary for the administration of its functions under this chapter; and

"(5) may, subject to the laws and regulations governing appointments in the competitive service, appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out its functions.

"§ 2303. Powers and obligations of the Board; liability of members

"Except as otherwise provided by this chapter, the Board shall have all the usual powers and obligations of a trustee with respect to property and funds administered by it, but the members of the Board are not personally liable, except for malfeasance.

"§ 2304. Compensation of members; availability of trust funds for expenses of the Board

"Compensation may not be paid to the members of the Board for their services as members. Costs incurred by the Board in carrying out its duties under this chapter, including the obligations necessarily incurred by the members of the Board in the performance of their duties, shall be paid by the Archivist of the United States from trust funds available to the Board for this purpose. The Board, by resolution, may authorize the transfer of funds (including the principal or interest of a gift or bequest) to the National Archives and Records Administration to be expended on an archival or records activity approved by the Board or to accomplish the purpose of a gift or bequest.

"§ 2305. Acceptance of gifts

"The Board may solicit and accept gifts or bequests of money, securities, or other personal property, for the benefit of or in connection with the national archival and records activities administered by the National Archives and Records Administration. Moneys that are for deposit into the trust fund shall be deposited within 10 working days of the receipt thereof.".

(b) Section 2307 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2307. Trust fund account; disbursements; sales of publications and releases

"The income from trust funds held by the Board and the proceeds from the sale of securities and other personal property, as and when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States in a trust fund account to be known as the National Archives Trust Fund, subject to disbursement on the basis of certified vouchers of the Archivist of the United States (or his designee) for activities approved by the Board and in the interest of the national archival and records activities administered by the National Archives and Records Administration, including but not restricted to the preparation and publication of special works, and collections of sources and the preparation, duplication, editing, and release of historical photographic materials and sound recordings. The Archivist may sell publications and releases authorized by this section and paid for out of the income derived from trust funds at a price which will cover their cost, plus 10 percent, and moneys received from these sales shall be paid into, administered, and expended as part of the National Archives Trust Fund.".

(c) The table of sections for chapter 23 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out "employees;" in the item pertaining to section 2302 and inserting in lieu thereof "services; annual report;".

AUTHORITY TO LITIGATE

SEC. 203. (a) Section 2905(a) of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the head of the agency fails to initiate an action for such recovery or other redress within a reasonable period of time after being notified of any such unlawful action, the Archivist of the United States shall, through the Attorney General, initiate such an action; and the Archivist shall report the circumstances of any such failure by the head of the agency, or of any refusal of the Attorney General to initiate such an action, to the appropriate committees of the Congress.".

(b) Section 3106 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the head of the agency fails to initiate an action for such recovery or other redress within a reasonable period of time after being notified of any such unlawful action, the Archivist of the United States shall, through the Attorney General, initiate such an action; and the Archivist shall report the circumstances of any such failure by the head of the agency, or of any refusal of the Attorney General to initiate such an action, to the appropriate committees of the Congress.".

INSPECTION OF RECORDS

SEC. 204. Section 3301 of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "As used in this chapter,";

(2) by inserting ", as determined by the Archivist of the United States," after "public business and preserved or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Archivist of the United States shall, by regulation, establish detailed criteria under which material shall be examined to determine if it is a record as defined under subsection (a) and such regulation. The Archivist may have access, to determine compliance with such subsection and such regulations, to any material made or received by an agency of the United States Government.".

PUBLIC NOTICE

SEC. 205. Section 3303a(a) of title 44, United States Code, is amended by inserting ", after publication of notice in the Federal Register and an opportunity for interested persons to submit comment thereon" immediately after "may" in the second sentence thereof.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. BROOKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I have a number of technical amendments at the desk which I offer, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

These was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Technical amendments offered by Mr. BROOKS: Page 6, line 5, strike out "The Archivist" and insert in lieu thereof "Notwithstanding section 1342 of title 31, United States Code, the Archivist".

Page 7, line 5, strike out "2901(13)" and insert in lieu thereof "2901(14)".

Page 18, after line 14, insert the following new subparagraph (and redesignate the succeeding subparagraphs accordingly):

(B) by inserting "and Records" after "Historical Publications" in the fourth sentence of such subsection;

Page 18, line 20, strike out "'make available to the public'" and insert in lieu thereof "'transmit to the President and the Congress'".

Page 29, strike out lines 8 throught 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(g) Section 552a of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (b)(6) and inserting in lieu therof the following:

"(6) to the National Archives and Records Administration as a record which has sufficient historical or other value to warrant its continued preservation by the United States Government, or for evaluation by the Archivist of the United States or the designee of the Archivist to determine whether the record has such value;"; and

(2) by striking out "Administrator of General Services" each place it appears in subsection (1)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "Archivist of the United States".

Page 30, strike out lines 8 through 10.

Page 33, line 1, insert after "duties" the following: "and the compensation of persons employed by the Board".

Page 36, line 9, strike out the close quotation marks and following period and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Access to such material, and examination thereof, by the Archivist shall be in compliance with all other Federal laws and be subject to the sanctions provided therein.".

At the end of the bill add the following new title:

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 301. The provisions of this Act (including the amendments made by this Act) shall be effective on April 1, 1985.

SPENDING AUTHORITY

SEC. 302. Any new spending authority (within the meaning of section 401 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) which is provided under this Act shall be effective for any fiscal year only to the extent or in such amounts as provided in appropriations Acts.

Mr. BROOKS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, The technical amendments which I am offering make the following changes to H.R. 3987, as reported:

First, add a reference to section 1342 of title 31 in the portion of the bill dealing with use of volunteers by the archivist;

Second, correct a reference to section 2901(14);

Third, update a reference to the National Historical Publications and Record Commission;

Fourth, provide that the annual report of the National Historical Publications and Records Commission shall be transmitted to the President and the Congress rather than simply being made available to the public as was provided for in the bill as reported;

Fifth, make a conforming change to the Privacy Act;

Sixth, strike out the current effective date provision in title I, to be replaced by an effective date for the entire bill of April 1, 1985, in title III.

The technical amendments in title II will grant the National Archives Trust Fund Board the authority to compensate trust fund employees from the trust fund, and will make clear that the Archivist's access and examination of agency files in making records determinations shall be in compliance with all other Federal laws and will be subject to the sanctions that are provided in those laws.

A new title III also is added to the bill to provide an effective date for the act of April 1, 1985, and to specify that any new spending authority within the meaning of section 401 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 provided under this act shall be effective for any fiscal year only to the extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriations acts. The latter provision will cure a technical conflict with the Budget Act.

Mr. Chairman, again, these are technical amendments, and I think that there is no objection to them by the minority.

I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON].

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I certainly agree with committee chairman, these are technical amendments, and they should be adopted.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for adoption of the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the technical amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to this title or section?

If not, are there amendments to any other part of the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BROOKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROOKS: Page 9, strike out lines 1 through 6.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, as reported out of the Committee on Government Operations, section 104 of H.R. 3987 would transfer the Information Security Oversight Office from GSA to the Independent Archives.

ISOO is responsible for overseeing the information security activities of Federal agencies. Both ISOO and GSA contend that the effectiveness of ISOO in administering this program is enhanced by its being housed in an impartial agency such as GSA. Both the Office and GSA have urged that ISOO be retained within GSA, and this amendment would accomplish that purpose.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a good amendment. It does delete the transfer. I urge support for the amendment.

This amendment would keep the Information Security Oversight Office, or ISOO, within the General Services Administration.

ISOO oversees the activities of all agencies dealing with classified information, to ensure compliance with the Executive order on the subject. It has been successful in part because it is housed in an agency which is perceived by all agencies to be impartial between the competing demands of protection and disclosure of Government data.

The bill as reported would move ISOO to the new National Archives and Records Administration. Because the Archives is generally a prodisclosure agency, some concern has been raised that the transfer would lessen ISOO's effectiveness in dealing with other agencies.

The amendment deletes the transfer, and is therefore responsive to that concern. I am pleased to support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BROOKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROOKS: Page 27, after line 23, insert the following new paragraph:

(4) Section 104 of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "Administrator" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Archivist"; and

(B) by striking out subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) The regulations proposed by the Archivist in the report required by subsection (a) shall not take effect until the expiration of 60 legislative days after the date of the submission of such regulations to each House of the Congress. For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'legislative days' does not include any day on which both Houses of the Congress are not in session.".

Mr. BROOKS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would make several conforming changes and one slightly more substantive change to the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act. That act, which provided for the safekeeping of the Nixon tapes, contained a provision requiring the Administrator of GSA to submit to the Congress proposed regulations regarding public access to the recordings. This provision contained a legislative veto requirement. In order to avoid any possible conflict between this requirement and the Supreme Court's Chadha legislative veto decision, this amendment would change the procedure to provide that the regulations would not take effect until the expiration of 60 legislative days after they were submitted. Changing the requirement to a "report and wait" provision will ensure effective congressional oversight while avoiding a possible constitutional problem.

□ 1800

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HORTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The law governing the Presidential papers of President Nixon requires the issuance of regulations to provide public access to the materials. The law permits either House of Congress to veto the regulations.

Because the Supreme Court, in its decision entitled Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha [103 S.Ct. 2764 (1983)], has declared the legislative veto to be unconstitutional, the veto provision in this statute is now invalid.

The amendment preserves the right of Congress to review the regulations, even in the absence of a veto, by stipulating that the regulations could not take effect for 60 legislative days after they are submitted to the Congress.

I believe that this is a reasonable protection of congressional rights within the constitutional provisions as declared by the Supreme Court and I support the amendment and urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Are there any further amendments?

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise for the purpose of having a colloquy with the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, since the enactment of 26 U.S.C. 6103 in the Tax Reform Act of 1976, the Congress has consistently reflected the public's concern that tax returns and tax return information are confidential. Disclosure of this information is expressly prohibited except in specific situations delineated in section 6103.

The Committee on Ways and Means, on which I serve, is concerned that certain provisions of H.R. 3987 might be misconstrued as indicating changed congressional intent regarding the confidentiality of tax records. We understand that basically H.R. 3987 is a reorganization bill which is not intended to increase or diminish the current authorities of the Archivist now vested in the Administrator of the General Services Administration [GSA]. However, so that there is no misunderstanding, we believe that congressional intent with respect to tax records should be clearly reaffirmed and that tax returns and return information may not be disclosed except as authorized by section 6103.

The Archivist has a mandate to collect and preserve valuable documentary history of our country, an important and often difficult job. In certain cases this may include tax records. On the other hand, Congress, through section 6103, has balanced this archival need with the high expectations of privacy Americans have for their tax records.

In the mid-1970's, Congress took a number of actions with regard to the privacy of U.S. citizens which culminated in the Privacy Act of 1974. Subsequent review concerning the disclosure of tax information by the Privacy Protection Study Commission concluded that there was a need for a Federal statute more stringent than either the then existing tax disclosure law or the Privacy Act. Accordingly, section 6103 was enacted in the 1976 Tax Act.

Thus, so that the legislative history is clear, I would ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Government Operations whether our understanding that H.R. 3987 is not intended to change existing requirements with respect to tax records covered by section 6103 of the Internal Revenue Code is correct?

Mr. BROOKS. If the gentleman will yield, I would say to my distinguished friend that as I stated Monday during general debate on H.R. 3987, the bill as reported by the committee makes no amendment to current law regarding the treatment of tax returns and tax return information for archival purposes. It is not the intent of the committee to change the status quo of the law regarding tax records in any manner.

I also want to point out that we just adopted an amendment which makes clear that the Archivist's access and examination of agency files in order to make determination of what constitutes a record "shall be in compliance with all other Federal laws and be subject to the sanctions provided therein." This amendment, I believe, ensures the conformity of the Archivist's actions in this regard to other statutes already on the books.

31-059 O-87-21 (Pt. 16)

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the Committee chairman for his response.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KINDNESS

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. KINDNESS: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS SERVICE

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 101. Section 2102 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2102. Establishment

"There shall be an agency within the General Services Administration to be known as the National Archives and Records Service. The Service shall be administered under the supervision and direction of the Archivist.".

ORGANIZATION AND GENERAL AUTHORITY

SEC. 102. (a) Chapter 21 of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating sections 2103 through 2114 as sections 2107 through 2118, respectively; and

(2) by inserting after section 2102 the following new sections:

"§ 2103. Officers

"(a) The Archivist of the United States shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Archivist may be removed from office by the President. The President shall communicate the reasons for any such removal to each House of the Congress.

"(b) The Archivist shall be compensated at the rate provided for level III of the Executive Schedule under section 5314 of title 5.

"(c) There shall be in the Service a Deputy Archivist of the United States, who shall appointed by and who shall serve at the pleasure of the Archivist. The Deputy Archivist shall be established as a career reserved position in the Senior Executive Service within the meaning of section 3132(a)(8) of title 5. The Deputy Archivist shall perform such functions as the Archivist shall designate. During any absence or disability of the Archivist. In the event of a vacancy in the office of the Archivist, the Deputy Archivist shall act as Archivist until an Archivist is appointed under subsection (a).

"§ 2104. Administrative provisions

"(a) The Archivist shall prescribe such policies, standards, criteria, procedures, rules, and regulations as the Archivist finds necessary or appropriate to carry out the functions of the Service. The head of each Federal agency shall issue such orders and directives as may be necessary to conform the activities of the agency with the policies, standards, criteria, procedures, rules, and regulations prescribed by the Archivist.

"(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, the Archivist may delegate functions to designated officers and employees of the Service, and may authorize such successive redelegations of such functions as the Archivist may deem to be necessary or appropriate. A delegation of functions by the Archivist shall not relieve the Archivist of responsibility for administration of such functions.

"(c) The Archivist is authorized to establish, maintain, alter, or discontinue such regional, local, or other field offices as the Archivist finds necessary or appropriate to perform the functions of the Archivist or the Service.

"(d) The Archivist may establish advisory committees to advise him with respect to any function of the Archivist or the Service. Members of any such committee shall serve without compensation but shall be entitled to transportation expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence in accordance with section 5703 of title 5.

"(e) The Archivist shall advise and consult with interested Federal agencies with a view to obtaining their advice and assistance in carrying out the purposes of this chapter.

"(f) If authorized by the Archivist, officers and employees of the Administration having investigatory functions are empowered, while engaged in the performance of their duties in conducting investigations, to administer oaths.

"(g) In each annual appropriation request, the Administrator shall identify the portion thereof intended for the support of the Service and include a statement by the Archivist (1) showing the amount requested by the Service in its budgetary presentation to the Administrator and (2) an assessment of the budgetary needs of the Service.

"§ 2105. Personnel and services

"(a) The Archivist is authorized to select, appoint, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, pursuant to part III of title 5, as are necessary to perform the functions of the Archivist and the Service.

"(b) The Archivist is authorized to obtain the services of experts and consultants under section 3109 of title 5.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 973 of title 10 or any other provision of law, the Archivist, in carrying out the functions of the Archivist or the Service, is authorized to utilize in the Service the services of officials, officers, and other personnel in other Federal agencies, including personnel of the armed services, with the consent of the head of the agency concerned.

"(d) Notwithstanding section 1342 of title 31, United States Code, the Archivist is authorized to accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services.

"§ 2106. Reports to Congress

"The Archivist shall submit to the Congress, in January of each year and at such other times as the Archivist finds appropriate, a report concerning the administration of functions of the Archivist and the Service.".

(b) Section 2101 of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by designating the two indented paragraphs as paragraphs (1) and (2), respectively;

(2) by striking out "sections 2103-2113 of this title" in the matter preceding the first such paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "this chapter";

(3) by striking out the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) 'Archivist' means the Archivist of the United States appointed under section 2103;

"(4) 'Service' means the National Archives and Records Service of the General Services Administration established under section 2102; and

"(5) 'Federal agency', notwithstanding section 2901(14), means any executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government-controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government (including the Executive Office of the President), any independent regulatory agency, or any establishment in the legislative or judicial branch of the Government (except the Senate and the House of Representatives).".

(c)(1) The table of sections for chapter 21 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 21—NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS SERVICE

"Sec.
"2101. Definitions.
"2102. Establishment.
"2103. Officers.
"2104. Administrative provisions.

"2117. Limitation on liability.
"2118. Records of Congress.".

(2) The item relating to chapter 21 in the table of chapters for title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"21. National Archives and Records Service..... 2101".

TRANSFERS

SEC. 103. (a)(1) All functions which were assigned to the Administrator of General Services by section 6 of Executive Order No. 10530 of May 11, 1954 (19 Fed. Reg. 2709; relating to documents and the Administrative Committee of the Federal Register), and by Executive Order No. 11440 of December 11, 1968 (33 Fed. Reg. 18475; relating to supplemental use of Federal exhibits and displays), shall be exercised by the Archivist of the United States.

(2) All functions pertaining to the maintenance, operation, and protection of a Presidential archival depository which were assigned to the Administrator of General Services by the Act of September 6, 1965 (Public Law 89-169, 79 Stat. 648), relating to the Lyndon Baines Johnson Presidential Archival Depository, and by the Act of August 27, 1966 (Public Law 89-547, 80 Stat. 370) and the Act of May 26, 1977 (Public Law 95-34, 91 Stat. 174), relating to the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Library, shall be exercised by the Archivist of the United States.

(b) Prior to the appointment and confirmation of an individual to serve as Archivist of the United States under section 2103 of title 44, United States Code, the individual holding the office of Archivist of the United States on the day before the effective date of this Act may serve as Archivist under such section, and while so serving shall be compensated at the rate provided under subsection (b) of such section.

SAVINGS PROVISIONS

SEC. 104. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, grants, contracts, agreements, permits, licenses, privileges, and other actions which have been issued, granted, made, undertaken, or entered into in the performance of any function transferred by this Act or the amendments made by this Act shall continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, superseded, set aside, or revoked in accordance with law by any authorized official, a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(b)(1) The transfer of functions by this Act and by the amendments made by this Act shall not affect any proceedings, including notices of proposed rulemaking, or any application for any license, permit, certificate, or financial assistance pending on the effective date of this Act before the General Services Administration; but such proceedings and applications, to the extent that they relate to the functions so transferred, shall be continued. Orders shall be issued in such proceedings, appeals shall be taken therefrom, and payments shall be made pursuant to such orders, as if this Act had not been enacted; and orders issued in any such proceedings shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or revoked by the Archivist, by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to prohibit the discontinuance or modification of any such proceeding under the same terms and conditions and to the same extent that such proceeding could have been discontinued or modified if this Act had not been enacted.

(2) The Archivist is authorized to promulgate regulations providing for the orderly transfer of proceedings continued under paragraph (1) from the General Services Administration to the Service.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (e)—

(1) the provisions of this Act and of the amendments made by this Act shall not affect actions commenced prior to the effective date of this Act, and

(2) in all such actions, proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered in the same manner and effect as if this Act had not been enacted.

(d) No action or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any officer of the United States acting in his or her official capacity shall abate by reason of any transfer of functions by this Act or by an amendment made by this Act. No cause of action by or against the General Services Administration or by or against any officer thereof in the official capacity of such officer shall abate by reason of any such transfer of functions.

(e) If, before the date on which this Act takes effect, the General Services Administration or any officer thereof in the official capacity of such officer, is a party to an action, and under this Act any function in connection with such action is transferred to the Archivist or any other official of the Service, then such action shall be continued with the Archivist or other appropriate official of the Service substituted or added as a party.

(f) Orders and actions of the Archivist in the exercise of functions transferred by this Act or by amendments made by this Act shall be subject to judicial review to the same extent and in the same manner as if such orders and actions had been by the individual holding the office of Archivist of the United States on the day before the effective date of this Act or the Administrator of General Services in the exercise of such functions immediately preceding their transfer. Any statutory requirements relating to notice, hearings, action upon the record, or administrative review that apply to any function transferred by this Act or by any amendment made by this Act shall apply to the exercise of such function by the Archivist.

TITLE II—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

COPYING AND AUTHENTICATING CHARGES

SEC. 201. Section 2116(c) of title 44, United States Code (as redesignated by section 102(a)), is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Archivist may charge a fee set to recover the costs for making or authenticating copies or reproductions of materials transferred to his custody. Such fee shall be fixed by the Archivist at a level which will recover, so far as practicable, all elements of such costs, and may, in the Archivist's discretion, include increments for the estimated replacement cost of equipment. Such fees shall be paid into, administered, and expended as a part of the National Archives Trust Fund. The Archivist may not charge for making or authenticating copies or reproductions of materials for official use by the United States Government unless appropriations available to the Archivist for this purpose are insufficient to cover the cost of performing the work.".

NATIONAL ARCHIVES TRUST FUND BOARD

SEC. 202. (a) Chapter 23 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out sections 2302 through 2305 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§ 2302. Authority of the Board; seal; services; annual report; bylaws; rules; regulations

"In carrying out the purposes of this chapter, the Board—

"(1) may adopt an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed;

"(2) may utilize on a reimbursable basis the services and personnel of the National Archives and Records Service necessary (as determined by the Archivist) to assist the Board in the administration of the trust fund, and in the preparation and publication of special works and collections of sources and preparation, duplication, editing, and release of historical photographic materials and sound recordings, and may utilize on a reimbursable basis the services and personnel of other Federal agencies for such purposes;

"(3) shall submit to the Congress an annual report, by account, of the moneys, securities, and other personal property received and held by it, and of its operations, which shall include a listing of the purposes for which funds are transferred to the National Archives and Records Service for expenditure and to other Federal agencies;

"(4) may adopt bylaws, rules, and regulations necessary for the administration of its functions under this chapter; and

"(5) may, subject to the laws and regulations governing appointments in the competitive service, appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out its functions.

"§ 2303. Powers and obligations of the Board; liability of members

"Except as otherwise provided by this chapter, the Board shall have all the usual powers and obligations of a trustee with respect to property and funds administered by it, but the members of the Board are not personally liable, except for malfeasance.

"§ 2304. Compensation of members; availability of trust funds for expenses of the Board

"Compensation may not be paid to the members of the Board for their services as members. Costs incurred by the Board in carrying out its duties under this chapter, including the obligations necessarily incurred by the members of the Board in the performance of their duties and the compensation of persons employed by the Board, shall be paid by the Archivist of the United States from trust funds available to the Board for this purpose. The Board, by resolution, may authorize the transfer of funds (including the principal or interest of a gift or bequest) to the National Archives and Records Service to be expended on an archival or records activity approved by the Board or to accomplish the purpose of a gift or bequest.

"§ 2305. Acceptance of gifts

"The Board may solicit and accept gifts or bequests of money, securities, or other personal property, for the benefit of or in connection with the national archival and records activities administered by the National Archives and Records Service. Moneys that are for deposit into the trust fund shall be deposited within 10 working days of the receipt thereof.".

(b) Section 2307 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2307. Trust fund account; disbursements; sales of publications and releases

"The income from trust funds held by the Board and the proceeds from the sale of securities and other personal property, as and when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States in a trust fund account to be known as the National Archives Trust Fund, subject to disbursement on the basis of certified vouchers of the Archivist of the United States (or his designee) for activities approved by the Board and in the interest of the national archival and records activities administered by the National Archives and Records Service, including but not restricted to the preparation and publication of special works, and collections of sources and the preparation, duplication, editing, and release of historical photographic materials and sound recordings. The Archivist may sell publications and releases authorized by this section and paid for out of the income derived from trust funds at a price which will cover their cost, plus 10 percent, and moneys received from these sales shall be paid into, administered, and expended as part of the National Archives Trust Fund.".

(c) The table of sections for chapter 23 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out "employees;" in the item pertaining to section 2302 and inserting in lieu thereof "services; annual report;"

AUTHORITY TO LITIGATE

SEC. 203. (a) Section (a) of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the head of the agency fails to initiate an action for such recovery or other redress within a reasonable period of time after being notified of any such unlawful action, the Archivist of the United States shall, through the Attorney General, initiate such an action; and the Archivist shall report the circumstances of any such failure by the head of the agency, or of any refusal of the Attorney General to initiate such an action, to the appropriate committees of the Congress.".

(b) Section 3106 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the head of the agency fails to initiate an action for such recovery or other redress within a reasonable period of time after being notified of any such unlawful action, the Archivist of the United States shall, through the Attorney General, initiate such an action; and the Archivist shall report the circumstances of any such failure by the head of the agency, or of any refusal of the Attorney General to initiate such an action, to the appropriate committees of the Congress.".

Mr. KINDNESS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Chairman, as we know, in many parts and aspects of our lives, scheduling is sometimes almost everything. Here we are on Thursday afternoon, about to leave town, with no votes scheduled for tomorrow or Monday, and perhaps not Tuesday for all I know, and this measure has had so little attention by this House. The general debate was had during a period of time when no one was paying any attention, and here is the task of anyone who feels concerned about the content of the bill of trying to get some attention somehow on the part of the Members of this House to what is going on here. It is not a very good time to get that to occur. So we will try to make a record, at any rate.

I do not like to be in the position 3, 4, or 5 years down the road of being able to say, "I told you so." That is not my intent or purpose. My intent and purpose at this point would be to try to get a rational vote on this substitute, which does much of what is done by the bill before us, but it does not actually separate the National Archives and Records Service out from the General Services Administration. It does most of the rest functionally that I think does need to be accomplished that would be accomplished by the bill.

For those of you who are happy about the vote that you may have cast to create the Department of Education, you will love this one. If those of you who voted to create the Department of Energy are satisfied with that vote, you may be satisfied with this one, too. But for those of you who are concerned about not creating any more independent agencies than necessary, then I think you ought to listen, you ought to give some consideration and support to the substitute that is under consideration of the Committee of the Whole at this time.

Mr. Chairman, during general debate on this bill, I said that full independence for the National Archives was not necessary in order to solve problems which have been alleged to arise out of its structural placement within GSA. A transfer of the statutory authority contained in title 44 of the United States Code from the Administrator to the Archivist of the United States would deprive the Administrator of the statutory basis on which to meddle in the substantive archival responsibilities contained in title 44. And, that can be done without setting up the Archives as an independent agency.

Incidentally, has anyone thought about how ridiculous it is that the Federal Register should be controlled and printed by an independent agency? Think that about that one. The National Archives and Records Service has that function. Furthermore, it is not unprecedented for Congress to grant a larger measure of autonomy to some components of an agency as opposed to others, and that is what is proposed to be done in this substitute. The Office of Federal Procurement Policy within OMB is one example and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission within the Department of Energy is another. With respect to the latter, Congress provided that the budget submission of the Energy Secretary contain the original request of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission so that, in effect, FERC has a direct line to Congress as to its budget needs. Providing similar authority to the Archives would give it the best of both worlds—support from the larger agency, GSA, when GSA agrees, for its budget request, and a direct, official line to the Congress, even bypassing OMB, when it doesn't have the support of GSA.

This bill will politicize the National Archives of course; and that may be appropriate. The Archivist will be appointed by the President. The administration naturally supports the bill, presumably for that reason.

The Nation's archivists and historians are likely to be disappointed if not horrified by the results if this bill is enacted into law.

This Nation's documentary heritage is too important to be dealt with so lightly. Having served on the subcommittee exercising oversight over the NARS through three Congresses. I have looked at the National Archives rather closely. I am convinced that it is not presently ready to deal effectively with its mission. There are many deep problems in its functioning that are not solved.

I believe that this bill could also make the fulfillment of NARS' missions more difficult. There is no guarantee that an idependent National Archives will have more resources with which to work. I think it is important to point out that I have not opposed more resources for the Archives; I have despaired at times at how those resources have been used, but I do not deny the need for more resources to fulfill its missions.

An independent National Archives will have to provide administrative support services now provided by GSA. Those services include: Congressional Affairs, Office of Ethics, Public Affairs, General Counsel, Inspector General, Personnel, Budget and Finance, Office of Oversight, and Procurement. While the bill before us contains a provision for transfer of appropriations from GSA to NARS for these services, it is not clear that it will be enough to provide high enough grade level for the heads of these new offices within a newly dependent NARS or the physical accommodations in which to situate them. I think we should expect NARS to come to us next year seeking more than will be transferred in this act in order to provide an adequate level of administrative support services for itself. My amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I am now offering, would provide just those things. It is very, very similar to the committee-reported bill. It would transfer all statutory authority from the Administrator to the Archivist as does the committee bill. It provides for Presidential appointment of the Archivist. If contains the provisions of title II of the committee bill clarifying the Archivist's authority to make final determinations as to what is an agency record. And, like the Department of Energy Act, it provides that the National Archives' original budget request must be included in GSA's budget submission to the Congress. The one thing my substitute would not do that the committee bill does is to sever the National Archives from GSA and make it an independent agency.

In sum, I believe that independence is a drastic step which is neither wise, nor necessary. Granting a large degree of program autonomy would free the Archives from the meddling of administrators in the past while sparing it the trauma and drain on resources that will necessarily come from the efforts to establish itself as an independent agency.

So, I hope that the House will adopt my alternative which would alleviate most of the problem inherent in the relationship between NARS and GSA while not throwing the Archives out into the world, unprepared to be out on its own.

□ 1810

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I have read the substitute proposal which the gentleman from Ohio has made, and frankly, I am a bit mystified by it. The substitute would apparently give the Archivist of the United States complete authority for the functions of the National Archives, but it would leave the Archives within the General Services Administration.

This amendment is inconsistent with the Administration's preference that the Archives be made an independent Federal agency. I am at a loss to understand the virtue of this arrangement for the Archives, the GSA, or the people of this country.

Under this arrangement, the Archivist would remain dependent on GSA for personnel, budget, legal, and other support services. One of the main problems that the Government Operations Committee found with the present placement of the Archives within GSA is that support services are not tailored to meet the needs of the Archives, and therefore often do not aid in the performance of the agency's functions. The substitute would continue that situation.

The GSA Administrator, on the other hand, would remain the superior of the Archivist, in title, but he would have no real authority over his subordinate. Can you imagine an organization, Mr. Chairman, in which the boss has no control over his assistants? How could an organization function effectively like that?

From the standpoint of the people, we would have the same old confusing situation of divided leadership which has plagued the Archives for 35 years. As long as the Archives remains part of GSA, there will always be a temptation for the GSA hierarchy to meddle in Archives affairs and frustrate the efforts of the Archivist to run his agency in a professional way.

The occasions on which we have created a structure like the one contemplated in the substitute by the gentleman from Ohio are few and far between. The only one I can think of at the moment is the placement of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission within the Department of Energy. That situation is substantially different from the one before us today, however. Before FERC was placed in DOE, it was an independent regulatory commission with legislative and judicial, as well as executive, powers. We did not want to make an agency with these authorities subject to the control of an executive officer. The Archives, however, performs only executive functions. It should be managed like other executive branch agencies, with direct lines of authority leading from the President to its head.

The gentleman from Ohio has also stated the organization under his amendment is similar to the placement of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy within the Office of Management and Budget. The OFPP example is considerably different from the situation he would prefer. OFPP is a very tiny office—only 14 people at the moment—which would be hard-pressed to perform its own support services. It also is vested only with policy, not administrative, responsibilities. The National Archives, however, is an organization of more than 2,000 employees which has substantial administrative functions. The analogy just doesn't fit.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not solve, anywhere near as well as the bill, the problems which the Government Operations Committee has found in the organizational placement of the National Archives. I urge the rejection of the amendment.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio argues that independence for the Archives is neither wise, nor necessary. He says that independence could well be exacerbate, rather than solve, the problems he has seen during his 6 years as a member of the oversight subcommittee I chair.

While stipulating—in his earlier comments—that the Archives, charged with preserving our Nation's documentary history, was already over 150 years behind the power curve when established 50 years ago, he expresses disappointment over the lack of progress by Archives managers in making up lost ground.

I, too, am disappointed with the amount of progress during the past 6 years. However, unlike the gentleman from Ohio, I do see the lack of management improvement as being a direct casualty of the Archives-GSA relationship. Given the time and energy Archives management has been forced to expend fending off meddlesome and oftentimes vindictive GSA officials, I'm surprised that they were able to make any headway in addressing their many problems.

The gentleman agrees we need a change. The difference between his bill and the committee proposal is one of degree only. We should make the right change—the one called for in the committee bill—you should reject the amendment.

In any event, as the gentlemen knows, the management skills of a particular individual or group of individuals is not the issue here. The gentleman from Ohio knows that there are major and very basic problems with the Archives-GSA marriage. That is why he proposes that, in lieu of independence, we simply transfer statutory authority for substantive archival responsibilities from the GSA Administrator to the Archivist. This, he notes, would deprive Administrators of General Services from entering ill-conceived agreements calling for the destruction of Presidential records, or from ordering the dispersal of valuable records to regional centers. The Archives, he explains, would, then, still have all the benefits of GSA's administrative support.

Well, I am very pleased to see that he recognizes the need to deprive meddlesome Administrators of their authority to influence substative archival matters. I'm equally perplexed, however, that he views the kind of administrative support GSA has provided the Archives as beneficial.

Let me give you just one example of how the Archives has benefitted from being a part of GSA. As the gentleman noted, fire safety at the Archives is not a problem of recent vintage. So, after years of neglect by GSA's Public Building Service—the Government's landlord—we were pleased in March of 1982 of get the Administrator's personal assurance, during a public hearing, that PBS would be responsible for correcting longstanding fire safety and environmental problems at the Archives. Then, when faced with a devastating fire safety report last October, the Administrator and other GSA officials concocted an illegal, retroactive delegation of authority, shifting the burden for fire safety from PBS to the Archives effective October 1, 1981. So much for the Administrator's personal, public assurance of March 1982. And, since this is but one of many sad tales, so much for the benefits of GSA administrative support.

Mr. Chairman, this is not the time to try out yet another experiment in Government management—as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio—on the Archives. this is the time to correct an old mistake, not make a new one. This is the time to reestablish the Archives as an independent agency subject to neither the substantive nor administrative whims of GSA.

I urge my colleagues to reject the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. ENGLISH. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I certainly have had lots of interesting times serving with the gentleman on the subcommittee with the oversight jurisdiction concerning the National Archives and Records Service.

I would just like to ask if the gentleman from Oklahoma would care to state his intentions with regard to the oversight that would be exercised over this new independent agency in the months and years ahead. If this bill is enacted into law, I think it is going to require a great deal of attention, and I would expect to devote that time and attention to the matter myself. I see where the die is cast and what is going to happen here today, but I certainly feel that we are going to have to work harder on oversight as a result of the passage of this law than really is necessary. I would just like to urge upon the gentleman from Oklahoma that this ought to be a very interesting high-priority item for the exercise of oversight by the subcommittee, because it is going to take a lot of it.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I would agree with the gentleman. And as the gentleman well knows—and he certainly has served very ably on the subcommittee as the distinguished ranking minority member—we have spent a great deal of time on the archives. We have looked at it up and down and all around, and I think we are very familiar with the problems. I think that is the reason we all agree that changes need to be made.

I am sure that the gentleman knows the Archives was independent up to 1948, and if I remember correctly, many historians, prominent historians, told us then that we should not be putting it in with GSA, and it turns out that they were right.

□ 1820

But I would certainly wholeheartedly agree with the gentleman that we want to make certain that the new independent Archives gets off to a good start, that it performs as the legislation calls for, and that it lives up to the enthusiastic beginning that we all expect from it.

Mr. KINDNESS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word. I rise in opposition to the amendment—most reluctantly, because I have the highest regard for my friend, Mr. KINDNESS, who has been one of the long time supporters of a strong Archives with the ability to preserve the historical records of this country. He has a keen sense of history and has always been a constructive force in our overall evaluation of the problems of the Archives.

The amendment of my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, serves the worthwhile purpose of vesting statutory authority for archival functions directly in the Archivist. But, in retaining the Archives within the bureaucratic structure of the GSA, the gentleman's amendment only addresses half of the problem. The record of the past 35 years shows numerous examples of the problems that have arisen due to the Archives' being subordinate to GSA. These problems have arisen in some cases from a lack of understanding and appreciation for the Archives' functions and, in other cases, through blatant attempts to meddle in the Archives for political purposes.

Granting direct statutory authority to the Archivist for these functions would not solve the problem wholly. The Archives still would be dependent on GSA to a large degree for the vital support functions that make the difference in any Government agency. Nor would this amendment address the problem that there are fundamental differences in the overall missions of the Archives and GSA. The former Archivist of the United States, Dr. James B. Rhoads, testified before our subcommittee that the defect in the structural relationship between these two agencies is one of simple and stark incompatibility.

It was the committee's opinion, and it is my opinion, that the only resolution of this problem is to remove the Archives completely from GSA. Doing so will benefit both agencies greatly. I would ask for a no vote on this amendment and yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS].

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor of H.R. 3987, I would like to affirm my support for this legislation to reestablish the National Archives as an independent agency. The task of collecting the vital records of our documentary heritage and creating a system for the orderly accumulation of these records over time, is vital to the preservation of the history of our Nation. This summer we are celebrating the 50th anniversary of the founding of the National Archives as an independent establishment. When the National Archives and Records Service [NARS] was created by Franklin D. Roosevelt in June of 1934, it was a free-standing agency, reporting directly to the President. I believe that this is the proper way to run this agency. Today, as part of the General Services Administration [GSA], NARS lacks the proper authority over budget, program priorities, and personnel management needed to effectively carry out its important purpose.

Why is an institution dedicated to the preservation of our historic past buried within an agency which has a very different set of priorities? Most of the Archives' activities do not lend themselves to the measurable goals of the GSA. Principles of profit and loss are difficult to apply to the work of archivists and records managers who deal with people and materials of intangible values. As a results, NARS' budget has suffered and the GSA's demands of the agency have increased substantially over the years.

As long as NARS is a part of General Services Administration, the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] is, and should be, preoccupied and oriented toward big dollar issues involving Federal procurement, building construction and management. As a part of the GSA, the Archives is unable to make its case to the Office of Management and Budget and Congress for the skilled personnel and resources it needs. NARS' budget has suffered over the years while those of the Library of Congress and the Smithsonian have prospered in comparison. As independent institutions, their staffs have a clear understanding of definable goals. Their budgets and money disbursement can be managed within this framework of established priorities.

We need to have an archival program that will be able to operate professionally in the national interest. The NARS needs to be once again in charge of its own affairs where it can independently sustain continuity of its goals and a singularity of purpose.●

● Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3987, the National Archives and Records Administration Act of 1984 that would reestablish the independence of the National Archives by separating it from the General Services Administration.

As we have heard from the many voices raised on this floor in support of this bill, the National Archives was established 50 years ago as an agency dedicated to the preservation of the Nation's official memory. It holds in trust the records of the Federal Government, beginning with the earliest jottings of the first secretary of the Continental Congress in 1774. Born out of the needs of the Government to provide evidence of its own actions, the National Archives has grown to serve the needs of a vast public whose lives, or the lives of their predecessors, have been touched in one way or another by that same Government. We are a nation of immigrants, from the Pilgrims to the latest refugees from today's strife-torn countries. The records of the National Archives are outspoken testimony to the diversity that makes up this land. Through immigration and naturalization records and those of the decennial census, our heritage is recorded by agencies of the National Government, and ultimately these records are deposited in the National Archives.

In the Archives are recorded the momentous events—the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Emancipation Proclamation, the Supreme Court case of Brown against Board of Education—as well as the less obvious happenings that make up the structure and meaning of American life. In the archives are the logs and diaries of Polar explorers, the contracts and designs of the first airplanes sold to the Government by the Wright brothers, the land records that vividly document the rush to settle the West, the treaties that were negotiated to protect trade, copyrights, or the rights of American citizens abroad. The records that document military valor, from the struggle against colonialism in the 18th century to the southeast Asia conflicts of recent decades, are kept by the Archives so that future generations may know not only who were the individuals that laid down their lives, but why they did so. And, in the Archives are records of debates such as this, Mr. Speaker, because the Archives houses the records of Congress and the courts, making it an institution that serves all branches of the Government.

I have no argument with the General Services Administration, Mr. Speaker. As an agency dedicated to performing the business and maintenance functions of the Federal Government it does a commendable job under often adverse conditions. And I have no argument with the recommendations of the First and Second Hoover Commissions for improving the efficiency of Government by consolidating offices and functions where it is appropriate to do so. I do believe, however, that the experience of the 35 years since the establishment of GSA and the assignment of the National Archives to that agency, has proven it to be an error. In my days at San Diego State University it would have been ludicrous to think of placing the library under the administration of the buildings and grounds department. In the State of California the placement of the State archives is much more logical than it is here in Washington, since it reports to the office of the secretary of state, which has legal authority over many of the basic documents preserved in the archives. It is appropriate that we recognize that an error was made, and it is appropriate that we rectify that now. Indeed, it is fitting that such a reversion to the original plan for an independent National Archives take place during its golden anniversary.

Much of what we do in these halls from day to day may seem to be of less than global importance, and we sometimes move from bill to bill seeing them only as threads in a pattern that we cannot easily discern. It is in the Archives where that pattern will ultimately be revealed, when researchers study all of the threads and see how they interweave to form a tapestry of American civilization. The Archives, therefore, must be independent of the pressures normally confronting line agencies, and the archivists must be judicious and nonpartisan in their judgments about retention and disposal. I would urge, therefore, that if this legislation passes, the selection of Archivist of the qualifications and experience of the candidates, and after a broad search for candidates with talent and the proper credentials.

Abraham Lincoln said at Gettysburg that the world would little note what was said and done there that day, and he was wrong. I might repeat his phrase in relation to this bill, and be right. But whether our actions are noted or not, they will have an impact on the record that we in the Federal Government create to explain to future generations what we did, and why. It is on these grounds that I support the passage of H.R. 3987, and urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to contribute their support also.

Thank you.●

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to the bill?

If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

□ 1823

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BENNETT] having assumed the chair, Mr. GONZALEZ, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3987) to improve the preservation and management of Federal records, and for other purposes, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee on the Whole.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 534, I call up from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 905) to establish the National Archives and Records Administration as an independent agency, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR BROOKS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BROOKS moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 905, and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H.R. 3987, as passed by the House, as follows:

That this Act may be cited as the "National Archives and Records Administration Act of 1984".

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INDEPENDENT NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 101. Section 2102 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2102. Establishment

"There shall be an independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government to be known as the National Archives and Records Administration. The Administration shall be administered under the supervision and direction of the Archivist.".

ORGANIZATION AND GENERAL AUTHORITY

SEC. 102. (a) Chapter 21 of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating sections 2103 through 2114 as sections 2107 through 2118, respectively; and

(2) by inserting after section 2102 the following new sections:

"§ 2103. Officers

"(a) The Archivist of the United States shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Archivist shall be appointed without regard to political affiliations and solely on the basis of the professional qualifications required to perform the duties and responsibilities of the office of Archivist. The Archivist may be removed from office by the President. The President shall communicate the reasons for any such removal to each House of the Congress.

"(b) The Archivist shall be compensated at the rate provided for level III of the Executive Schedule under section 5314 of title 5.

"(c) There shall be in the Administration a Deputy Archivist of the United States, who shall be appointed by and who shall serve at the pleasure of the Archivist. The Deputy Archivist shall be established as a career reserved position in the Senior Executive Service within the meaning of section 3132(a)(8) of title 5. The Deputy Archivist shall perform such functions as the Archivist shall designate. During any absence or disability of the Archivist, the Deputy Archivist shall act as Archivist. In the event of a vacancy in the office of the Archivist, the Deputy Archivist shall act as Archivist until an Archivist is appointed under subsection (a).

"§ 2104. Administrative provisions

"(a) The Archivist shall prescribe such policies, standards, criteria, procedures, rules, and regulations as the Archivist finds necessary or appropriate to carry out the functions of the Administration. The head of each Federal agency shall issue such orders and directives as may be necessary to conform the activities of the agency with the policies, standards, criteria, procedures, rules, and regulations prescribed by the Archivist.

"(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided by law, the Archivist may delegate functions to designated officers and employees of the Administration, and may authorize such successive redelegations of such functions as the Archivist may deem to be necessary or appropriate. A delegation of functions by the Archivist shall not relieve the Archivist of responsibility for the administration of such functions.

"(c) The Archivist is authorized to establish, maintain, alter, or discontinue such regional, local, or other field offices as the Archivist finds necessary or appropriate to perform the functions of the Archivist or the Administration.

"(d) The Archivist may establish advisory committees to advise him with respect to any function of the Archivist or the Administration. Members of any such committee shall serve without compensation but shall be entitled to transportation expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence in accordance with section 5703 of title 5.

"(e) The Archivist shall advise and consult with interested Federal agencies with a view to obtaining their advice and assistance in carrying out the purposes of this chapter.

"(f) Each Federal agency is required to furnish to the Archivist, upon request, any information or other data which the Archivist finds necessary to carry out the duties of the Archivist.

"(g) If authorized by the Archivist, officers and employees of the Administration having investigatory functions are empowered, while engaged in the performance of their duties in conducting investigations, to administer oaths.

"§ 2105. Personnel and services

"(a) The Archivist is authorized to select, appoint, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, pursuant to part III of title 5, as are necessary to perform the functions of the Archivist and the Administration.

"(b) The Archivist is authorized to obtain the services of experts and consultants under section 3109 of title 5.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 973 of title 10 or any other provision of law, the Archivist, in carrying out the functions of the Archivist or the Administration, is authorized to utilize in the Administration the services of officials, officers, and other personnel in other Federal agencies, including personnel of the armed services, with the consent of the head of the agency concerned.

"(d) Notwithstanding section 1342 of title 31, United States Code the Archivist is authorized to accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services.

"§ 2106. Reports to Congress

"The Archivist shall submit to the Congress, in January of each year and at such other times as the Archivist finds appropriate, a report concerning the administration of functions of the Archivist and the Administration.".

(b) Section 2101 of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by designating the two indented paragraphs as paragraphs (1) and (2), respectively;

(2) by striking out "sections 2103-2113 of this title" in the matter preceding the first such paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "this chapter";

(3) by striking out the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) 'Archivist' means the Archivist of the United States appointed under section 2103;

"(4) 'Administration' means the National Archives and Records Administration established under section 2102; and

"(5) 'Federal agency', notwithstanding section 2901(14), means any executive department, military department, Government corporation, Government-controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government (including the Executive Office of the President), any independent regulatory agency, or any establishment in the legislative or judicial branch of the Government (except the Senate and the House of Representatives).".

(c)(1) The table of sections for chapter 21 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 21—NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION

"Sec.
"2101. Definitions.
"2102. Establishment.
"2103. Officers.
"2104. Administrative provisions.

"2117. Limitation on liability.
"2118. Records of Congress.".

(2) The item relating to chapter 21 in the table of chapters for title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"21. National Archives and Records Administration ..... 2101".

TRANSFERS

SEC. 103. (a) The National Archives and Records Service of the General Services Administration is transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration.

(b)(1) All functions which were assigned to the Administrator of General Services by section 6 of Executive Order No. 10530 of May 11, 1954 (19 Fed. Reg. 2709; relating to documents and the Administrative Committee of the Federal Register), and by Executive Order No. 11440 of December 11, 1968 (33 Fed. Reg. 18475; relating to supplemental use of Federal exhibits and displays), shall be exercised by the Archivist of the United States.

(2) All functions pertaining to the maintenance, operation, and protection of a Presidential archival depository which were assigned to the Administrator of General Services by the Act of September 6, 1965 (Public Law 89-169, 79 Stat. 648), relating to the Lyndon Baines Johnson Presidential Archival Depository, and by the Act of August 27, 1966 (Public Law 89-547, 80 Stat. 370) and the Act of May 26, 1977 (Public Law 95-34, 91 Stat. 174), relating to the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Library, shall be exercised by the Archivist of the United States.

(c) Prior to the appointment and confirmation of an individual to serve as Archivist of the United States under section 2103 of title 44, United States Code, the individual holding the office of Archivist of the United States on the day before the effective date of this Act may serve as Archivist under such section, and while so serving shall be compensated at the rate provided under subsection (b) of such section.

TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL

SEC. 104. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the personnel employed in connection with, and the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available to or to be made available in connection with the functions and agencies transferred by this Act or the amendments made by this Act, subject to section 1531 of title 31, United States Code, are transferred to the Archivist for appropriate allocation. A percentage of the funds and associated positions in the General Management and Administration appropriation for the General Services Administration, proportionate to the percentage of National Archives and Records Service employees in the General Services Administration, is transferred to the Archivist for appropriate allocation. Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this subsection shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

(b) The transfer pursuant to this title of full-time personnel (except special Government employees) and part-time personnel holding permanent positions shall not cause any such employees to be separated or reduced in grade or compensation for one year after such transfer or after the effective date of this Act, whichever is later.

SAVINGS PROVISIONS

SEC. 105. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, grants, contracts, agreements, permits, licenses, privileges, and other actions which have been issued, granted, made, undertaken, or entered into in the performance of any function transferred by this Act or the amendments made by this Act shall continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, superseded, set aside, or revoked in accordance with law by any authorized official, a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(b)(1) The transfer of functions by this Act and by the amendments made by this Act shall not affect any proceedings, including notices of proposed rulemaking, or any application for any license, permit, certificate, or financial assistance pending on the effective date of this Act before the General Services Administration; but such proceedings and applications, to the extent that they relate to the functions so transferred, shall be continued. Orders shall be issued in such proceedings, appeals shall be taken therefrom, and payments shall be made pursuant to such orders, as if this Act had not been enacted; and orders issued in any such proceedings shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or revoked by the Archivist, by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to prohibit the discontinuance or modification of any such proceeding under the same terms and conditions and to the same extent that such proceeding could have been discontinued or modified if this Act had not been enacted.

(2) The Archivist is authorized to promulgate regulations providing for the orderly transfer of proceedings continued under paragraph (1) from the General Services Administration to the Administration.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (e)—

(1) the provisions of this Act and of the amendments made by this Act shall not affect actions commenced prior to the effective date of this Act, and

(2) in all such actions, proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered in the same manner and effect as if this Act had not been enacted.

(d) No action or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any officer of the United States acting in his or her official capacity shall abate by reason of any transfer of functions by this Act or by an amendment made by this Act. No cause of action by or against the General Services Administration or by or against any officer thereof in the official capacity of such officer shall abate by reason of any such transfer of functions.

(e) If, before the date on which this Act takes effect, the General Services Administration or any officer thereof in the official capacity of such officer, is a party to an action, and under this Act any function in connection with such action is transferred to the Archivist or any other official of the Administration, then such action shall be continued with the Archivist or other appropriate official of the Administration substituted or added as a party.

(f) Orders and actions of the Archivist in the exercise of functions transferred by this Act or by amendments made by this Act shall be subject to judicial review to the same extent and in the same manner as if such orders and actions had been by the individual holding the office of Archivist of the United States on the day before the effective date of this Act or the Administrator of General Services in the exercise of such functions immediately preceding their transfer. Any statutory requirements relating to notice, hearings, action upon the record, or administrative review that apply to any function transferred by this Act or by any amendment made by this Act shall apply to the exercise of such function by the Archivist.

REFERENCE

SEC. 106. With respect to any functions transferred by this Act or by an amendment made by this Act and exercised after the effective date of this Act, reference in any other Federal law to the office of the Archivist of the United States as in existence on the date before the effective date of this Act, or the National Archives and Records Service of the General Services Administration, or any office or officer thereof, shall be deemed to refer to the Archivist or the Administration.

TITLE II—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

COPYING AND AUTHENTICATING CHARGES

SEC. 201. Section 2116(c) of title 44, United States Code (as redesignated by section 102(a)), is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Archivist may charge a fee set to recover the costs for making or authenticating copies or reproductions of materials transferred to his custody. Such fee shall be fixed by the Archivist at a level which will recover, so far as practicable, all elements of such costs, and may, in the Archivist's discretion, include increments for the estimated replacement cost of equipment. Such fees shall be paid into, administered, and expended as a part of the National Archives Trust Fund. The Archivist may not charge for making or authenticating copies or reproductions of materials for official use by the United States Government unless appropriations available to the Archivist for this purpose are insufficient to cover the cost of performing the work.".

NATIONAL ARCHIVES TRUST FUND BOARD

SEC. 202. (a) Chapter 23 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out sections 2302 through 2305 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§ 2302. Authority of the Board; seal; services; annual report; bylaws; rules; regulations

"In carrying out the purposes of this chapter, the Board—

"(1) may adopt an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed;

"(2) may utilize on a reimbursable basis the services and personnel of the National Archives and Records Administration necessary (as determined by the Archivist) to assist the Board in the administration of the trust fund, and in the preparation and publication of special works and collections of sources and preparation, duplication, editing, and release of historical photographic materials and sound recordings, and may utilize on a reimbursable basis the services and personnel of other Federal agencies for such purposes;

"(3) shall submit to the Congress an annual report, by account, of the moneys, securities, and other personal property received and held by it, and of its operations, which shall include a listing of the purposes for which funds are transferred to the National Archives and Records Administration for expenditure and to other Federal agencies;

"(4) may adopt bylaws, rules, and regulations necessary for the administration of its functions under this chapter; and

"(5) may, subject to the laws and regulations governing appointments in the competitive service, appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out its functions.

"§ 2303. Powers and obligations of the Board; liability of members

"Except as otherwise provided by this chapter, the Board shall have all the usual powers and obligations of a trustee with respect to property and funds administered by it, but the members of the Board are not personally liable, except for malfeasance.

"§ 2304. Compensation of members; availability of trust funds for expenses of the Board

"Compensation may not be paid to the members of the Board for their services as members. Costs incurred by the Board in carrying out its duties under this chapter, including the obligations necessarily incurred by the members of the Board in the performance of their duties and the compensation of persons employed by the Board, shall be paid by the Archivist of the United States from trust funds available to the Board for this purpose. The Board, by resolution, may authorize the transfer of funds (including the principal or interest of a gift or bequest) to the National Archives and Records Administration to be expended on an archival or records activity approved by the Board or to accomplish the purpose of a gift or bequest.

"§ 2305. Acceptance of gifts

"The Board may solicit and accept gifts or bequests of money, securities, or other personal property, for the benefit of or in connection with the national archival and records activities administered by the National Archives and Records Administration. Moneys that are for deposit into the trust fund shall be deposited within 10 working days of the receipt thereof.".

(b) Section 2307 of title 44, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2307. Trust fund account; disbursements; sales of publications and releases

"The income from trust funds held by the Board and the proceeds from the sale of securities and other personal property, as and when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States in a trust fund account to be known as the National Archives Trust Fund, subject to disbursement on the basis of certified vouchers of the Archivist of the United States (or his designee) for activities approved by the Board and in the interest of the national archival and records activities administered by the National Archives and Records Administration, including but not restricted to the preparation and publication of special works, and collections of sources and the preparation, duplication, editing, and release of historical photographic materials and sound recordings. The Archivist may sell publications and releases authorized by this section and paid for out of the income derived from trust funds at a price which will cover their cost, plus 10 percent, and moneys received from these sales shall be paid into, administered, and expended as part of the National Archives Trust Fund.".

(c) The table of sections for chapter 23 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by striking out "employees;" in the item pertaining to section 2302 and inserting in lieu thereof "services; annual report;".

AUTHORITY TO LITIGATE

SEC. 203. (a) Section 2905(a) of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the head of the agency fails to initiate an action for such recovery or other redress within a reasonable period of time after being notified of any such unlawful action, the Archivist of the United States shall, through the Attorney General, initiate such an action; and the Archivist shall report the circumstances of any such failure by the head of the agency, or of any refusal of the Attorney General to initiate such an action, to the appropriate committees of the Congress.".

(b) Section 3106 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In any case in which the head of the agency fails to initiate an action for such recovery or other redress within a reasonable period of time after being notified of any such unlawful action, the Archivist of the United States shall, through the Attorney General, initiate such an action; and the Archivist shall report the circumstances of any such failure by the head of the agency, or of any refusal of the Attorney General to initiate such an action, to the appropriate committees of the Congress.".

INSPECTION OF RECORDS

SEC. 204. Section 3301 of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "As used in this chapter,";

(2) by inserting ", as determined by the Archivist of the United States," after "public business and preserved or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Archivist of the United States shall, by regulation, establish detailed criteria under which material shall be examined to determine if it is a record as defined under subsection (a) and such regulation. The Archivist may have access, to determine compliance with such subsection and such regulations, to any material made or received by an agency of the United States Government. Access to such material, and the examination thereof, by the Archivist shall be in compliance with all other Federal laws and be subject to the sanctions provided therein.".

PUBLIC NOTICE

SEC. 205. Section 3303a(a) of title 44, United States Code, is amended by inserting ", after publication of notice in the Federal Register and an opportunity for interested persons to submit comment thereon" immediately after "may" in the second sentence thereof.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 301. The provisions of this Act (including the amendments made by this Act) shall be effective on April 1, 1985.

SPENDING AUTHORITY

SEC. 302. Any new spending authority (within the meaning of section 401 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) which is provided under this Act shall be effective for any fiscal year only to the extent or in such amounts as provided in appropriations Acts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS].

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "An Act to improve the preservation and management of Federal records, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 3987) was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR SANTA MONICA MOUNTAINS NATIONAL RECREATION AREA

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 3331) to authorize the exchange of certain lands between the Bureau of Land Management and the city of Los Angeles for purposes of the Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 3331

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 507(c)(2) of the National Parks and Recreation Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 3501; 16 U.S.C. 460kk) is amended by

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 507(c)(2) of the National Parks and Recreation Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 3501) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(A) after "(2)";

(2) striking out "Any" in the third sentence thereof and substituting "Except as provided in subparagraph (B), any"; and

(3) adding the following new subparagraph at the end thereof:

"(B) The Secretary (acting through the Bureau of Land Management) shall negotiate, and carry out, and exchange with the city of Los Angeles (acting through its department of water and power) of certain federally owned lands managed by the Bureau of Land Management in the vicinity of the Haiwee Reservoir in Inyo County for certain lands owned by the city of Los Angeles which are associated with the Upper Franklin Reservoir in the city of Los Angeles. Lands acquired by the Secretary pursuant to such exchange shall be transferred without cost to the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service for inclusion within the recreation area. The Secretary shall include in such exchange a provision for an easement to be granted to the city of Los Angeles for the existing water pipeline associated with the Upper Franklin Reservoir and for the city of Los Angeles to provide for replacement water to maintain the water elevations of the Franklin Reservoir to the current levels. The values of lands exchanged under this provision shall be equal, or shall be equalized, in the same manner as provided in section 206 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3331, introduced by our colleague Howard Berman, would provide for an equal value land exchange between the Department of the Interior and the city of Los Angeles.

The Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area [SMMNRA], established in 1978 (Public Law 95-625) has within its boundary lands owned by the city of Los Angeles. The act provides for donation of such lands to the National Park Service, at the discretion of the city, but does not permit exchange for other Federal land. The city land contains a small reservoir—Upper Franklin Reservoir—which is no longer used as a part of the water supply system and the potable water is now diverted into a pipeline that passes under the reservoir. Upper Franklin Reservoir is now partially filled with nonpotable water and is the focal point of an area of geological diversity including over 100 plant species, which is heavily used as a nature center by the William O. Douglas outdoor classroom.

The city of Los Angeles constructed the Haiwee Reservoir—located in Inyo County, CA—as part of the city water system in the early 1900's. A portion of the reservoir is on Federal lands administered by the Bureau of Land Management. The land area around the Haiwee Reservoir is an alkaline desert typical of this region of California. While plant and animal life is limited there are several bald eagles that winter in the reservoir area.

The city of Los Angeles desires to obtain ownership of the lands around Haiwee Reservoir and favors an equal value exchange for those lands within the boundary of the SMMNRA owned by the city, including the Upper Franklin Reservoir.

I know of no controversy regarding this bill and since it requires a land exchange of equal value there will be no cost to the Federal Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

WILD AND SCENIC RIVERS ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consideration for immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 5851) to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act to designate a segment of the Cache la Poudre River in Colorado for potential addition to the National Wild and Scenic River System.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 5851

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1271-1287) is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(89) CACHE LA POUDRE, COLORADO—The segment from the northwestern boundary of the city of Fort Collins to the eastern boundary of the city of Fort Collins.".

SEC. 2. Section 5(b)(3) of such Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "The study of the river named in paragraph (89) of subsection (a) shall be completed not later than three years after the date of the enactment of this sentence.".

SEC. 3. The first paragraph (4) in section 5(b) of such Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "There are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of conducting the study of the river named in paragraph (89) such sums as may be necessary.".

SEC. 4. The study required under section 4 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act of the segment of the Cache la Poudre River designated by section 5(a)(89) of the Act for potential addition to the national wild and scenic rivers system shall be carried out by the Secretary of Agriculture. The study and report prepared with respect to that segment under such section 4 shall include an identification of the one-hundred-year flood plain for the segment, an analysis of the existing and potential uses of land within that flood plain which may be inconsistent with the addition of such segment to the national wild and scenic rivers system, and an identification of all water rights and water management practices.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 2, line 17, strike out the word "indentification" and insert "identification".

Page 2 line 21, strike out "indentification" and insert "identification".

Mr. SEIBERLING. The committee offered these two committee amendments to make technical corrections and I ask for their approval.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5851 is a very simple bill to authorize a study of a short segment of the Cache la Poudre River in the State of Colorado, to determine if it is eligible for inclusion within the Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

In 1975 Public Law 93-621 was enacted, which required a study of the upper reaches of the Cache la Poudre River in the State of Colorado for possible inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, but did not include the lower river in the vicinity of the city of Fort Collins. This portion of the Cache la Poudre is in the high plains area east of the Rocky Mountains and is of an entirely different ecological community than those portions of the river in the Rocky Mountains proper. A large floodplain exists along this reach of river and, although within an urban area, a wide variety of riparian vegetation and associated animal life exists.

The city of Fort Collins and Larimer County have been moving to protect the Cache la Poudre River floodplain through elimination of nonconforming floodplain development. Even though the Cache la Poudre River has regularly flooded, there continues to be increased pressure for development within the floodplain with the resultant destruction of the eastern slope riparian habitat.

The proposed legislation would require a study of the suitability of this segment of the Cache la Poudre River for inclusion in the Wild and Scenic Rivers System including identification and evaluation of the 100-year floodplain.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act to designate a segment of the Cache la Poudre River in Colorado for potential addition to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. PACKARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

H.R. 5531, Baltimore-Washington Parkway bill.

□ 1830

H.R. 5631, to provide acquisition of visitor contact and administrative site for Big Thicket National Preserve in Texas; H.R. 5540, Coos Bay Indian bill; H.R. 3775, the Jewish war veterans recognition; H.R. 1199, the Catholic war veterans recognition; and H.R. 6027, the Federal antitrust laws amendments, regarding applications to local governments.

Also, on Monday, the House will consider H.R. 5244, the energy civilian research authorizations for fiscal 1985, 1986, and 1987, open rule, 1 hour of debate. The rule has already been adopted. General debate only on this bill.

On Tuesday, the House will meet at noon to consider the Private Calendar and possible suspensions under the rules. Also the conference report on H.R. 4325, the child support enforcement amendments; H.R. 5244, energy civilian research authorizations for fiscal 1985, 1986, and 1987, to complete consideration; H.R. 5602, the health professions and services amendments; and H.R. 5585, the Railroad Safety Act.

On Wednesday and the balance of the week, the House will meet at 10 a.m. Votes ordered on Monday under suspension of the rules will be taken on Wednesday. The reason for this, Mr. Speaker, is that on Tuesday we have three of our States holding primary elections. So we are going to consider any votes ordered on Monday on Wednesday next.

Also H.R. 5640, Superfund extension, subject to a rule being granted; H.R. 3605, the Drug Price Competition Act, subject to a rule being granted; and H.R. 5921, the Transportation appropriations for fiscal 1985.

At the close of the week's business, the House will adjourn for the Republican National Convention and the Labor Day-district work period and will reconvene at noon on Wednesday, September 5.

Conference reports, of course, may be brought up at any time. A further program may be announced later.

Mr. PACKARD. Would the distinguished whip be able to tell us when we will be out next week?

Mr. FOLEY. When the program is completed. I would assume that with a rather heavy schedule next week that that might mean a Friday session.

Mr. PACKARD. We will have a Friday session?

Mr. FOLEY. It is impossible to assure the gentleman that we will not have a Friday session. The schedule would call for us to begin the recess at the close of business, which I have described, and that might entail a Friday session if the business is not completed earlier.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACKARD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, might I inquire of the debt limit extension bill. It is my understanding it will not absolutely be imperative to move on that, although I see that on the sheet I have that Members should expect action on that next week. Is that just a possibility?

Mr. FOLEY. It is a possibility. I have no information beyond that except that we are not sure exactly at what time it might be necessary to consider that and next week is a possibility.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman.

I have no further questions.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further questions and I thank the gentleman from Washington, the distinguished whip.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, AUGUST 6, 1984

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS OF WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

COMMUNICATION FROM CHAIRMAN OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, CONSUMER, AND MONETARY AFFAIRS OF COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer, and Monetary Affairs of the Committee on Government Operations:

COMMERCE, CONSUMER, AND MONETARY AFFAIRS SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,
Washington, DC, August 1, 1984.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On July 25, 1984, I informed you, pursuant to Rule L(50) of the Rules of the House, that Dean Scott, an employee of the General Accounting Office detailed to this subcommittee, had been served with a subpoena for deposition issued by the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

I have consulted with the General Counsel to the Clerk of the House and have concluded that compliance with the subpoena, as modified, is consistent with the privileges and precedents of the House.

Sincerely,

DOUG BARNARD, Jr.,
Chairman.

FAIR TRADE IN IRON ORE

(Mr. OBERSTAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, it is well-known that the domestic steel industry has been battered by imports priced below U.S. market rates and often below market prices in the country of origin; financed by foreign governments or by low-interest loans from international lending institutions.

Not so well-known is the depression in ore mining and processing in northeastern Minnesota, resulting from the recession in steel.

The House Ways and Means Committee is holding hearings on legislation designed to provide relief for America's steel and iron ore industries, and restore American jobs lost to imports. I submit for the RECORD the statement I will deliver tomorrow to the committee in support of the Fair Trade in Steel Act, a bill which will also restore jobs in iron ore mining and processing in both Minnesota and Michigan—which is why I call this bill 'the Fair Trade in Iron Ore Act of 1984.' This legislation is vital to the economic revitalization of northeastern Minnesota and I urge the Ways and Means Committee to report H.R. 5081 promptly to the House, where I am confident it will pass handily.

The statement referred to follows:

STATEMENT OF THE HONORABLE JAMES L. OBERSTAR OF MINNESOTA, FOR THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS ON THE FAIR TRADE IN STEEL AND IRON ORE ACT OF 1984

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, during this Subcommittee's extensive hearings on H.R. 5081, you have heard much testimony on the Fair Trade Steel Act of 1984; I participated actively in the drafting of this legislation and support it in its present version. I concur with the statements made earlier before this Subcommittee by my colleagues on the Congressional Steel Caucus and will confine my remarks today to those provisions I call the Fair Trade in Iron Ore Act.

This past Saturday, July 28, the people of northeastern Minnesota celebrated the 100th anniversary of the first shipment of iron ore from what later became the deepest iron mine on the North American continent at Tower, Minnesota. Over the course of this century, the three iron ranges of northeastern Minnesota, the Cuyuna, Mesabi, and Vermilion, have produced 3.2 billion tons of iron ore. This ore has sustained our country through two World Wars and the Korean and Vietnam Wars and has allowed for the vigorous building of America into the leading industrial nation in the world.

We in Minnesota have not been content simply to wrench ore from the ground, ignoring the limits of natural resources or the advance of technology. Even as the high grade ores were being depleted, scientists and engineers at the University of Minnesota and from the iron ore industry were developing new processing techniques to extract a higher grade product from low-grade ores called taconite. Some $3 billion in private industry investment in taconite processing has kept northeastern Minnesota on the leading edge of technology in the iron ore industry. In many respect, iron ore processing is the most modern sector of the steel industry. Workers in the iron ore industry have vastly improved their productivity; shipping of the taconite pellets is carried out by the most modern vessels in the American merchant fleet: 1,000 foot self-unloading lakers that can unload a 60,000 ton cargo of pellets in an eight hour shift.

Yet, the taconite industry is under assault today by underpriced imports from sources subsidized or owned by foreign governments or sustained by below market rate lending from international financial institutions.

Mr. Chairman, what I am saying is that the iron ore and taconite industry heard and responded to the call for modernization without U.S. government support. Today that industry is on its knees because of iron ore imports unfairly priced and competing with unfair advantage.

To help some of my colleagues on the Congressional Steel Caucus understand how imports of iron ore have weakened our domestic industry, last March, the first Caucus hearing on H.R. 5081 was held in my district, in Hibbing, MN, the heart of the great Mesabi Iron Range. At that hearings, Representative Joe Gaydos and Representative John Murtha and I heard from an impressive array of Minnesota witnesses who discussed the advanced state of technology in the iron ore industry and the severe economic distress the area has suffered because of pressure from imports. We also heard from a spokesman for the Reagan administration who assured unemployed Minnesota steelworkers that economic recovery would cure all the ills of the steel and iron ore industries. The administration wants industry to lower its costs and make greater efficiencies.

I am here to testify that economic recovery has not arrived in northeastern Minnesota. In 1983, 73,000 new jobs were created in Minnesota—but northeastern Minnesota experienced no job gain. About half of those steelworkers employed in 1980 today still have jobs in the taconite industry. Some of them were lucky enough to keep their jobs through a long and hard recession; some are happy to be returning to their original jobs. Far too many others have not been so fortunate, and are still unemployed.

The Reagan administration wants the industry to produce efficiencies. What the administration calls "efficiencies" are not going to help this industry combat dumped imports. Minnesota's iron ore plants are highly modern—the National Steel Pellet Plant in Keewatin was redesigned in the late 70's and further updated last fall to produce the most modern pelletizing plant on the market. This plant is operating today at half throttle.

Minnesota's iron ore workers cannot make more wage concessions. They have conceded their wages, many have conceded their jobs and their homes. Some have all but conceded their hopes.

We cannot produce efficiencies to combat dumping margins of 51 to 100 percent. We cannot lower wages enough to make up for a $300 million World Bank loan to Brazil at below market interest rates to develop ore capacity which further expands the current world oversupply of iron ore, a World bank loan which helps Brazil deliver iron ore to Great Lakes steel mills for $12 less a ton than U.S. ores.

The American iron ore industry has suffered long and hard during the past recession. It has more than shared the unemployment and shutdowns that have plagued the steel industry. In 1983, iron ore imports took a 29.1 percent share of the domestic market, a far higher market share than steel imports. Today, we hear outrage from the steel industry because imports have reached 26 percent. The American iron ore industry has been burdened with more sustained and higher levels of imports: since 1976, iron ore imports have averaged between 29 and 36 percent.

Sustained levels of ore imports have had the same effects on the American ore industry as high steel imports have had on the steel industry: unemployment and reduced capacity. It is difficult to convey the economic depression on the Iron Range of northeastern Minnesota, where about 55 percent of the gross regional product is directly related to the taconite industry. The industry will employ 8,000 this year, up from the record lows of 5,000, in late 1982 but far from the 15,000 jobs in iron ore mining in 1979.

Because northeastern Minnesota's economy is so heavily reliant upon iron ore production, the depression has shut down not only the mines but has also virtually shut down entire towns. In 1981, the eight iron ore plants had a payroll of $400 million and purchased $900 million in goods and services from 2,000 Minnesota firms. Last year, the payroll was reduced to $208 million and the industry purchased $450 million in goods and services, half the level of two years prior. This decline can also be expressed in very human terms—families have lost their homes, businesses have closed, skilled professionals, such as doctors, have moved out of the area.

Many of our unemployed steelworkers will never return to their former jobs in the taconite plants. As the mines have reduced their operations during the recession, steelmakers are contemplating permanent shutdown of a portion of our domestic iron ore capacity. Today, world excess capacity in both iron ore and steel may mean an increasing reliance by domestic steelmakers on cheap iron ore from foreign sources, often receiving heavy subsidies from their governments and international lending organizations.

Existing trade laws are not enough to stop the flood of iron ore imports. H.R. 5081 recognizes that the iron industry must share in the economic benefits of quota legislation on the steel industry. We cannot allow domestic steelmakers, protected from steel imports by a 15 percent quota, to turn around and buy subsidized iron ore dumped on the domestic market. The iron ore mines on the Mesabi Iron Range will surely benefit indirectly from a steel quota—increased demand for American steel could add 1,500 jobs in iron ore.

But this legislation also recognizes the essential value of a strong iron ore industry to our national security and to our economic base. By placing a 25 percent quota on iron ore, we assure that the iron ore industry will share in the general recovery in the steel industry. The 25-percent iron ore quota would put another 1,000 iron ore miners back to work.

When we drafted the iron ore quota in H.R. 5081, we included two provisions which recognize that certain steel companies or individual plants may require imported ore. We have allowed two ways for these companies to petition the Secretary of Commerce to raise the quota to the present level of ore imports 29 percent. First, those companies which entered into long-term contractual agreements on or before January 1, 1984, would be allowed to petition for an excedence of the 25-percent quota. Second, individual steel mills which rely on certain types of foreign ore, such as Sparrows Point in Baltimore, Maryland, would be allowed to request the Secretary to raise the quota if the mill cannot fill its needs within the 25-percent quota. It is important to note that the Secretary of Commerce first allocate the 25-percent quota to plants traditionally dependent on ocean-sourced ores before allowing for companies to exceed the quota.

The 25-percent quota on iron also recognizes the traditional global trading patterns of iron ore—the United States imports each year about 2 tons of Canadian ore for every 1 ton of non-Canadian foreign ore. We have also specified under this legislation that the Secretary must preserve this traditional ratio of Canadian and non-Canadian ore under the 25-percent quota. This provision assures that American manufacturers will not be able to import only cheap Brazilian or Venezuelan ore under the quota, shutting out one of our most important trading partners, Canada.

I would have liked a stricter quota on iron ore, but during the many hours of discussions with industry and labor, we molded this compromise to unite both groups behind this provision and the entire bill. The bill provides steelmakers with a certain flexibility for meeting their needs, while protecting American iron ore workers.

During the Steel Caucus hearing in Hibbing, one of the local steelworker union presidents challenged the administration representatives to tour the area and meet some unemployed workers. Afterwards, this steelworker and the administration spokesman toured a local public works project, where steelworkers now make minimum wage, barely enough to support a family, and a food shelf, where the unemployed can receive about 1 month's worth of groceries a year.

That administration official saw the economic devastation on the Mesabi Iron Range. He also saw the modern ore processing facilities, which are now idle, and met some of the highly skilled workers, who no longer have jobs. Here, we do not have a case of obsolete plants asking for protection, we have a streamlined industry seeking a chance to compete fairly in the domestic and world market. H.R 5081 would provide the steel and iron ore industries that opportunity.

I am pleased that the subcommittee has shown a willingness to finish its hearings on H.R. 5081. I would strongly urge you to move toward a markup as soon as possible to get this bill onto the House floor so that we can help our steel and iron ore industries to trade fairly.

As one president of a local steelworker union stated at the Steel Caucus hearing in Hibbing, "For northeastern Minnesota, fair trade must be reciprocal and not unilateral."

TWO VISIONS OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman form Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I was drawn to this special order by the daring gamble of Vice President Mondale in saying in his acceptance speech that he will raise taxes and then challenging President Reagan to say he would raise taxes.

I watched eagerly the other night as President Reagan in his press conference tried to explain why he would not raise taxes.

I then listened with increasing dismay as both the national media establishment, the intellectual establishment, and even some of my colleagues, good Republicans, began to say, oh, obviously you have to raise taxes. Obviously after the election we have to raise taxes. There is no alternative to raise taxes.

I listened to people dismiss out of hand alternatives, to assume there was no other choice.

I was very struck with the fact that economists and politicians who have been clearly and systematically wrong, who have year after year after year been wrong, leap back up almost like doctors guilty of daily malpractice and offered advice and counsel and demands, talked about common sense. I was particularly struck and went back in my files to my library to a classic work by Douglas MacGregor, "The Human Side of Enterprise," written in 1960. For Douglas MacGregor was in some ways the first management specialist to challenge the liberal welfare state in its style of managing the government, companies, and the economy.

□ 1840

And he suggests something in his great book, one of the trailblazing books of thinking about management, that I thought fits so perfectly with the problem we face, those of us who believe in a conservative opportunity society and a growing America in the future opportunity for all human beings, and the kind of automatic, almost contemptuous intellectual response that we get from economists, some politicians, some newsmen and women who say, "Well, obviously you are going to raise taxes." And we say, "Why obviously?" They say, "Because." We say, "Why because?" They say, "Because all of the theories prove it, because it is common sense, because it is practical." They talk about being pragmatists while we are ideological. They grip the word "pragmatism" as though by holding on to it it proves they are.

And I went back, and on page 7 of "The Human Side of Enterprise," Douglas MacGregor says:

> It is possible to have more or less adequate theoretical assumptions. It is not possible to reach a managerial decision or take a managerial action uninfluenced by assumptions, whether adequate or not. The insistence on being practical really means "let's accept my theoretical assumptions without argument or test." The common practice of proceeding without explicit examination of theoretical assumptions leads at times to remarkable inconsistencies in managerial behavior.

Let me suggest that, in a way, Douglas MacGregor, talking about management in 1960, described Paul Volcker and the Federal Reserve Board from 1979 to 1984. He described the entire collapse of the liberal welfare state economic order, whether the right-wing liberal welfare state or the left-wing liberal welfare state.

And to prove that case, let me cite just a few quotes that were gathered by Congressman JACK KEMP and by John Mueller of his staff, for they went back and they asked the question, "What have economists told us? What have they said?"

First of all, they started with the Carter-Mondale policies. Now, as all of us remember very painfully, the Carter-Mondale policies were a disaster. They involved highly centralized Government, more money in Washington, tax increases, lots of inflation, they ultimately led to the decay of American industry, the collapse of the auto industry, the destruction of the heavy industry in the Midwest from Pittsburgh through Illinois. They also led to the worst misery index we have ever had. They finally ended up in a situation in which, under Carter-Mondale policies, we had 13-percent inflation and 21.5-percent interest rates.

In that setting, what did economists tell us? Walter Heller, Wall Street Journal, November 8, 1978:

> Can the Carter anti-inflation program overcome the deluge of doubt, denigration and defiance that has greeted it? I believe it can.

That was totally wrong. As a medical doctor Dr. Heller would have been sued for malpractice. That very anti-inflationary policy collapsed and we had the worst peacetime inflation we have ever had.

Arthur Okun, Wall Street Journal, January 12, 1979:

> I think we are on the road to getting inflation down to 6 percent by the end of 1980.

Well, he was only off by 120 percent. Now, I used to teach college. If a student was off by 120 percent, you did not give them passing grades. He, of course, continued to be quoted.

What happened when President Reagan came in, largely elected by American workers who were tired of having their taxes go up, of having inflation go up, of seeing their jobs killed by Carter-Mondale liberal welfare state policies?

President Reagan proposed a policy of growth, a policy of new opportunities for free enterprise, a policy of creating jobs.

What did famous economists say?

Gardner Ackley, University of Michigan economist, "Dun's Business Month," talking about the Kemp-Roth concept, as early as August, 1978:

> If Keynesians are correct that tax cuts increase demand by much more than they raise supply, a mammoth $120 billion tax cut, even if spread over 3 years, could produce an inflationary outburst that would dwarf anything we have seen up to now.

Now, notice that he said if we cut taxes we would have inflation. However, we were having inflation with tax increases, that is, Carter-Mondale were giving us exactly what Mondale promised in San Francisco, higher taxes. And they threw in higher inflation, which he did not mention. So they were already raising taxes and, despite Keynesian economics, they were raising inflation.

Now, down came the taxes under President Reagan, and we did not get—they were just totally wrong—we did not get, and quoting from Gardner Ackley, "an inflationary outburst that would dwarf anything we have seen up to now." We got just the opposite. We have the most stable prices with growth we have had in over 20 years.

Another quote from Business Week, saying that Kemp-Roth "would touch off an inflationary explosion that would wreck the country and impoverish everyone on a fixed income."

Business Week was just plain wrong. That was in August, 1978. And the fact was, despite the national liberal welfare state establishment, we have not touched off an inflationary binge. We have ended the inflation, begun to create prosperity and have stable prices.

John Kenneth Galbraith, famous economist, maybe the quintessential liberal welfare state spokesman, New York Times, October 30, 1979:

A tax cut now would be an act of extreme unwisdom," said Mr. Galbraith, noting that, by spurring consumption, it would put new and unwelcome pressure on prices.

Now, every single economist I have just quoted, four nationally famous liberal welfare state economists and Business Week, were about as wrong as a doctor who tried to do an appendix operation on your left ear. They were just plain wrong. They were totally out of the ball park.

But it did not stop. It was not over.

Walter Heller again, famous economist, still to be read in the Wall Street Journal, July 12, 1978:

A $114 billion tax cut in 3 years would simply overwhelm our existing productive capacity with a tidal wave of demand and sweep away all hope of curbing deficits and containing inflation, indeed it would soon generate roaring deficits and roaring inflation.

Walter Heller was wrong. There is no roaring inflation. Furthermore, the growth in productivity, the growth in jobs in the last year and a half are bringing down the deficit. Every single week that goes by we are seeing more people go to work and more people pay taxes and fewer people are on unemployment.

In May of this year alone, under this program, we created more jobs in America than the European Common Market has created in 12 years. Let me repeat that because it is so incredible it is hard for people to believe. In May of 1984 the United States of America created more jobs than the European Common Market created in the last 12 years.

Precisely the opposite of what Walter Heller and liberal welfare state economists suspected. And why were they wrong? They are fairly upfront about it. They were wrong in terms of their analysis as they explained it at the time because their analysis was in fact fundamentally built on the wrong model. Their analysis said, " If we give you bigger incentive to work, because you are basically lazy you will just spend the money," when we kept saying, "Oh, no, if you give people an incentive, they will go out and do things. If you give people a chance, they will go out and do it." And the liberal welfare state economists said it is not possible.

Again, Ernest Koning, Los Angeles Times, July 1978:

Taxes cannot be reduced that sharply without inducing higher unemployment.

Now, he could not hardly be more wrong than this. I mean this is so totally wrong it is like describing a 4-year old as though they were 90. I will repeat it, because it is so incredibly wrong in terms of reality: "Taxes cannot be reduced that sharply without inducing higher unemployment."

In fact, now that the tax cuts have finally occurred, we are seeing just the opposite. Far from inducing unemployment, we have added, I believe, over 7½ million jobs, we are on a tremendous explosion of employment, we are leading the planet. For the first time in years we are growing faster than Japan.

But let me go on. According to the National Bureau of Economic Research, the recession began in July of 1981. That is a very important thing to realize. The National Bureau of Economic Research is basically the agency that defines recessions in America. It is a nonpartisan, highly scholarly group, and they sat down and they said, "When did the recession begin?" Well, it began in July of 1981.

And I have to say, for just a moment, that there were one or two incredibly dumb things that the Republican Party did in the last few years, and one of them was not hammering home the message that the recession that began in July, 1981, by definition was not a Reagan recession, it was a Carter-Mondale recession. We had only been in office 6 months, and in fact the tax cuts were not enacted until August.

□ 1850

Virtually every unemployed person in 1981 and 1982 and early 1983 could thank Carter and Mondale for the economic conditions that led to the decay of America because the first tax cut was only 1.25 percent in its impact on 1981. It did not take effect until October, so the Carter-Mondale recession was already underway July, August and September for 3 months before the tiny opening tax cut, and according to the U.S. Treasury, automatic and scheduled tax increases outstripped tax cuts throughout 1982.

In that setting, what happened? The Carter-Mondale recession set in, the tax program began, and economists looked at the world and what did they say? Benjamin Friedman, quoted in Business Week, a Harvard University economist, on November 8, 1982:

I do not see a revival in capital spending for several years. That would be like going to a doctor with a seven-year-old and being told, "I do not think he will grow for at least 20 years." It is just totally wrong; you would never go back to the doctor.

Again, John Kenneth Galbraith:

We have had a period of unprecedented experiments in economic policy; it has failed.

He said that 1 month into the process of recovery. I might say that Congressman KEMP, in this paper which I am borrowing from, makes the very clear point that in fact, and I quote him:

This statement by Friedman, who did not see a revival in capital spending for several years, this statement may rank with economist Irving Fisher's prediction in 1929 that stock prices had reached a permanently high plateau. Capital spending rose dramatically in the first 18 months of the recovery, the sharpest rise since the Second World War.

But there were others, it was not just John Kenneth Galbraith and Benjamin Friedman, listen to some of the liberal welfare state advisors.

Felix Rohatyn, New York Times Magazine, December 5, 1982, major advisor to pain and anguish liberal Democrats:

The present best case scenario for 1983 calls for a slow recovery for the economy.

Now remember he talks about a slow recovery—1983 was the fastest recovery since World War II. It set new records for recovery. It is like saying, I think that your calf will only grow to weigh 109 pounds, and it grows to weigh 1,000 pounds. You would not call that veterinarian back in, you would figure he was not sure what he was doing.

Lester Thurow, famous writer, MIT economist, a man who many liberals listen to carefully, New York Times Magazine, October 17, 1982:

The engines of economic growth have shut down here and across the globe, and they are likely to stay that way for years to come.

He could not have been more wrong. He said that when we had begun to move into the recovery. He said that when the early indicators were that the engines of growth were starting up. Now, since he uses engines, could you imagine going to an airplane and looking at the pilot, and the pilot says, "I think I will start the engines soon," and the engines are already running? You would get off the airplane.

If you went to an airplane and the pilot said, "We cannot leave, I cannot get the engine started," and the engines were already running, you would figure he is hard of hearing. I want to repeat it because it is so central to the case I am about to make.

MIT economist, Lester C. Thurow, October 17, 1982, in the New York Times Magazine:

The engines of economic growth have shut down here and across the globe and they are likely to stay that way for years to come.

Let me go on. It is not just people who are published in Newsweek; it is not just advisors who are popular left-wing figures. Nobel Prize winner, Lawrence Kline, University of Pennsylvania, U.S. News & World Report, January 1, 1983:

It is out of the question to make for quick progress on the unemployment problem. We can stabilize it or lower it a bit in 1983, but it will take until 1985 to make substantial reductions.

Now, he was entering a year in which there would be remarkable progress in unemployment. In which we create millions of jobs. He is a Nobel Prize winner; he was wrong. His whole model was wrong. Let me say, I think what really bothers me is not just that leftwing and liberal politicians and liberal economists stick with the liberal welfare state model, it is deeper than that.

There are conservative economists who are conservative within a liberal welfare state framework. They are conservative within the industrial model of the 1950's and early 1960's. They are equally wrong. They are a little more honest and straightforward intellectually in that they admit they do not know what they are doing, but they are not sure how to leave the world they once lived in and so they cling to ideas they know do not work but they are not sure what ideas to go to.

I want to quote two quotes from Herb Stein, who is a very bright, very competent man, whose book on fiscal policy in America is a standard and who many people respect, but who I think in many ways is still trapped, intellectually, inside the framework of the liberal welfare state.

Quoting from the Washington Post:

We must confess that we do not know what is the optimum path of the economy for price stability and real growth. We do not know how to achieve that path even if we could identify it. We do not know what caused the slowdown in economic growth or how to correct it.

Now that is an honest man. That is a man who is saying all of the models he has devoted his entire professional life to failed. They are inadequate, they do not work, they do not explain the future. However, he also said about a year earlier, in September 1982, something which bothers me very deeply and which I think is at the center of our problem:

Supply-side believers have had access to the data and research capabilities of the U.S. Government to buttress their case. But the argument still relies on isolated anecdotes, post hoc ergo propter hoc history, and quotations from 14th century Muslim philosophers. The failure to find other evidence tends to support, if not conclusively prove, the more traditional view.

Now what bothers me about that, and what explains the current problem facing the Reagan administration and the Republican Party is that the old guard, traditional economists, and the people they advise, cling to a set of ideas that are clearly dying. Cling to a rightwing version of the liberal welfare state, and cling to a traditional economics based on industrial policy. That is precisely what is going wrong.

By the end of the 1970's the American dream had begun to fall apart. A combination of things had caused us enormous problems, and people were despairing. We forget how bad it was. I was reading this afternoon, President Jimmy Carter's famous speech that was characterized by some as the malaise speech. July 15, 1979. This is what he said, and I am quoting bits and pieces, not out of context, but let me give you several quotes:

It is clear that the true problems of our Nation are much deeper, deeper than gasoline lines or energy shortages deeper even than inflation or recession.

To skip on, he said:

This kind of summarized a lot of other statements, Mr. President, we are confronted with a moral and a spritual crisis.

He says:

After listening to the American people I have been reminded again that all the legislation in the world cannot fix what is wrong with America. So I want to speak to you first tonight about a subject even more serious than energy or inflation, I want to talk to you right now about a fundamental threat to American domocracy.

President Carter consulting with Vice President Mondale, with the establishment of the Democratic Party, trying to come to grips with the great crisis of the late seventies with an economy in decline, then said this:

The threat is nearly invisible in ordinary ways. It is a crisis of confidence, it is a crisis that strikes at the very heart and soul and spirit of our national will. We can see this crisis in the growing doubt about the meaning of our own lives and in the loss of a unity of purpose for our Nation. The erosion of our confidence in the future is threatening to destroy the social and the political fabric of America. The confidence that we have always had as a people is not simply some romantic dream or a proverb in a dusty book that we read just on the 4th of July, it is the idea which founded our Nation, and has guided our development as a people, confidence in the future has supported everything else. Public institutions and private enterprise, our own families and the very Constitution of the United States. Confidence has defined our course, and has served as a link between generations. We have always believed in something called progress. We have always had a faith that the days of our children would be better than our own.

□ 1900

President Carter went on to say:

Our people are losing that faith, not only in government itself, but in the ability as citizens to serve as the ultimate rulers and shapers of our democracy. As a people, we know our past and we are proud of it. Our progress has been part of the living history of America, even the world. We always believed that we were part of a great movement of humanity, itself called democracy, involved in the search for freedom, and that belief has always strengthened us in our purpose. But just as we are losing our confidence in the future, we are also beginning to lose the door on our past.

President Carter went on to say:

The symptoms of this crisis of the American spirit are all around us. For the first time in the history of our country a majority of our people believe that the next 5 years will be worse than the past 5 years. Two-thirds of our people do not even vote. The productivity of American workers is actually dropping, and the willingness of Americans to save for the future has fallen below that of all other people in the Western World.

President Carter went on to say:

These changes did not happen overnight. They have come upon us gradually over the last generation, years that were filled with shocks and tragedies.

President Carter, looking at the inflation rate, said:

We remember when the phrase "sound as a dollar" was an expression of absolute dependability until 10 years of inflation began to shrink our dollar and our savings. We believed that our Nation's resources were limitless until 1973, when we had to face a growing dependency on foreign oil.

He then focused:

Washington, DC, has become an island. The gap between our citizens and our government has never been so wide. The people are looking for honest answers, not easy answers; clear leadership, not false claims and evasiveness and politics as usual.

Finally, President Carter concluded in this part of his speech:

Often you see paralysis and stagnation and drift. You do not like it and neither do we. What can we do? First of all, we must face the truth and then we can change our course.

Let me say that as someone who watched that speech, who was in the Congress, who tried at the time as a fellow Georgian to argue with President Carter's staff that they were going down the wrong path, his speech is right. We were in a crisis of confidence. Inflation was eroding everything. Our productivity was declining. Our taxes were going up. Our take-home pay was shrinking. We all had a sense of despair. Our neighborhoods were collapsing.

In that setting, having correctly told all of us he felt terrible because we felt terrrible, President Carter was then trapped, and this is my point coming back to Vice President Mondale's dramatic challenge to raise taxes.

President Carter saw a problem, the problem of economic collapse in America, and saw it clearly. Vice President Mondale has seen a problem, the problem of deficits, and he has seen it clearly. President Carter promptly jumped to a solution so wrong that it destroyed his Presidency. In my judgment, Vice President Mondale is now jumping to a solution so wrong that it will destroy his candidacy.

Vice President Mondale wanted to raise taxes, to have bigger government in Washington. Let me point out to you what President Carter said were his solutions, very quickly.

Talking about energy, it is hard to realize now, but in 1979 under Carter-Mondale, everybody assumed that gasoline would go up to $2 or $3 or $4 or $5 a gallon, and that in fact we would not have enough of it. Instead of being a glut on the world market as it is today, everyone was confident that there was going to be so little gasoline that we were going to have to ration. I remember the big fights right here in this House when we fought about rationing because rationing was inevitable, which it might have been, frankly, had we reelected Carter-Mondale.

But in the middle of this fight, President Carter, having said Washington is too big, it is too far away, it is too distant, what are his proposals under the influence of liberals like Walter Mondale? His proposals are more government. Let me just cite them.

I will use my Presidential authority to set import quotas.

Power in the White House.

I will forbid the entry into this country of one drop of foreign oil more than these quotas.

Is that real power, one drop? If you have enough bureaucrats to stop one drop, do you know how many bureaucrats you have to hire? Do you realize what he was saying about the power of Government in Washington?

I am asking for the most massive peacetime commitment of funds and resources in our Nation's history.

More power in Washington. More money in Washington. Higher taxes. More bureaucracy.

I propose the creation of an Energy Security Corporation.

It used to be called socialism. It is now just sort of liberal Democratic platform pledges. An Energy Security Corporation, so we would have the Government involved directly in energy. We fought over that today. We still have the relics, even while we are involved in a process of having gasoline far less expensive and far more available than either Carter or Mondale.

I will soon submit legislation to Congress calling for the creation of this Nation's first solar bank.

Not just a general energy program; we are going to have Government-operated solar banks, for Pete's sake.

Then he says, and this is where Walter Mondale clearly is the direct heir of Jimmy Carter:

These efforts will cost money, a lot of money, and that is why Congress must enact the windfall profits tax without delay. It will be money well spent.

In other words, Jimmy Carter had a clear answer to the pain in your pocketbook. It was to take more money away from you to hire more bureaucrats, who would then stop the pain by spending the money well.

That is the first big challenge about Walter Mondale's pledge. Every American who thinks Washington spends their money well should vote for Walter Mondale and higher taxes. Jimmy Carter, Walter Mondale's President, said: "It will be money well spent."

Every American who thinks that promise has been kept and that money has been well spent has a candidate for the Presidency—Walter Mondale—and they should vote for him because he will spend more of their money well. However, let me go on. Carter went on to say:

I am asking Congress to mandate to require, to mandate as a matter of law, that our Nation's utility companies cut their massive use of oil by 50 percent.

He did not then say, "By the way, if they do that, that is going to mean higher utility rates and all you people who I am going to tell to be mad at the utility company really ought to be mad at the liberal Democrats." Oh, no. He first was going to pass a law that was going to make your electricity more expensive, and then tell you to attack the utility company for making your electricity more expensive when he passed the law.

Does that sound a little bit like Walter Mondale? He goes on. He is not finished yet.

I will urge Congress to create an Energy Mobilization Board which, like the War Production Board in World War II—and so forth.

Let me tell you, one of the reasons I finally figured out what was fundamentally wrong is that I began to look at the origins of command bureaucracy and big central Government in Washington, and I began to understand that people like John Kenneth Galbraith had their training ground in Washington in the middle of World War II. If we have a sneak attack on America and we mobilize the entire Nation for survival, I think we can have central government for 3 or 4 years. I think we can do pretty well. But in peacetime, in a country this free, with citizens this willing to go their own way? That would be a nightmare.

He then asked Congress to give him authority for mandatory conservation and for standby gasoline rationing. He also wanted another $10 billion for mass transit, and then he said, and I want you to compare this with whatever you did this week, and then you can decide whether you like Carter-Mondale or you like Ronald Reagan. This is what Jimmy Carter's future promise was:

I am asking you for your good and your Nation's security to take no unnecessary trips, to use carpools or public transportation whenever you can, to park your car one extra day per week, to obey the speed limit, and to set your thermostats to save fuel.

Here is a President faced with an absolute, total crisis in which the liberal welfare state, after 6 years of trying, had totally failed, and his answer was more liberal welfare state, more bureaucracy in Washington, higher taxes, more inflation, less energy, and slightly more than a year after this speech the Carter-Mondale ticket was defeated, and it was defeated because the American people thought they would like leadership that allowed them to take trips. They thought they would like leadership that thought they could drive their own cars. They thought they ought to have leadership to let them drive 7 days a week.

They somehow felt that asking them to park their cars 1 day a week was not solving the problem, particularly since no one suggested parking any Government limousines 1 day a week.

In that setting, let me come back to the problem we face with Walter Mondale's challenge on taxes. I say to all of my Republican friends, if you believe in a liberal welfare state, if you want a large central bureaucracy in Washington making most of the decisions, if you want the world of Carter and Mondale, then we Republicans should be willing to raise taxes, but I do not believe that.

Furthermore, I would argue that that world is over, that is not where the American people want to be and that furthermore it reflects a world that has changed dramatically and let me explain what I mean.

At the very time that Jimmy Carter was preparing his malaise speech, as it has come to be called, two men were writing books, Theodore White who wrote his memoir "In Search of History," and Alvin Toffler, who wrote a book called "The Third Wave" which came out in 1980. They really captured what I think is the essence of this particular special order and why I think it is terribly important that the Republican Party not allow the national liberal welfare state establishment to rush it into a foolish commitment on taxes or a foolish decision.

Ideas matter. Ideas change the world.

Notice that in the Herb Stein quotation, he was looking for a model. He was looking for a kind of proof which I would suggest to you simply does not exist. He was saying, and let me quote him precisely because I think the word is important:

Supply side believers have had access to the data and research capabilities of the U.S. government to buttress their case.

But he missed the point of the whole vision of a conservative opportunity society. There is no mathematical statistical computer that explains what we are all about, and if you will remember President Carter's malaise speech, he did not talk about statistics. He did not talk about econometric models. What he talked about, and these are code words, he talked about a moral and spiritual crisis. He talked about a crisis of confidence, a crisis that strikes at the very heart and soul of our national will. Everything President Carter referred to in the best part of his speech, the analytical part of his speech, was a moral, a mental, a spiritual crisis.

I would challenge every practicing economist in America with this assertion. What we are about, what George Gilder is about I believe, what "In Search of Excellence" by Peters and Waterman is all about, the most popular management book ever written; what John Naisbitt's "Megatrends" is about is human economics, not mathematical economics.

We are about the business of how do you motivate people? How do you move people?

It was fascinating in preparing this evening, in looking at ideas, to go back to Theodore White's "In Search of History," for he said this. What led him to go back and write his memoir was coming back home and suddenly realizing in 1976 that he no longer understood America, that the world was changing, and he has far more honesty than any traditional economist I have yet met, because he stopped and he rethought his world. He says this in his introduction on page 3, talking about himself in the third person:

> This time his observations were outrunning his understanding. The America he was now reporting was swelling with strange, vague forms which his thinking could no longer shape into clean stories. No piling up of more reportorial facts, no teasing anecdote, no embracing concept could hide from him what was wrong. His old ideas no longer stretched over the real world as he saw and sensed it to be.

In other words Theodore White, who had studied American politics for two generations, realized all of a sudden that the old America was going away, that a different world was emerging. He saw it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I would be delighted to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think what the gentleman is pointing out is absolutely essential to understand, that what we are really talking about is a changing climate, a changing world, in which we have to have new ideas, new concepts to guide us, because if we do not understand that the change that we are undergoing is massive, then there is no understanding of many of the economic changes that have to be put in place, many of the political changes that have to be put in place in order for this Nation to survive, remain free and offer the people hope and opportunity for the future.

I think the gentleman has made the case. We were sitting here discussing when the gentleman was going through some of this, you know, how much that energy policy that the Carter administration outlined, how much it identifies precisely what is going on with the liberal welfare state. Their entire energy policy was a fiasco, that was a major burden to the American people, and yet what we found out in the end was that if we simply changed, took a new idea, basically opened a free-market economy, not only did we get surpluses of gasoline, as the gentleman has mentioned, not only did we get surpluses of heating oil but the price dropped dramatically. I heard on the news last night that the price of gasoline in Washington, DC, and in some locations is down under $1 a gallon again. That would have been unheard of under the Carter administration. They were convinced, as the gentleman has pointed out, that gasoline was going to go to $2, $2.50, $3 a gallon and were preparing for it.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I would be glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania raises an interesting point, especially in view of the legislation that we voted on today.

The point the gentleman from Georgia has been making, I think, has been of the dying response of the liberal welfare state, the problems it no longer is capable of solving. The classic example of that in my view was the response of the Carter administration and this Congress to the energy crisis a few years ago. The immediate response was, of course, this must be the failure of the marketplace which can only be solved by a big infusion of Government; so Congress voted under President Carter's direction to form the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, which channeled billions and tens of billions of taxpayer dollars into the development of technologies to supposedly secure our energy independence.

Well, now here we stand several years later in a totally different environment in which OPEC is virtually on the verge of collapse. There are some analysts that have suggested that 1 year or 2 years from now there will be no OPEC, in which oil prices are dropping, not rising, and we find surpluses of most energy commodities and deflation in the energy sector, and yet today again the Congress of the United States refused to save that $10 billion that we could have saved by deciding that the Congress no longer needed, the Government no longer needed, to establish a massive bureaucracy to develop technologies which do not fit into this marketplace any more.

In my judgment, if ever there was an example of this institution being unable to adapt to changing conditions, and exhibiting its worst tendencies, which is to defend the institutions of Government that exist, whether they make any sense or not, it was that vote today which preserved the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

I might add, speaking as a Republican, I was proud to look at the partisan breakdown of that vote, because a clear majority of Republicans voted to save the money and take it away from the Synfuels Corporation and a clear majority of Democrats voted to keep the Synfuels Corporation going.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, let me pursue for just a minute the point the gentleman is making, because I think it is central, that is, if you take $10 billion away from the American people and you throw it into an industry that is going to die, I mean if we had Walter Mondale and the liberal welfare state in 1890, we would have been propping up horse raising all over the Eastern United States because the bicycle was emerging, and in 1905 we would have been propping up bicycle manufacturing all over the United States because the automobile was emerging, and that is not an exaggeration. The bicycle was the most popular urban transportation breakthrough in 1890. It appears in the old census records and we would have a U.S. Bicycle Corporation owned by the Government with a large bureaucracy in Washington with paperwork trying to help prop up bicycles.

Walter Mondale and the liberal welfare state, they do three things that really hurt us. First, they take money out of working Americans' pocketbooks, so that the working American cannot decide on the future by buying the products they want. Second, they divert resources into a bureaucratic decision instead of a market decision. Therefore, they go the way the bureaucracy went, which is the way the politicians went and because of the lag time, it takes about 5 years for business people to talk to politicians, 5 years for politicians to create the bureaucracy and 5 years for the bureaucrats to get the paper forms filled out, so the bureaucracy is about 15 years behind the decision we should have made.

□ 1920

Not only have we now taken money out of working Americans' take-home pay and given it to the bureaucrats to invest the wrong way, we also hire bureaucrats who ought to be out funding companies, that ought to make money so we divert people's livings and have hundreds of thousands of bureaucrats shuffling papers around and doing very little who ought to be out creating their own companies, creating their own jobs and generating their own wealth and making this a far richer society.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. The gentleman makes an extraordinary important point. As I listened to the debate today on the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, one of the comments made in defense of it by one of the liberal Democrats really struck me, and I did not have an opportunity to respond to that point. But they said if we do not have the Synfuels Corporation, America will have no energy policy.

That says a lot about the mindset of the defenders of the liberal welfare state. They presume that if there is not Government, preferably a Government program directed by the Congress, then there is no program whatsoever.

The fact is that the energy economy is doing quite well, thank you, and is doing quite well without the help of the Government. We are seeing conservation technology flourish and we are seeing solar technology grow. We are seeing the use of alcohol fuels expand, largely, not entirely, but largely without the assistance of Government.

I would argue along the same lines as the gentleman from Georgia was just arguing, that the existence of an entity called the Synfuels Corporation in this case actually serves to inhibit the development of those other technologies, because if you are a private investor and you knew that the Government was going to pour $10 billion into the development of a particular form of technology, how likely are you going to be to invest in a different form of technology which well may be better and which may well deliver energy to the consumer cheaper, but now has to compete not in the marketplace, but with the Federal Government.

Mr. GINGRICH. I think the gentleman is right.

Let me come back and say I think the underlying problem of the Mondale tax challenge, and the underlying problem both of conservative and liberal welfare state intellectuals goes to the very root of their model. I want to quote from McGregor again on what is wrong at a fundamental level with the model the liberal welfare state has used, and Walter Mondale still uses, and all too many Republicans I think are browbeaten by it because they grew up in the liberal welfare state:

An equally important reason for management's failure to make effective use of current social science knowledge has to do with a misconception concerning the nature of control in the field of human behavior. In engineering, control consists in adjustment to natural law. It does not mean making nature do our bidding. We do not, for example, dig channels with the expectation that the water will flow uphill; we do not use kerosene to put out a fire. In designing an internal combustion engine we recognize and adjust to the fact that gasses expand when heated; we do not attempt to make them behave otherwise.

With respect to physical phenomena, control involves the selection of means which are appropriate to the nature of the phenomena with which we are concerned. In the human field the situation is the same but we often dig channels to make water flow uphill. Many of our attempts to control behavior, far from representing selective adaptations, are in direct violation of human nature. They consist in trying to make people behave as we wish without concern for natural law. Yet we can no more expect to achieve desired results through inappropriate action in this field than in engineering.

Let me translate. Jimmy Carter said, "Gosh, the American people don't feel good. They are worried. They lack confidence. How can I help them?

"I know, I will raise their taxes."

I do not know of any politician in America who can walk up to a working American, I do not know of any working American who if you walk up to them and say "Will it make you have more confidence in the future if we raise your taxes" who would say "Gosh, yeah. I have been waiting for this all week. I was hoping you would come and do that. I was worried that you wouldn't raise my taxes."

I do not know of any American that has too much money in his wallet and wishes that we would take some away, or whose take-home pay is burning a hole in his pocket. I cannot think of anybody who does not have something that they want to buy, or who does not want to save more money, or who wishes that Walter Mondale would get in there and raise their taxes because they are overpaid for what they are doing.

What he is doing, and I think it is a tragedy, and I know this sounds very, very partisan, but I really mean this in terms of the future of the Democratic Party and the future of America, for Walter Mondale to propose a massive tax increase, and then go to the black community and make a speech promising jobs, is just doomed to failure. It is not that he is a bad man or that he is hypocritical or he is deceptive. But it is like a doctor who says to you, "I can cure your alcoholism. Here is a year's supply of bourbon." It will not work.

We just went through 4 years of that experiment. It was called the Carter-Mondale administration. It was an absolute, total disaster.

Now here we stand, and because frankly my party and our party is not very articulate, and we are not very aggressive, we are not successful very well in campaigning in the black community and saying the truth, which is that we have just created 7.5 million jobs, we have just had a dramatic drop in black unemployment, we have just had a dramatic increase in black business owners, we have just had a tremendous increase in your take-home pay, and you are working in the black community and you have more take-home pay, and it buys more real goods than you ever had under Jimmy Carter.

And we do not say it because we do not know how to say it, because we are at the end of an age. We are at the end of the industrial age.

Let me explain that because I think if you look at the central point I am trying to make, which is that all of the economists and all of the reporters and all of the politicians who are beating at President Reagan and saying, "So please admit you will raise taxes," are operating off of a basic model of the economy which is wrong. It is wrong first in its understanding of human nature. It is wrong second in its understanding of the historical moment we live in.

Let me talk first about human nature. The liberal welfare State economic model has three basic things wrong with it. First, it is wrong because it favors a centralized command bureaucracy over the free market. As Paul Johnson points out in his book on modern times, and as noted in his grand strategy of the Soviet Union, in World War I and World War II we learned that in a great crisis when your nation's survival is at stake you will build a bureaucracy. Good, decent, well-meaning liberals, including Walter Mondale, thought that meant you could have the same kind of bureaucracy in peacetime. It does not work. It leads to disaster. And Adam Smith in the whole basic lesson of the free market says that in peacetime people should be allowed to pursue their own future because that is the way the world really works.

So the first thing wrong with the liberal welfare state economics is that it favors a command bureaucracy over the free market and that is like favoring bourbon as a solution to alcoholism.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding just for a point.

I think we need to make the point that Republicans as well as Democrats make that mistake, that the Wage and Price Control Administration that was put in place under the Nixon administration was an absolute disaster, too.

In attempting to micro-manage the entire economy through a wage and price control mechanism, they actually brought the economy almost to a standstill. They managed to build in an inflation factor that caused a terrible mismanagement so that once the Wage and Price Control Administration had been lifted it then sets off a spurt of inflation and it was just a total disaster in attempting to micromanage everything out of Washington.

Mr. GINGRICH. Let me pursue that because I think my colleagues may want to respond to this for a second. But I think it is a very good point because it is part of what is confusing to all of our friends in the news media and to all of our friends who are coming to Dallas for the national convention.

We have many dear friends whom we respect, who are sincere Republicans, who in the 1970's became liberal welfare state Republicans. They represented the right wing of the liberal welfare state. They accepted, and frankly, Paul Volcker was there, he was part of the group that went off gold, he is part of the group that created the great crisis. In fact, Burns, Dr. Arthur Burns is the only member of the Republican establishment in the executive branch at that time who fought even to the end against leaving the gold standard.

So there are many Republicans who accepted the liberal welfare state model and ironically it is precisely the people who were most supportive of going off the gold standard, and who were most supportive of wage and price controls, and who were most supportive of the liberal welfare state economics who today are asking President Reagan to raise taxes. And part of our intellectual argument is inside our own party and that is part of what confuses people because we have good friends who are simply still wrong about the intellectual framework of economics.

But let me continue. If the first thing wrong with the liberal welfare state's economics is it favors command bureaucracy over the free market, the second thing wrong with it is that the liberal welfare state economics favors mathematical economics over human economics. It favors numbers over vision. It favors bureaucracy over enterprise and it favors bureaucrats over entrepreneurs.

Let me walk through that again because it is very tough. It is very straightforward and I would be willing to debate any major liberal welfare state economist or politicians anywhere in this country on this.

□ 1930

It is the central curse of modern liberalism. It favors mathematical economics over human economics. It favors numbers over vision. It favors bureaucracy over enterprise and it favors bureaucrats over entrepreneurs.

What that means is that every time there is a crisis in the liberal welfare state, the liberal welfare state economists and the liberal welfare state politicians will tend to do the wrong thing. They will tend, as President Carter did, to explain a spiritual, a moral crisis, and then promptly to propose nine new government programs. They cannot stop it. That is why there was so much intellectual confusion in San Francisco because literally the liberal welfare state analysts of the left, the people who advised Walter Mondale and who earlier advised Jimmy Carter cannot find a solution which works, which fits their values.

So rather than have a solution that works, they stay with the solution they believe in, even though it is a disaster.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just wanted to make a point. It is almost a point aside. If there were some way to come to the floor and challenge the gentleman on that viewpoint, the gentleman would be very glad to yield to them so that we could have a debate over the kinds of points that the gentleman is raising; is that not correct? Is that not the pattern that he has been following out here and that we have been following out here?

Mr. GINGRICH. The gentleman is absolutely correct. In fact, I would say that the two or three great questions that face America in the next 5 or 6 months, the two or three great questions that will dominate the election in November, are so fundamental to the health and the future and the survival of America that instead of having partisan mud-slinging and name calling, we owe this country a serious intellectual debate.

And what I guess I objected to in what Walter Mondale said in San Francisco was that he was going to raise taxes, he was going to be honest, and if Ronald Reagan said he was not going to raise taxes, that was dishonest. That is not fair. That is not accurate.

There is as we will display in the next few weeks an alternative to liberal welfare state high tax-high inflation policies. There is a way to keep moving toward more and more jobs. I think as the gentleman said, the thorough intellectual discussion of public policy issues is so important that we frankly ought to challenge our good friends on the left to host a series of debates jointly in the evening, to take special orders and make them serious intellectual dialogs, to share this. We have talked about this with several of them and it has not quite worked out.

But my position is and will be for the rest of this session through September that if a Democrat wishes to come down and to raise questions, that we will have a serious dialog and we will be glad to yield them time and I hope they will be glad to yield us time.

But let me go on for just a moment. I have already outlined two of the three major failures of liberal welfare state economics. First, that it favors command bureaucracy over the free market; and second, that it favors mathematical economics over human economics.

The third failure is that it is remarkably culture bound and nonhistorical and I really want to make this point hard. Most modern economists and most modern politicians and most modern reporters in the news media do not think about history, do not study history, do not look at the history of the world. The result is they say things that are nonsense.

I will give you an example. The most rapidly an economy can grow is 3 percent. If it grows over 3 percent it will have rampant inflation.

Well, Japan has averaged growing three times as far as it is allowed to since it does not hire liberal welfare state economists who did not know any better. It just got to be the fastest growing economy and the second largest economy in the world.

Singapore has been growing some years four times as fast as Paul Volcker would have allowed it to. One way we could in fact gain with the Japanese is to loan them Paul Volcker for 5 years, because if Paul Volcker would keep the Japanese down to the growth rate they would accept, then we would be able to catch up with them.

The fact is that I can show you five different cases where economies have grown by more than 4 percent a year, more than 5 percent a year for year after year. From 1962 to 1967 the United States grew at 5½ percent a year. And only when we both fought the Vietnam war and built the Great Society bureaucracy, without paying for either one, did that finally stop. But for 5 years America grew at 5½ percent a year, real growth.

Japan, 10 percent a year. Singapore, 12 percent a year. Taiwan, 12 percent a year. Hong Kong, 13 percent a year. South Korea, 12 percent a year.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will yield, I just want to make one point because those figures also debunk a popular myth which is that growth is dependent upon natural resources because all of the nations that the gentleman just mentioned, of course, are resource-poor countries. Under the conventional thinking, Singapore, Hong Kong, Japan, these are not places that have huge supplies of wealth or natural resources whatsoever.

Mr. GINGRICH. We are going to run out of time tonight but I want to come back next week and systematically take up this issue, because I think that the tax increase challenge is the phoniest challenge of 1984 and is a sign that neither the press nor liberal welfare state economists and politicians, nor Walter Mondale, understand the Reagan revolution and what we are trying to do.

Well, let me say in closing as the gentleman from Minnesota just pointed out, traditional economists would have stopped Germany's rennaissance after World War II. They would have stopped Japan from growing dramatically. They would have stopped Hong Kong and Singapore. They would have told you never to invest there, they have nothing there except people.

And that is what we are all about. We are about people economics. We are about the American dream. There is no way that raising taxes massively on the American people helps buy the American dream, because it is only Americans who can each go out themselves and pursue their own dreams. There is no bureaucracy of dreaming in America.

The central thrust of the Walter Mondale challenge on tax increases and the central thrust of the news media coverage so far is fundamentally wrong and misunderstands the intellectual and historical revolution that is underway.

In the next 3 weeks, between now and the time we adopt the platform in Dallas, we hope to communicate what this revolution is all about.

TRIBUTE TO REMBERT HOUSER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives has been busy during these 20 months of the 98th Congress.

Almost 10,000 legislative bills and amendments have been introduced and because the checks and balances system does work, only 325 have thus far been signed into law.

For some of us, this is too much legislation.

Among our many worries, is the treacherous deficit, which threatens our economic recovery.

This is a problem which reminds us all that we must work to overcome the philosophy that our Government believes it's all right for America to live beyond its means as a country—a practice which we, as individuals, families, and businesses, can't engage in and survive.

Mr. Speaker, because our total time is consumed with the legislative business of the Congress, as well as the concerns of our constituents, I mention this only because we oftentimes fail to recognize those individuals in local government who are so often the unsung heroes, working their hearts out for our people at the grassroots level of government.

So I'm proud to recognize during these few minutes an outstanding gentleman who was such a dedicated public servant to the people whom he served and loved, and to the city of Columbus, GA. Rembert Houser who recently departed this life for a much better one, after serving most of his adult life as the Muscogee County Tax Commissioner. He worked at the grassroots level, as diligently and as hard as we do—here in our hectic pace.

Commissioner Houser began his elected service in Muscogee County in 1968 and over the years his reputation for hard work and his popularity with the city employees grew. He became their watchdog and champion. City employees today still acknowledge their debt to him for his successful efforts to bring handicapped facilities up to current standards at the government center.

Over the years, Commissioner Houser became a symbol of fairness and integrity in Columbus, GA. He was previously a teacher and later an administrator for the University of Georgia Center in Columbus. He was also a successful certified public accountant until his election as tax commissioner.

A dedicated family man with a loving wife and family, a civic leader and a businessman, Rembert was indeed an integral part of the community.

As a highly qualified tax commissioner, he served the people well in this role. Knowledgeable in business and in law and in the workings of government, coupled with a sincere concern for the people, he was indeed a capable public servant.

Above all else, Rembert Houser was dedicated to his work as tax commissioner. Day in and day out, he was there and his office moved smoothly and effectively. It was a model of efficiency.

In recent years he began to lose his health. He quietly eliminated many other commitments and opportunities from his life, so that he would have the energy to do what he most wanted—to continue to work, and to serve his fellow citizens. With serious medical difficulties, Rembert quietly continued working with the same enthusiasm and effectiveness as always. Few people knew the seriousness of his illness.

Rembert Houser died last April, at work, late one night. I believe the most fitting tribute to his dedication was his wife, Ruth's calm statement, that "Rembert died in the place he most wanted to be," in the peoples place.

In the months since his death, Columbus has paid many honors to Rembert Houser and the citizens and his many friends sorely miss him.

Mr. Speaker, I want to add my tribute to Rembert Houser. Being known as a dedicated public servant is a quality possessed by few, and Rembert's sincere commitment to the people he served should not and will not go unrecognized.

I was proud to call Rembert Houser my friend, and to be known as his friend. I am grateful for the example he set for all of us in public office.

Our society lavishes enormous praise on those who, for a moment, are the best, the most efficient, and the strongest.

Mr. Speaker, it has been an honor and a privilege for me to take a few minutes at the end of this busy day to pay tribute to one who possessed these attributes and whose purpose in life was to serve others.

A true servant of the people—Rembert C. Houser.

THE ECONOMY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, while reports of the national economic recovery are encouraging, I fear that a "black cloud" weighs heavily over this recovery. This cloud is the grim economic status of our agricultural community. Debtor distress and creditor remedies currently grip one of our Nation's most capital intensive industries.

In my home State of Iowa, where 8 out of 10 jobs depend on agriculture, problems relating to farm credit and farm debt have reached crisis proportions. Farm debt in Iowa has increased 71.5 percent since 1981 as the number of delinquent loans reached 20 percent of all Farmers Home Administration [FmHA] agricultural loans, 11 percent of Production Credit Association [PCA] loans, and 6 percent of all farm loans from commercial banks. The Iowa Crop and Livestock Reporting Service reports that 30 percent of Iowa farmers with assets under $800,000 are delinquent on real estate loans and 37 percent are delinquent on operating loans. Whereas 5 percent of Iowa farmers with assets over $1.2 million are delinquent on real estate loans, 21 percent are delinquent on operating loans. The 1984 farm credit survey conducted by the Iowa secretary of agriculture projects that 5,000 to 11,000 Iowa farmers will be forced out of business during the next 2 years. While fingers of blame are pointing in every direction, I believe it is more useful to review how this crisis developed and what might be done to address it.

In years past the economic status of most farmers was influenced primarily by the weather. When weather conditions were favorable, most farmers did well. And when weather conditions were unfavorable, most farmers did poorly. While weather is still a major factor in the success of farm operations, farmers now are dependent also upon Government policies and the international economic climate. Consequently, the homogeneity which once characterized farming has given way to a heterogeneous economic structure in which about 30 percent of the farmers are free of debt and prospering; another 30 percent are making do; 30 percent are having considerable economic difficulty; and 10 percent are facing critical problems.

The problems facing these latter groups of farmers are caused by a number of factors: First, interest rates; second, a declining export market; third, overexpansion in the 1970's under an assumption of continued inflation; fourth, decreasing land values; and fifth, adverse weather conditions.

The most critical problem facing farmers today is the high rate of interest they must pay on borrowed money. Uncontrolled spending by the Federal Government has created huge deficits which have caused interest rates to increase. These high rates have undermined the ability of our farmers to maintain positive "cash flow" positions. Cash flow is the backbone of successful modern day farming. The inflation-induced erosion of our farm economy is reflected by the increase in interest expense as a percentage of total farm expense; in 1960 it was 1.1 percent, in 1983 it was 13.1 percent.

High interest rates are also the primary reason why the dollar has remained strong relative to other currencies. The strong dollar means American-produced goods and services are more expensive in foreign markets. In a Nation where 40 percent of our crops are grown for overseas markets, the strength of the dollar has placed undue burdens on our agricultural sector. Many American farm exports are now too expensive to compete in world markets. In 1982 U.S. agricultural exports fell for the first time in 13 years. This trend bodes ill for the future of American agriculture.

In the mid- to late 1970's, high inflation rates and Government policies encouraged rapid expansion in farm operations. Land values appeared destined to rise forever. However, the dramatic drop in the rate of inflation has left many farmers severely exposed. The transition from an era of high inflation to one of low inflation has also caused land values to decrease, cutting into farmers' equity.

The one immutable factor in farming today remains the weather. Severe weather has wreaked havoc during the past few years. Persistent drought conditions in the Midwest have caused billions of dollars in crop losses. Last year's drought was especially damaging to crops in many parts of Iowa. Weather-related losses are particularly critical to beginning farmers because they have not developed the economic base which comes from longevity.

Two of the factors casting negative influences on agriculture are now beyond the control of Federal policymakers. We can lament about the overexpansion in the 1970's, but that is now history. And we can fret about the weather, but that, too, is beyond our control. However, those factors relating to our Federal debt are clearly within the purview of Federal control, and are begging for responsible legislative action.

Any proposals to aid farmers in meeting their current challenges can only be considered stop-gap assistance. The long-term viability of American agriculture continues to rest on our ability to regain control over Federal spending and to reduce Federal budget deficits. Congress must show the courage to grapple with these difficult issues.

Fiscal responsibility is obviously a long-term project. In the meantime we cannot ignore the current problems faced by our farming community. The economic problems facing farmers and agri-businessmen alike not only threaten the economic vitality of our rural communities, but a way of life as well.

In responding to the pronounced problems facing our farmers, we must carefully focus on policies which are: First, attainable in the short term; and second, which will not add greatly to our Federal deficit problem. Some of the legislative cures proposed for the agricultural crisis are well founded, but have little chance of being adopted during the remainder of this legislative session. Others propose massive infusions of Federal dollars, which ultimately will add to the long-term problems facing our farmers.

The key to aiding farmers is to enable them to manage their debt structures to ensure that the crucial cash-flow balance can be regained. To this end I propose some Federal initiatives and encourage others already started.

First, I applaud and encourage the efforts of the FmHA and the Federal Reserve Board to allow all the forebearance and flexibility available under current law to assist farmers in structuring their debts. It appears to me that sufficient legislative authority is available to provide meaningful assistance to farmers facing financial problems. I also note with approval, FmHA initiatives to limit the sale of property in areas where the sale will adversely impact local property values.

Second, I propose that the FmHA loan guarantee authority for the farm operating loan program be expanded by at least $1 billion. The cost to the Federal Government of this action will only be a fraction of this amount, and I believe that the additional loan guarantee authority will provide valuable assistance to financially strapped farmers. The guaranteed loan program provides the opportunity for borrowers and lenders to work together on restructuring farm debts. Congress can and should provide this additional authority before the end of this legislative session.

Third, a recurring complaint about the FmHA is that there is often a lengthy delay in the processing of applications. I recognize that FmHA county supervisors are stretched thin and therefore recommend that the Secretary of Agriculture authorize the hiring of additional field personnel to facilitate prompt loan processing. While I am cognizant of the Department's budgetary constraints, I believe that the Secretary has the authority to carry this proposal out.

Fourth, in an effort to aid farmers and lenders in rescheduling debt obligations, I recommend that the Secretary of Agriculture authorize the formation of "work out" teams. These teams would function as a third-party liaison between lenders and troubled farmers. The teams would be made up of professional farm managers, retired farmers and lenders. The FmHA would be the lead agency in developing these teams which would operate out of FmHA district offices.

The work out teams would receive cases by referral from FmHA county offices, conventional lenders, and requests of individual farmers. The teams would review the financial situations of borrowers and assign cases to members of the teams. The team members would then have the authority to pursue cases with the goal of finding viable financial packages with reasonable chances of success. These packages would be submitted to the entire work out teams for review and approval. If a package cannot be put together, it will be assumed that the operation has no reasonable chance of success and an orderly liquidation plan will be drawn up. I believe that the flexibility available to lenders and the availability of additional loan guarantee authorities, enable this proposal to offer the best opportunity to struggling farmers.

These are not drastic proposals. Rather, they are general initiatives which may be facilitated quickly by Congress or through already existing legislative authorities. I believe that these recommendations will provide valuable assistance to farmers currently facing difficult financial problems.

Clearly, the long-term economic health of American agriculture depends on our ability to control Federal spending and to ensure the availability of foreign markets. However, we must be prepared to address short-term transitional problems facing our farmers. With thoughtful and compassionate programs, we can help preserve the structure and good health of the American farm economy.●

REALITY AND THE ECONOMY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, for the many months that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have been discoursing about liberal Democrats, about the liberal welfare state, about the rhetoric of the Republican Party being always right, I thought that there should be some of us who could talk about what the reality in this country is. Now, we will not have rhetoric; but we will have facts, we will have figures, we will have sources such as the Congressional Budget Office, we will have sources such as the Office of Management and Budget; we will have sources such as the House Budget Committee that approves reports by both Republicans and Democrats; and we will have some bills in Congress and statistics that reflect the reality of what our colleagues are talking about.

I speak today as BILL RICHARDSON, a Democrat from the State of New Mexico, a first-term Member, who above all considers himself not a Democrat, not a Republican, not a liberal, not a conservative, not a liberal welfare-stater, but as an American who is concerned about what is happening in this country. And joining me today will be two other freshmen who were elected on banners of fiscal conservatism and reality and humanity in foreign policy. One of them is a former economist, a college professor, JIM MOODY of Wisconsin; the other is an individual who is called perhaps one of the leaders of the populism movement in the House, although he is only a freshman, BOB WISE of West Virginia. We are going to talk about reality and the economy. We hope that the American people will make up their minds whether they are going to choose rhetoric and vitriolic attacks, the Democrats are all wrong, or whether they are going to choose what really is happening in this country.

We Democrats have made mistakes. We concede that. But I think the mistakes we have made in this country are for all to blame. They have been made by Republicans, they have been made by Democrats. And solutions are going to come not by partisan attacks, as have been done every night over the last few months, but by working in a bipartisan fashion.

I just a few minutes ago discussed what I was going to say tonight with the chairman of the House Budget Committee, a conservative, JAMES JONES of Oklahoma, a conversative. The House Budget Committee and the House of Representatives has approved a deficit reduction bill of $182 billion spread out over 3 years with pay-as-you-go concepts, which means if we are going to have any more spending we have got to pay for it with new taxes, with freezes on domestic and military spending, with a variety of a number of budget-cutting initiatives.

He told me that the real problem right now is that the Republican-controlled Senate, the conferees of the Republican Budget Committee, just will not meet with him to discuss the deficit. Right now there are differences between the two Houses. We Democrats have our plan of $182 billion. The Republican Senate has their plan of $140 billion. We have got to meet together and reconcile our differences. The Republicans will not meet because the President and the Republican Senate refuse to discuss further reductions in military spending.

Now, we do not want to decimate the military budget. We want to just say that that budget should grow according to growth and that we should cut waste. But, no, they want more weapons systems, more waste. They will not meet to discuss the deficit. They refuse to meet, and time is running out.

The President's budget-reduction message, I do not recall what he called it, but I think his downpayment was $100 billion, the least strong of these three provisions.

Defeated in the debate over the budget and the deficit were other Democratic plans, one that called for $243 billion. It was called the MacKay amendment. Over 3 years, freezes on domestic and military spending, basically saying that if we are going to cut, let us cut across the board, domestic spending, military spending, they should stay the same.

No, very few Republicans voted for that. That was the toughest one. And the three of us who are going to be speaking to you are Democrats and we are supported by working people, and I think in the definition of our colleagues we are liberal Democrats, but we voted for it. I do not think either of the three who spoke earlier voted for that provision. So I think we have——

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I will not yield.

Mr. WEBER. The gentleman has made an inaccurate statement about my record.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have an opportunity today to set the record straight. And we have an opportunity today to discuss what we as new Democrats propose for this country.

I would like to yield to one of my colleagues who is going to be following me and discussing some of these issues, my good friend from the State of West Virginia [Mr. BOB WISE], who is very conscious and knowledgeable about the issues we are debating today.

Mr. WISE. I thank my colleague for yielding at this stage. I think he has touched on a few good themes that we ought to look at. The first is reality. You know, you can do all of the smoke and mirrors about who did what, who shot John, the fact of the matter is that this deficit has been building over a number of years, the fact of the matter is that it has developed under Republican Presidents and Democratic Presidents, under Republican Congresses, under Democratic Congresses.

I am kind of amused when I hear about how it is the Democrats who are not permitting a balanced budget, who are somehow fighting against it. In the last 3 years, the way I read the history books, the recent history books, it has been a President who has held the White House, it has been the other party, the Republican Party, that has controlled the Senate. Indeed, it is the Senate, or the other body, right now that is frustrating the negotiations with the House Budget Committee.

□ 1950

The point is that I think the gentleman makes very well, and indeed, I heard a slight stirring in that of the remarks of a previous speaker. That it is a problem that all of us have to work at, and that the rhetoric of finger pointing really does not serve anyone very well. What are we talking about in the differences between the Senate and the House, for instance, in the budget resolution compromise talks.

We are talking about roughly $12 billion in a defense budget that would be $285 billion or $297 billion. That is what we are talking about; that is what is frustrating. But yet they will not even talk about some kind of compromise there. I think that that is important.

I think it is important to note, let us look at where some of the record lies. Let us look at the fact that we heard a lot of quotes from the previous speaker about what writers had said and economists had said in 1981 and earlier years. I remember a very, very graphic statement made by a well-known political person, a well-known office holder, indeed, the President of the United States, Ronald Reagan: "I will balance the budget by 1984," was that political statement.

Now, has he been somehow frustrated by a Democratic Congress? After all, the Democrats do not control the Congress, do they? I would like to point out to you the fact that he has never submitted a balanced budget to this Congress.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. No, I would like to continue.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is making a misstatement of fact, and I wish they would yield when they are making misstatements.

Mr. WISE. Thank you very much. You have had months to talk and now we would like to advance our case.

Mr. WALKER. You are not going to yield?

Mr. WISE. No, I am not going to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We will not yield, and the reason we will not yield is because for many, many months our colleagues have held forth, uninterrupted, and, the way, I hear about a new policy that they have advanced of having started to yield. I have not heard of that policy; I do not recall it. I do not think the gentleman has extended the same courtesy to us.

Mr. WALKER. That is not true.

Mr. WEBER. That is just not true.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We will not yield because——

Mr. WISE. Your message has been heard.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I reclaim my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has indicated that he does not wish to yield, so the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. WALKER. We understand.

Mr. WISE. So as I say, if you wish to talk about a balanced budget, then submit one. Let us look at the budget that was presented in 1984 for fiscal year 1985. $180 billion out of whack. The President knew while he stood behind you, while he stood behind the gentleman from New Mexico, that that was a hopeless budget; he presented it anyway. $180 billion deficit.

I think the gentleman has raised a good point. Finger pointing is not going to do any good. Simple partisan rhetoric. Democrats have been as guilty as Republicans, but the gentleman raises a good point, and I hope he will continue. One further point on that. You started to point this out. Can the gentleman in the well tell the name of the person who sponsored and offered on this floor the President's fiscal year 1984 budget? There is silence because no one did.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe that no one wanted to do it, and finally there was some individual that offered it and it was defeated, I think it picked up one vote.

Mr. WISE. That is correct.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No one wanted to offer——

Mr. WALKER. Now are you willing to yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The largest budget-busting bill in the history of the Republic. I the gentleman said $180 billion.

Mr. WALKER. Since you are asking questions of us will you now yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will not yield.

Let me just give the gentleman a very startling statistic that I think must be pointed out. If the President is reelected, and we have 4 more years of this record-breaking deficit, the President's deficits, added together, let me say this once again, the President's deficits, added together, will exceed all deficits in the history of this Republic. From President George Washington to President Jimmy Carter, who has been pilloried here, Jimmy Carter has not been around the last 4 years. I am not here to defend him, but it seems all the ills of the world are his fault if we listen to our colleagues. I just wanted to raise that, because I think it is a startling, dramatic statistic that here, a man, the President of the United States, who wants a balanced budget amendment, has got such staggering statistics, that he is by far the biggest spender of all time.

He makes George McGovern, and Walter Mondale, who has been referred to as being the tightest fisted conservative in the history of our Republic, if you compare them.

I just wanted to throw that in and I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WISE. The gentleman makes an excellent point. Indeed, if I recall the legislative history for the 2 years that I have been here, and the first year that I got here, no Member of the other side would offer the President's budget. It simply was not voted on because no one would offer it in either body. In either body would they offer the President's budget.

Now, we come to fiscal year 1985, this year. Yes, the President's budget was put up on the floor and voted down overwhelmingly. Indeed, it was the House Democratic resolution, with $182 billion worth of cuts over a 3-year period, $182 billion of deficit reduction that won by a strong vote. The President's version, $100 billion, was voted down.

What they call the Rose Garden strategy, it did not go far enough. It was roughly $148 billion was also voted down. The gentleman is quite right when he says that there were many of us who supported the MacKay substitute, because that would have truly put us on pay as you go, and the amount of tax increase would have gone to reduce the deficit and not to pay for increased spending, basically in the military sector.

I think that is an important area too. The pay-as-you-go concept; so simple. If you are going to increase a program, you have to do one of two things: You either have to match up with a spending increase or a spending cut somewhere. Pay as you go. You cannot get a majority of Republicans to support it, why? You want to balance the budget, fine. Let us do it over the next couple of years, let us not hold out for some ephemeral balanced budget amendment that will take effect 7 or 8 years from now, which if the President of the United States had in effect in 1978, he would have fallen short of that mark today. I think that is a really telling statement. So the gentleman does a good job in bringing out those points.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know the gentleman has been very active on the issues of taxes and tax cuts and I think most economists in this country feel that the reason, that the reason that we have this terrific deficit, the reason we have a deficit that is going to triple from $750 billion in 1980 to $2.6 trillion in 1989, and by the way, it was the President of the United States that I recall before we adjourned, asked us to increase the debt limit on the national debt by $53 billion so that the Government could operate until August. Was it not the President that asked us to extend the debt? I voted no and I believe you did too.

Mr. WISE. I did also because I did not think that was responsible at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But at the same time, I think a week later the President was proposing a constitutional amendment on balancing the budget. This seems to me a bit incongruous. I know that he signed the debt limit bill appropriately the day that we Democrats were having our convention in San Francisco so that no news would be reported that he had signed that debt limit bill.

Mr. WISE. Do you remember the other bill that he signed the same day with absolutely no news coverage so that there would be no attention given to it? The tax increase. The tax increase that this President was quietly pushing and advocating, and which was part of the Republican Rose Garden strategy and was part of the downpayment on the deficit was the tax increase. It was passed by a bipartisan majority of both House.

This is the President, that only a week or two ago in a press conference laughs at Walter Mondale for suggesting that there might have to be a tax increase. It kind of struck me as I was listening to the railing on this subject, the constant pilloring of Walter Mondale for even suggesting that there might have to be a tax increase, it is a bit interesting coming from this President. Because as I read the U.S. Constitution, the way you pass a tax increase, there is only one way. Congress votes by a majority of both bodies, it goes to the White House. The President can veto it. He can say no, we are not going to have a tax increase.

In 1981 the President gets his major tax cuts, roughly it breaks out to $750 billion worth of revenue lost while he is increasing spending $1.5 trillion all over the same period of 5 years. But he gets that.

Now we come to 1982. Deficits are beginning to build, and so what do we have in 1982 but the Tax Equity and Reform Act, it is a tax increase. He begins to get back some of those revenues. Does the President veto that? No, he signs it.

Now, we come to 1984, the Rose Garden strategy. This is the same President that says he is sure there will not be a tax increase, he is not considering it. What do we have in 1984? The Tax Reform Act; $50 billion of tax increases in certain areas; $13 billion in spending cuts. Part of the House budget resolution; part of the Senate resolution I might add.

□ 2000

Does this President veto it? No; he signs it very quietly without any attention, and then a week later he is out attacking people for talking about tax increases. That is the kind of rhetoric we have come to expect.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I think one of the most startling statistics is that the reason we have this deficit is threefold. It is very simple. First, the tax cuts, in which I think the Treasury lost close to $800 billion in revenues; increases in defense spending, once again exceeding close to $300 billion; and we are still paying for those $400 hammers. The Pentagon, I think, is still doing that.

And if I recall correctly, it is Democrats who are offering amendments to improve the procurement practices of the Defense Department that have a number of provisions that relate to cost overruns, and they want to stop those.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I think what we do need is some clarification on those tax cuts.

Once again I turn to my colleague. Is it not correct that if an American made over $50,000 in this Kemp-Roth tax cut, his taxes were reduced significantly? Is that not correct?

Mr. WISE. If you are talking about a figure of $80,000 or more, his tax savings are somewhere around $3,200 or $3,500.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. And if you are under $50,000, I believe there is hardly any tax cut at all. There is no tax cut at all, is there?

Mr. WISE. In terms of benefits lost, you actually end up losing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And I believe if you are in the bracket of $15,000 and below, you kind of get hit very hard.

So it seems to me that is what happens with the Kemp-Roth tax cut. I have not found too many in my town meetings in my district who disagree, and I have had about 300 since my election.

I have asked the question, "How many here in this room or in this town have benefited from these tax cuts?" And perhaps I have had maybe 2 people out of 300 town meetings that have basically seen how good these tax cuts have been.

They have benefited the rich, and they benefit corporations.

I think Vice President Mondale, who spoke at the Democratic Convention, spoke the truth. He said that we are going to need a revision of our taxes, we are going to need tax reform; perhaps it is going to be a tax increase.

Well, we Democrats have proposed a Bradley-Gephardt reform tax which calls for an equality of our tax system, which calls for progressive rate tax increases, so that all taxpayers pay equally. This is what we Democrats have supported. We have supported provisions that eliminate many of these tax loopholes for many of the big corporations and those in the upper income brackets that make lawyers and accountants rich.

I think that is the reality. The Democratic Party platform talks about tax equity, the Bradley-Gephardt plan of tax equality, and I think we should very clearly stand up for that. We are proud of that. I think Vice President Mondale talked about reality. We have got to do something about taxes.

The President refuses to do anything about taxes. All he wants to do is—you remember that quote that says we should eliminate all taxes on corporations? I believe he said that about a year ago. That is his idea of tax reform. He thinks that will create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I know our colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY] is here. He is an economist and has been one of the leaders in our fight to reduce the deficit as a freshman group of Congressmen. There are about 50 of us who meet once a week to try to find ways that we can cut this deficit. Our colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, has been one of our leaders, and he is an expert.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman for some of his observations.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. The present administration's rhetoric has been almost perpendicular to its actions. We have had a President who continues to call for a balanced budget while asking us, the Congress, to endorse and fund the most out-of-balance budget in the history of this Republic.

As the gentleman in the well pointed out, the debt runup under the current policies will just about double the national debt in 5 years. The ratio of debt to income is now exceeding 1.0, which is a very dangerous level.

The fact is that when this administration came into power, it had a policy and promised the Nation that it would both cut taxes and reduce spending and also would reduce regulation, and that it would work with monetary authorities to provide a coherent policy. Unfortunately, each one of these facts except possibly the reduction of regulation has directly countervened the promise.

Have we reduced spending? No, this administration has proposed constantly increased spending. In fact, we have been witnessing one of the most rapid increases in spending this Nation has ever seen.

I would like to point out to the gentleman in the well and to my colleagues across the aisle that when this administration came into power, spending was approximately 20 percent of GNP while revenues were approximately 18 percent of GNP. I am sorry. I beg your pardon. I mean to say that revenues were 20 percent of GNP and spending was about 22 percent of GNP, for about a 2-percent deficit of GNP.

Historically, this Nation has run about 1 percent at worst, except in a few moments of economic downturn when, with the countercyclical forces of Government, the unemployment compensation and other spending that is necessary to cushion a downturn, the fact that taxes were lost produced larger budgets. But generally it was about a 1-percent at maximum deficit. The Carter administration was beginning to experience a downturn, and that was about 2 percent.

Now, the current policy has us at spending 24 percent of GNP, but revenues have dropped to 18 percent of GNP. Spending has not been reduced by this administration as a percent of GNP. Everything is going up all the time, so it is very easy to look at this in ratio terms. But revenues have fallen. We have had basically Government by subtraction.

The theory is that if we take away enough money from the Government, we will stop its appetite for spending. But that has not happened. The President has constantly proposed increased spending in a number of areas, and his 1985 budget proposed almost no cuts at all. There have been a number of domestic spending cuts in the 1981 and 1982 period, and some of those were probably necessary. Tightening up was necessary. But the President and the other side of the aisle in this House have basiscally given up on further domestic cuts. But they are living with and we are all living with a grossly distorted fiscal policy which has cut revenues at the same time that spending has gone up. In fact, we are in a period of the most rapid military spending increase this Nation has ever seen.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] spoke earlier and excoriated President Johnson for not putting on a tax to pay for the spending surge in Vietnam, and I think the gentleman has a point. But he should look at his own administration when we have not put on a tax to cover the spending on the military surge we are now experiencing. We are spending more today in real terms on military than we did at the height of the Vietnam war. That is in real terms. Take out price effects, use inflation as a deflator, and we are spending more today on military than we did in 1968, 1969, and 1970 at the height of the Vietnam war, which killed 28,000 Americans and 2 million Asians. We are spending more on military then we did at that time, but we have systematically cut revenues to pay for it instead of adding revenues.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman will have plenty of time at the end.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the gentleman refuse to yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have the time, and I do refuse to yield, very simply because the gentlemen have had their say. They have had their hour. Now we will have our hour, and I think what my colleague is saying is very important.

I know that my colleague has a great deal of expertise also in the international area, and I would hope that in our discussion he would touch on the trade deficit and another very glaring example of misplaced priorities that I just wanted to toss out to the gentleman that I hope he will discuss: foreign aid. We have a foreign aid budget of about $14 billion this year, and yet on our Federal aid to education we spend $13 billion. I think that is a misplaced priority.

We have the International Monetary Fund where the President and the Republicans want to bail out these huge banks to give Latin American countries and African countries and all these countries around the world loans to pay us back money that we have loaned them.

□ 2010

They want to continue to bail out these big banks. They are the ones that are going to be hurt if they are not paid back, but it is the American taxpayer that we hear from. I have received more mail on this subject and it is on Republican initiatives, the President's initiatives, I do not know what it is, but it seems that he has a great deal of respect for these fiscal policies for these International Monetary Fund operations that are part of this effort that are bankrupting this country.

I would like to just very briefly yield to my friend, the gentleman from Montana, who is an expert on the issue of education. I recall in the last few days there have been Republican amendments to cut education, cut it by 5 percent, 3 percent, cut vocational education, college age students, student aid, funds for Indian education, for bilingual education, for college education, they are ready to make those cuts for future investment. When it comes to military spending and reducing waste, they are not ready to do that, but I know my colleague speaks with authority because he is on the Committee on Education and Labor.

I would like to yield to my colleague, the Honorable PAT WILLIAMS.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for calling on me.

You know, there are expenditures that this Congress and this President make or support which are questionable. I do not think there is any question about that. Our colleagues on the other side of the aisle would agree and I think the three or four of us here today would agree with that, but it seems to me that throughout American history that particularly the American people have understood that there is one expenditure of funds which would more appropriately be referred to as an investment. I guess the slogan has always been an investment in America's future, but it probably is that, and those dollars, be they Federal, State, or local, which are spent on the education of our people, many times spent on our young Americans, but quite often in the past we have begun to also focus on the education of adult Americans who we find have reached adulthood without having benefited from appropriate experience during their school years. These people are willing to come back and try to become better informed citizenry.

If there is one great tragedy I think with this administration, it has been in its lack of appropriate attention to education.

Now, there is no question but that the President has focused on the schools. He did it in his campaign for the Presidency, his successful campaign, and he has done it since. But is it not interesting that the President's focus on the schools has been this. It has been that schools are in error. Teachers cannot teach. Students cannot learn.

The real fact is that American youngsters are better educated than any other youngsters on Earth. They are better educated to take their place in this society than any people in any nation in the long pull of civilization, and yet this President has consistently and without exception pointed out only education's deficiencies.

Now, let me say to my friend that Americans have also without exception always demanded that their schools which they support and for which they have always been willing to pay be the best schools anywhere on Earth and when Americans believe that their schools have slipped below the level of excellence, they have rightly demanded improvement, but that is not what this President has focused upon. He has focused only upon education's failures and not talked about the great American success story which is education.

Then he has tragically backed up his philosophy with efforts to cut education's budget and, believe me, as a member of the Committee on Education as well as the Committee on the Budget, I can tell you very truthfully that education's budget has been cut and cut dramatically by this President. It is one of the great tragedies of his Presidency, and I believe it is a mistake for which the American people will not forgive Ronald Reagan, and that is his efforts, unintentional, but his efforts which have nonetheless resulted in steps backward for America's schools and America's education system.

Again I want to thank my friend for calling upon me and want to commend him and my other colleagues who are here speaking about these important issues and commend them particularly for their focus upon the deficit.

Let us face facts. Our party, this great Democratic Party of ours, has too often in the past misused the deficit. I think it is time to face facts and say that our party has not been as critical of deficit spending as we should have been often during these past 20 years; however, never, never in the history of this Nation in the 200-plus years has any President so led this Nation into deficit spending, red ink, and brought it as close to the verge, to the threshold of fiscal bankruptcy, as has this President, this Republican President.

Did he intend to do so? Of course not. It is just as poll after poll after poll of the American people demonstrate. Republicans simply do not know how to manage this Nation's economy. This President came up with economic adventurism, half-baked supply side trickle-down schemes, not intentionally, but which have resulted in the greatest deficits in history.

Facts are facts. Republicans simply do not know how to manage this economy and keep inflation and unemployment at some basic parity. That was true tragically under Eisenhower. It was true under Nixon. It is true as never before in history under Reagan. It was true under Herbert Hoover. It was true under Calvin Coolidge and one can go back at least as far as current eyes can see and the same is true.

Again, I thank my friend and colleague.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr Speaker, I thank my colleague.

I just would like to point out once again what we are saying here today is that there is plenty of blame to share and we have got to have bipartisan solutions.

I am not going to yield, besides the fact that my colleagues have had months and months of their vitriolic rhetoric, is that when my colleague was making important points, they were cackling, they were laughing. They were being disrespectful and I think in this House, which we all elected to represent the people in this country, I do not think any Member should be accorded any kind of disrespect.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. For that reason, I am not going to yield.

I would like to visit a little bit about the issue about the consequences of this deficit. I think my colleague, the gentleman from Montana, started talking about that. What are the consequences in human pain of this deficit? I have some statistics here and my colleagues will amplify it. By October of 1982, 890 school districts in this country had been forced to cut back on special education activities.

Further, 150,000 working families had lost their eligibility for Government-supported day care which enabled them to hold jobs, and over 660,000 children in this country had lost medicaid coverage and 3.5 million children—3.5 million children in this country, about half from low-income families had been eliminated from the School Lunch Program, 3.5 million. Yet supposedly if you make these cuts in domestic spending, in education, in health care, in Social Security, where Republicans have proposed Social Security cuts, they say that we are going to eliminate the deficit by hurting the poor and the middle class.

Those are some statistics I have about the consequences of this deficit.

I would like to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin. I know he has others.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

You know, in ancient Rome it was said that a man could sell himself into slavery and have a pretty good week—a man could sell himself into slavery and have a pretty good week, and that is about the situation we find ourselves in.

We are now in a position where 40 percent of our borrowing to pay for the current deficit that this administration has asked us to endure is capital borrowed from overseas.

□ 2020

That will have to be paid back and be paid back with a great deal of interest. And that will be a net subtraction from the real incomes of our children and our grandchildren. It means that we are increasingly dependent on foreigners for capital. It means that the productive earning of this Nation as it grows and hopefully will continue the growth path, although the current boom cannot continue, but as it keeps on growing that an increasing percentage of that growth in the future will be siphoned to foreigners, overseas to foreigners. It means we will be more and more dependent on the vagaries of international currency markets for our prosperity.

We are becoming a debtor nation, much like the Latin American countries have become. And if the current trends continue, by about 1987 we will be borrowing, we will owe more to foreigners than we are owed by foreigners. We will be in a net negative position for the first time in the history of this Nation, gentlemen, since our colonial period.

The implications of that policy are frightening in terms of the ability to control our own economy, our own monetary policy, because we truly will have lost the control of our currency and our own fiscal policy, because the rate of deficit under those conditions will be determined tremendously by the interest charges determined in a foreign financial market.

So those are the international consequences which our colleagues seem to be so blithly ignorant of. They would rather talk about the ideological history of the last several decades. And I think it is very tempting to do that, to have a history lesson here night after night.

I would prefer that we look forward down the path that we are heading. The Democrats did a lot of things inappropriately just as the Republicans did in the past. But the real question is where are we going in the future.

Are we going to mortgage this country's financial and fiscal system to foreigners, which is exactly what we are doing under these policies, with no discussion by this administration of that very dangerous consequence, a consequence if our President had done it I hope you would be on your feet in a very angry way. But we see no criticisms.

Mr. WALKER. I have a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOODY. After a series of diatribes about the particular downside in our society.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not within the traditions of the House that when gentlemen on the floor are engaging in debate, and engaging in debate in a way in which they make constant references to particular individuals that they would then yield to those individuals in order to be able to reply to the charges and statements that are being made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. SPRATT]. There is no rule requiring that a Member yield to another Member when that Member has the floor.

Mr. WALKER. Further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The parliamentary inquiry has been responded to.

Mr. WALKER. Further parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe we should follow the rules of the House. I believe I had explained my position for not yielding, and it is based on similar treatment that I have received on the floor of this House when in this kind of special order with I believe one of the three gentlemen present I asked to be recognized and I do not recall that I was recognized. In fact, I was not recognized.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY. It is not true that one of the favored debating techniques is that when your opponent is making a particulary telling point that you jump up to your feet and press a parliamentary point and thus losing the flow of the argument of your opponent.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I am asking the gentleman in the well.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will not yield. I have made my position clear, and I think once again the other side is engaging in disruption and disrespect. We are making our point. They had an hour before. For the last 9 months they have had hours and hours of taxpayers' time, extolling their virtues. This is the second day that responsible, moderate members of the Democratic Party had asked to speak and we are here to address the House and the Chamber, and we want to be heard, and out of this respect I would ask our colleagues on the other side to let us continue.

I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MOODY. I thank the gentleman. It would be I think instructive if we were accorded the same privilege that we accorded them.

I hope we could have debates. But I think there is also a time to allow a gentleman from the other side to continue his statement without continual interruptions. And I think the gentleman and everyone who is watching knows exactly what I am referring to.

I would address the gentleman in the well, my friend and colleague from New Mexico, Mr. RICHARDSON, on this matter. The second most dangerous part of the deficit path we are on is not only the foreign implications, which are truly frightening, but the fact that we are siphoning off a greater and greater portion of our national revenues, tax revenues, hard-earned tax revenues simply to pay the interest charges on the debt.

Since we have embarked on the current fiscal policy of the Gramm-Latta budget policies, the cuts, the drastic cuts and devastation of the revenue base, and which has led to this yawning gap between expenditures and revenues with no serious attempt by this administration to curtail spending, but only to curtail revenues, we have seen higher and higher percentages of the spending side go simply to pay for the interest charges.

At the current rate, by 1988, 42 cents on every dollar collected in the personal and corporate income tax will go simply to pay interest charges, simply to pay interest charges, 42 cents on every dollar that your constituents and my constituents pay will go simply to pay interest charges.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will yield, isn't the statistic also correct that every year just in the interest payments they exceed over $100 billion per year, just in interest, money down the tube we will never see? Is that statistic correct?

Mr. MOODY. That is correct. In fact, let me give the gentleman the precise number. In 1984 as a result of these policies this country will siphon off $108 billion of our hard-earned tax moneys just to pay interest charges on these mounting deficits.

Let me point out to the gentleman in the well for comparison purposes, $108 billion for interest charges exceeds the total amount of discretionary domestic spending. Let me put that in context.

Of the total Federal budget, approximately 82 percent is nondiscretionary. That is, it is locked in from previous commitments, either pensions, entitlements in the health field, military retirement, Social Security, plus multiyear contracts in civilian and military activities.

The building of a battleship requires a number of years you must lock yourself in on a multiyear contract. If you take all of those entitlements, formula driven spending, and lock in spending programs which are down to a mere 18 percent of the budget, of that 18 percent of the budget $104 billion represents total domestic spending. That is for the Coast Guard, the Federal Courts, the FBI, the National Parks, drug enforcement, pollution control, the EPA, aid to education, the Pell grants, and everything we want government to do in the law enforcement, managerial, housekeeping functions of government, whether it is our national resources or whatever.

I say to the gentleman in the well this is only $104 billion. I say only because it is not even as large as the interest payment we will now be spending on this debt, which is $108 billion.

Curiously enough, if we were to eliminate government as we know it except for military spending, eliminate government as we know it except for military spending and entitlements, pensions, et cetera, those locked in costs, it we were to eliminate the Coast Guard, abolish the Federal Courts, close the FBI, and end all drug enforcement, end all pollution control, we will only have cut the current deficit in half because these discretionary spending, domestic, not social, domestic add up to less than half the budget deficit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If my colleague will yield, so what he is saying is this money we are paying for interest is taking up money that could be paid for other programs?

Mr. MOODY. Or could be used to reduce taxes.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman yield just for a moment on that point?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. Just following up on the gentleman from Wisconsin's point, the tragic thing is that all of the money that was saved from the Gramm-Latta cuts in 1981, all of the domestic savings cuts, all of the domestic spending cuts that were made, gutted programs in education and things like that, all of that money that was saved from those cuts is now more than made up in and eaten up by increasing interest on the national debt.

□ 2020

Somewhere around $40 billion a year now simply goes to pay interest on the national debt, and more than that. So that is the tragedy of the deficit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is going to happen, what is the President going to do after August when money runs out and the $50 billion that we approved before we recessed basically runs out, will the President, do you assume he will ask us for another increase in the debt limit?

Mr. WISE. Presumably the President has no choice. He will be back as he has been back several times, asking for an increase in the national debt limit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And you do recall that the President has been I think even last week in his speech, seven priorities; one of them was a balanced budget amendment. I wonder if he is going to do those at the same time that he is going to discuss to increase the national debt and how he can justify it, too.

I think this is the smokes and mirrors that the American public has to see, that we have a President that is very good with the media, he is able to get up and explain his case on prime time, anytime he wants, but the reality is different. I think this is the cradle of our party.

If you look at the Democratic platform, there are no big promises, no big programs, it is a moderate platform, some have even called it a conservative platform that deals with reality. It is one of these liberal welfare state platforms.

I would like to read what the Republican platform says. I think all they are going to do is attack us as our colleagues the last 8 months have been doing. I think the three of us have gotten up here and said we have made mistakes, the deficit is the cause of many administrations, Democratic Congresses and Republican Senates, but we are ready on a bipartisan basis to try to deal with the deficit.

If there is going to be blame, that it should be spread around equally. But I think if you listen to our colleagues and the President who dominate the media, who control the Senate, who refuse to meet with the House Budget Committee on deficit reduction plans; they do not want to meet; so if they continue to stonewall the Senate Republicans, we will have no deficit reduction plan passed this year and the President will get what he wants on increases in military spending and domestic spending reductions and another $200 billion deficit.

We will not have addressed this problem because under instructions from the President, the Senate Republicans have refused to meet.

Am I stating something rhetoric, or is it facts?

Mr. MOODY. I think the gentleman is correctly excited. The problem is not that any one party is to blame. The problem is that the party that is claiming fiscal responsibility is the one that at the moment is blocking progress. That is the tragedy of the country.

It sounds very partisan to stand up here and say that, but that is the bold, blunt truth.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it not correct that my colleague from Wisconsin and my colleague from West Virginia, did we not vote for the MacKay amendment which was the toughest of all the budget-cutting deficit reduction plans? And I think we had 102 votes. I did not see too many of our Republican colleagues voting for it.

I do not think, maybe there were 10, 20, we should check that; but I know we did not get over 102 votes. This was a plan that basically said, let's freeze domestic and military spending, with military spending growing at 3 to 4 percent. I believe that is the accurate statistic.

And I think the savings over 3 years were over $200 billion. That was the toughest one on record. And I think if we just look at how people voted and who voted for it, and if the American public does that, they will see who is the most responsible in this year, in this election year, for reducing the biggest problem we have and that is the deficit.

We have touched on the consequences of the deficit and I hope that in the minutes ahead we can deal more with that, the impact on Social Security, on women, on senior citizens, on middle class families.

We want to stress the values of the middle class, of patriotism, of the family. I think it is a case that we made very starkly at our convention. And we said, "Yes, we have warts, but we are ready to take the issues at hand and debate them openly and be realistic" and if we are going to call for a revision of the Tax Code or tax reform, so be it, because if we are going to reduce the deficit, if we are going to get out of this economic mess, first of all we have got to put brakes to our military and domestic spending and I think the three of us here are ready to go for a 1-year freeze immediately, we have got to control medical costs, we have got to do something long range about the growth of entitlement programs so that they do not hurt people but we put a brake to some areas that perhaps in the months ahead we need to address.

And lastly, what we need to do is reach a bipartisan consensus and you reach bipartisan consensuses by meeting, by Republicans and Democrats getting together, not engaging in yelling and vitriolic attacks, but by the conference committees of both houses, of the House and Senate; the budget committees meeting and talking; the Republican Budget Committee does not want to meet.

And we will adjourn in another week and then we go into the Republican Convention. Time is of the essence. But they do not even want to meet.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman yield on that?

You know, I think the President makes a good point when he says we do not want to have tax increases unless we are committed to spending cuts. Let me point out to the gentlemen and ask if you would agree, the tax increases passed in this House and in both Houses on a bipartisan basis and quietly, and quietly indeed signed by the President; that was the first shoe.

The second shoe to drop would be the spending cuts. But where are the spending cuts stuck? Where are the spending cuts stuck? The spending cuts that the President is asking for are stuck in the Senate.

We have asked for $182 billion deficit reduction; about 120 of it in spending cuts. But where is it stuck? It is stuck because the Senate will not sit down with the House to compromise on the military component and therefore any other component, because it is all a package of the spending cuts.

So how can the President or anybody call for taxes only with spending cuts and then at the same time instruct the other House to not meet to discuss spending cuts? I ask for a little honesty in Government coming from the White House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And I think we are talking about defense and our colleagues from the other side like to paint us as if we are antidefense, antimilitary. We are not. We want a strong defense.

I think many of us have supported military pay increases and upgrading of our conventional forces and to do something about our combat readiness. If you look at the recent House Appropriations Committee report, they concluded that we are not combat-ready.

Let us put funds in that area, let us put funds to insure that our draft is working, that our young men and women are protected with the best weapons, conventional; that we want to have a strong defense. Nobody is saying that. But we are ready once again to say that let us have increases in defense according to plan, cost-efficiently, in a way that eliminates all of these hammers that cost over $400 and this massive waste of spare parts and these cost overruns, that the American people are sick of reading about.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman yield on that? It is very important that we cut the waste in military spending. I think our friends on the Republican side would agree with that. That is not really in dispute although unfortunately the White House has not pushed that as nearly as hard as it should, unfortunately it fell to this House through the Berkley Bedell amendment to get some real teeth.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe he is a member of our party. So once again we are not deficient in that area as they like to point out.

Mr. MOODY. Yes; unfortunately it had to fall to this branch to do what the White House should have done at least this House is on record now with bipartisan support, although it was democratically initiated to put teeth in the spare parts procurement cost containment program.

The problem is and many analysts would agree, of either party, that we have gone on a military spending surge which is not stressing readiness, it is not stressing operational efficiency and preparedness to fight anywhere at any time, depending on brush wars or local conflict.

We have gone on a spending binge which is emphasizing doomsday hardware. The MX missile is one dramatic example. But it is only one of many examples.

These are things which, if we ever use them, would be basically the end of our civilization. We have overlayered, overlayered and overlayered again on this high-tech highly explosive hardware. I would point out to the gentleman that we now have the explosive power, nuclear war explosive power over a thousandfold all of the explosives that were detonated in World War II, including Hiroshima, Nagasaki atomic bombs. Multiply that by a thousand and that is the weaponry waiting to be detonated.

A nuclear winter and other conditions would probably obliterate civilization. My point is that is where we are pouring the money; additionally higher and higher.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Once again we are talking about dialog and discussion. It is not our President, the first President in history that in his first 3½ years as leader has not met with a Soviet leader to discuss arms control?

□ 2040

Now, I do not trust the Russians. I do not think any of us do. But at least we can talk and start making plans to end some of this nuclear madness, as my colleague stated.

But we do not even talk. We are not ready to submit some serious arms control proposals.

Mr. MOODY. And my point is that asking for military restraint, asking for reasonable spending limits on military, is not asking for weakness, because operational preparedness is not what is being cut, suggested to be cut.

Mr. RICHARDSON. So I guess the tactic of our colleagues in the other party is that the President will not meet with the Soviets, the Senate Republicans will not meet with the House bipartisan Budget Committee. Republicans and Democrats, to discuss ways to reduce the deficit. And who suffers? It is the American people.

Those are the facts. The facts that meetings do not take place are facts. They are not rhetoric. They are facts.

Once again, all we are trying to do is point this out and say that over the years we Democrats have been to blame for a lot of deficit problems, but Republicans have, too. But if you look at the last 4 years, all of our great liberal spenders that our colleagues talk about, George McGovern, Walter Mondale, I know I have been pilloried here, we do not come close to the biggest budget buster of all time. And with all due respect, that is our President.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman yield on the point he made a second ago?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY. Parliamentary government is easy, in many ways, because you fuse the executive branch and the legislative branch of Government. You are both of the same party. That is the British system, and that is the system in many countries.

The tragedy here is that we do not carry out what is mandated, implicitly mandated, by our Founding Fathers. We have a divided Government, the executive and legislative branches. We have Government by non-meetings, Government by stalemate, Government by refusal at the present time.

We are stuck on a spot in our spending reduction program which I do not know how we are going to get off of until the President rejoins his responsibility under this kind of government, unlike a parliamentary government, and meets with the other body.

The President is refusing to allow spending cuts negotiations to proceed. There is nobody willing to refute that of any serious merit. Nobody of any serious analysis, of any serious standing in this country, will refute that statement. The President is refusing to move forward on the spending cuts because he is afraid he will have to negotiate down on the military spending component of the total spending package.

There is no other way of discussing it, there is no other way of describing it. And it is a tragedy that this form of government, which requires at a moment like this that the executive branch and the legislative branch work together, it is a tragedy under our system of government that this is not taking place.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I control the time, and I will yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to join again in this——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the phrase "Big Spender," captured the essence of Ronald Reagan's attack of the Democrats during his campaign for President 4 years ago. When Reagan was elected President, the Republicans promised a balanced budget by 1984. Instead, the budget deficit exploded from $59.6 billion in 1980 to $189 billion in 1984. And, now they are saying they will need another 4 years to hold true on their promise. Under current policies, the deficits are projected to rise to over $300 billion by 1989. The national debt will more than triple, from $715 billion in 1980 to $2,638 billion in 1989.

For the first time in our modern history, we face a fundamental imbalance between spending and taxing policies. The first three Reagan budgets are powerful testimony to this disruption and distortion. By October 1982, 890 school districts had been forced to cut back on special education activities, 150,000 working families had lost their eligibility for Government-supported daycare, which enabled them to hold jobs, over 660,000 children had lost medicaid coverage, and 3.5 million children, about half from low-income families, had been eliminated from the school lunch program. Yet the heavy cuts in human potential and economic justice did not reduce the towering deficits. The money saved was merely shifted to the military programs in the budget, to the administration's 5-year, $1.6 trillion armament spree.

By running up record debt and long-term growth, Reaganomics leaves only a destructive legacy for the future. And now, almost 4 years later, it is evident the real "Big Spender" sits in the White House as we speak.

If President Reagan is reelected, the debt his administration will create in 8 years will surpass the debt accumulated during the entire history of the United States prior to his administration.

The Reagan administration has promoted three distinct policies that have crippled our economy and hopes for the future. Under his administration we have been witness to uncontrolled massive Federal budget deficits, a shortfall of public and private investment to spur growth and expand opportunity, and the deadly buildup of nuclear weapons.

Uncontrolled massive Federal budget deficits best describes the policies President Reagan has implemented since his inauguration.

Reagan promised a tax program that would be across the board and fair. Instead, only corporations and the wealthy received significant tax cuts. Taxpayers with incomes above $50,000 had their Federal tax burdens cut significantly. But, after account is taken of inflation and higher payroll taxes, the tax burdens taxpayers in the middle income range of $15,000 to $50,000 stayed about the same; poorer taxpayers saw their tax burdens actually increase.

Reagan and the Republicans promised sustained economic growth. By 1984, Republicans promised a GNP 15½-percent higher than in 1980. Instead, real GNP fell nearly 2 percent in 1982—a postwar record—and in 1984 is up only 9.9 percent. The shortfall in output—about $500 billion—amounts to some $2,000 for every man, woman, and child in America.

In 1980, the average unemployment rate was 7 percent. By 1984, Reagan promised, unemployment would be down to 6.4 percent. During the Reagan recession, however, unemployment reached a postwar record of 10.7 percent—fully 11.9 million people were looking for work. Unemployment in 1984 is still expected to be above the 1980 level, at 7.6 percent.

The budget deficits and the high interest rates they produce have increased the cost of dollars compared to foreign currencies by more than 38 percent since January 1981. This has hobbled American exports and helped foreign imports, crippling industries such as autos and steel at the cost of 2 million jobs. The merchandise trade deficit, which was $36 billion in 1980, rose to $69 billion in 1983 and is expected to reach $130 billion or more this year.

Between 1982 and 1985 the United States will borrow $250 billion abroad, turning us from the world's strongest creditor to a net debtor nation.

A shortfall of public and private investment to spur growth and expand opportunity is identified in Reagan's policies toward Social Security, health, education, and equal opportunity for women.

In less than 50 years, the Social Security System has dramatically improved the lot of older people, the totally disabled, widows and motherless and fatherless children. But, in the 1981 Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, the Reagan administration succeeded in making permanent cuts in the Social Security Program. The cuts the President and his supporters made in the budget reconciliation process totaled $20 billion over 5 years.

On May 7, 1982, Reagan endorsed a Senate Republican proposal that would have cut Social Security by $6 billion in fiscal 1983 and $17 billion in each of the next 2 years, a total of $40 billion. Again, opposition overcame the Reagan Republican instincts to target Social Security beneficiaries for sacrifice after sacrifice. The proposed $40 billion "savings" disappeared from the Senate's first budget resolution before the resolution was approved.

Reagan health policy is characterized by proposals to increase the cost of health services to the elderly under medicare, reduce the Federal matching rate for medicaid services, and mandate that the poor share in the cost for even basic health services research, and place unwarranted reliance upon competition in the marketplace to curb rising health care costs. The President's response to the crisis in health care costs is to put the burden on the patients.

Four and one-half percent of a $12.7 billion GNP went for health care in 1950, whereas 10.5 percent of a $322 billion GNP goes for that purpose today.

Health care costs—now $1,325 per person per year—jumped 50 percent between 1979 and 1982, and the figure is expected to reach $2,395 by 1990.

About 12 percent of all Americans, or one in eight, have serious problems in access to adequate health care. One million families have had at least one member refused care for financial reasons; this includes 208,000 families that are uninsured.

During his first term, President Reagan has: cut real Federal spending for education by $6 billion, or 25 percent, slashed the value of student aid for college students by 21 percent, reduced the Federal Government's share of public elementary and secondary school financing to 6.4 percent—the lowest level since the 1960's—and proposed eliminating the Department of Education.

The effect of the Reagan adminstration budget cuts on social programs has worsened the lot of women and children. Senator JOSEPH BIDEN tells us that "the very day the Census Bureau was announcing that the poverty level had reached the highest point in 15 years, Ronald Reagan—the very man who savaged the food stamp program, the man who mutilated the school lunch program and cut nutrition programs for infants and the elderly—was announcing the formation of a task force to determine why there is hunger in America."

In 1981, 62 percent of all women 18 to 64 were working. More than one-half of all children, including 1.5 million children under 6, have working mothers. Yet, working women make less than men in every job at every education level and for women who head families—one-half of all families in poverty—the budget cuts will mean a faster decline into deeper poverty, less child care, less nutritional assistance, fewer health services. For those who are seperated, divorced, widowed or abandoned by their husbands, it means less job training, less support for their children's education, and more difficulty getting legal services.

The third Reagan policy and perhaps the one he has most strongly advocated is the deadly buildup of nuclear weapons. President Reagan's 5-year $1.6 trillion armament spree which I stated earlier is an example of how our defense focus is an investment in quantity and not necessarily quality; we are not simply buying wisely, we are buying more. The rapid increase in the military budget—with most nondefense domestic programs growing only slightly or being cut—means that defense spending will continue to absorb a larger share of both the GNP and total Federal spending. In fiscal year 1980, defense outlays represented about 5.2 percent of the GNP and 23.2 percent of total Federal outlays. By fiscal year 1985, defense spending would increase under the administration's budget to 6.7 percent of the GNP and 29.4 percent of total Federal expenditures. The President's budget projects that by fiscal year 1989, defense spending will represent 7.6 percent of the GNP and 34.5 percent of the Federal budget, both about 50 percent higher than in fiscal year 1980.

The Republican priorities for America's defense budget include:

"Star Wars" defenses—billions wasted in pursuit of fantasy: President Reagan announced his intention in March 1983 to shift American strategy from reliance on traditional deterrence to a reliance on exotic new defenses. Ignoring strategic logic and the advice of many of his advisers, the President launched a $5 billion research and development program for a defense system which could cost over $20 billion by the year 1990. If pursued, such a program would provoke serious instability in the U.S.-Soviet nuclear balance, violate the antiballistic missile defense treaty, and cost the taxpayers possibly a trillion dollars even as it proved to be thoroughly ineffectual in protecting the American people.

The MX missile—a study in confusion: The Reagan administration threw out the Carter administration basing system and cut the MX program in half. More than 2 years after taking office, the Reagan administration finally approved a plan devised by a bipartisan commission to place 100 MX missiles in existing, targetable Minuteman silos. After years of proclaiming that the deployment of fixed, land-based missiles in the United States constituted a dangerous "window of vulnerability," the administration firmly repudiated its own rhetoric and declared the window closed.

Revival of chemical weapons: The United States has not produced chemical weapons since 1969, in recognition of the limited military utility and high risk for the civilian casualties associated with these weapons. The Reagan administration, however, has proposed to modernize U.S. chemical warfare capabilities by spending $17 million for production of chemical nerve gas weapons.

GARY HART sums up the Reagan administration well in saying, "the Reagan administration all along cloaked its dark agenda—the shift of resources from people to guns—in the rhetoric of 'balanced budgets.' "

The first consequence of Reaganomics was to plunge the economy into its deepest recession since the Great Depression. The second consequence has been record budget deficits.

The Democratic goals are to attack the monstrous Federal deficit with a concerted effort to eliminate the structural imbalance between the Government's spending obligations and its revenues, replace the present unfair, complex loophole-ridden Tax Code with a new and easily understood fair tax, and to control the explosion in health-care costs which, left unchecked, will bankrupt the medicare program and put decent health care beyond the means of ordinary Americans.

We must tighten the belt on spending for the defense budget. Our first step is to review the national security and defense needs. It has been estimated that at least $20 billion in military authorizations could have been eliminated from the 1983 Reagan budget without any loss in military effectiveness, there may be more than that can be eliminated today. There are many alternatives to the current situation.

Improve our conventional forces so that nuclear weapons remain our ultimate deterrent, not our first line of defense.

Conduct serious, sustained negotiations to limit nuclear arms.

Achieve more rational sharing of the defense burden with our allies.

The necessary modernization of our military forces can be achieved by buying at more economical rates. This will require difficult choices among the large number of systems currently in production or ready to be procured. We can make these choices prudently by making clear and realistic estimates of the military threats we face and by concentrating our resources on weapons that will counter these threats. Reagan administration defense planning turns common sense upside down by first choosing weapons and only then developing rationale for their use.

We must work toward a "health for our future" plan—premised upon full health and nutrition programs for every American child and controlling medical costs for every American. These are but a few alternatives to the current health care crisis:

Expanding the medicare prospective payment system to cover all hospital patients.

Enacting the health insurance for the unemployed bill passed by the House in 1983. This bill would require employees to continue providing at least minimal health insurance coverage to laid-off workers for 90 days after layoff. It would also authorize up to $4 billion over 3 years for a temporary program of grants to the States for providing medical care to the millions of unemployed who have lost private health insurance coverage along with their jobs.

Increasing access to comprehensive prenatal and infant health care and nutrition, which are cost effective as well as humane.

Our children are the hope for the future. Education programs must not be cut off but rather given the chance to thrive. Here are a few alternatives to insure survival:

A renewed commitment to title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

New efforts to improve vocational education.

A renewed commitment to financial assistance for college students.

New efforts in the hard sciences to regain our competitive edge we must launch new efforts in science and math.

Women are an intricate part in the democratic process:

Democratic leaders are committed to the passage and ratification of the equal rights amendment—recently opposed once more by a large majority of House Republicans—to the concept of equal pay, to passage of the Women's Economic Equity Act to eliminate discriminatory practices in pensions, Social Security and improve options in child care, to changes in the Federal tax structure to improve the child care tax credit and lessen the marriage tax penalty.

A central difference between the two major political parties has been, and continues to be, the extent to which women are involved in decisionmaking and policy setting.

Democratic women play key roles in developing the party platform and participating in the party convention and carry out high-level responsibilities for national administrations. That degree of involvement resulted from the Democratic Party's commitment to equality. By contrast, there is no such degree of involvement by women in the Republican Party, where decisions and policy continue to be made by the white male power structure.

Simply put, the Reagan dream has become an American nightmare. What was once the land of opportunity has become the land of the poor, the tired, and the hungry.

POLICIES CONTRIBUTING TO POVERTY AMONG FAMILIES AND CHILDREN

(A Report Prepared by Hon. Harold Ford, Chairman, Way and Means Subcommittee on Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation; Hon. George Miller, Chairman, Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families; Hon. Leon Panetta, Chairman, Agriculture Subcommittee on Domestic Marketing, Consumer Relations, and Nutrition; Hon. Charles Rangel, Chairman, Ways and Means Subcommittee on Oversight; Hon. Henry Waxman, Chairman, Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health and Environment, August 3, 1984)

The budget, tax and economic policies of the past four years have taken a tremendous toll on millions of the most vulnerable American families—families with small children, families headed by women and families with elderly members struggling on fixed incomes.

One independent study after another provides overwhelming evidence that unfair budget cuts and a deliberate policy of fighting inflation with recession have hurt millions and forced many into poverty. The evidence is equally clear that the tax cuts have offered little to middle-income and to poor families. In fact, the tax burden of the poor has risen steadily over the past four years and new Census data shows that tax increases have forced millions of poor working families into poverty since 1980.

In a joint effort, several Committees of the House have reviewed studies on the status of safety net and the condition of people who are supposed to be protected by the safety net. The result is a tragic record of needless suffering.

POLICIES FORCING FAMILIES INTO POVERTY

In April 1984 the General Accounting Office analyzed the impact of the Reagan cuts in Aid to Families with Dependent Children and found that 493,000 low income families—including over a million children—lost income.

In July 1984 the Congressional Research Service released a study which concluded that in 1982, when overall poverty rose a full point from 14 to 15 percent, the AFDC cuts forced 560,000 people below the poverty line—approximately 300,000 of them children. The deep recession used to fight inflation caused an additional increase in poverty. The CRS study concluded that another 1,600,000 people were pushed into poverty by the 1982 recession.

The CRS study showed that the 1981 budget cuts increased poverty among female headed households by 3 percent. When the impact of the recession is included, poverty in female headed household increased by 5 percent.

While spending cuts reduced their disposable resources, the working poor also suffered a steadily rising tax burden. Data released by the Census Bureau in July 1984 shows the number of people in poverty after paying taxes increased by more than six million—a 19 percent increase between 1980 and 1982. This increase represents a million more people in poverty than accounted for in the official poverty rate, which only looks at pre-tax income.

Although the rising tax burden was entirely predictable in 1981, the 1981 tax bill did not address the problems of the working poor. In 1980 a family of four at the poverty line paid $460 in federal income and payroll taxes; in 1984 that same family paid $1,076. The tax burden of this family is expected to reach $1,160 next year.

July 1984 Census data on family income after taxes offers a dismal view of the economic status of female headed households and hispanic households. Female headed households with children lost $2.7 billion in income between 1981 and 1982, a loss of $429 for each household. Hispanic households lost approximately $1.87 billion, or $459 per family.

POLICIES INCREASE RISK OF MALNUTRITION AND HUNGER

An August 1983 Congressional Budget Office study of the impacts of the 1981 and 1982 budget cuts showed that spending on foodstamps was reduced 13 percent and that child nutrition services were cut 28 percent.

Foodstamp cuts reduced spending by $7 billion over four years according to CBO.

According to the Congressional Budget Office 900,000 people with net incomes below poverty but gross incomes above 130 percent of poverty lost their foodstamp benefits entirely. Nearly all of the 21.2 million foodstamp beneficiaries experienced a benefit reduction because of across-the-board benefit cuts. These cuts affected most of the seven million households that receive foodstamps. Seventy percent of foodstamp households are headed by women; 58 percent of all foodstamp households include children.

An analysis of the effects of changes in taxes and foodstamp benefits on a family of four at the poverty line shows federal tax burden rising 75 percent from 1980 to 1982 while spending cuts reduced real foodstamp benefits 17 percent during the same period.

On average foodstamp recipients have been getting poorer. According to official Department of Agriculture data 98 percent of all benefits go to households below poverty; 59 percent of all benefits go to families with incomes less than one-half the official poverty rate. The average gross income of households receiving foodstamps is $365 a month—$4,272 a year.

The 1981 budget cuts reduced child nutiriton programs by $1.5 billion a year. According to a GAO report and Department of Agriculture data, half a million fewer poor children are provided with lunches during the summer because the 1981 budget cuts eliminated funding for all summer lunch programs run by charitable organizations such as the YMCA, settlement houses, churches and other non-profit organizations. During the school year 3 million fewer children receive school lunches and half a million fewer children receive school breakfasts.

POLICIES INCREASE RISK OF ILLNESS IN FAMILIES

In an August 1983 study of the impact of the 1981 budget cuts, the Congressional Budget Office concluded that Medicaid, the health insurance program for the poor, had been cut 3 percent and that all other health programs had been cut 5 percent.

Medicaid is the major source of health care benefits for poor families. This year, Medicaid will cover roughtly 21 million people—nearly half are under 21 and nearly one-fourth are mothers. Budget cuts forced states to reduce the number of people served by Medicaid and to limit the types of health services covered. Thirty states actually eliminated one or more category of coverage that offered health services to children.

As the number of families in poverty increased during 1981 and 1982, the number of people eligible for Medicaid decreased. According to data from the Department of Health and Human Services, the number of people eligible for Medicaid coverage dropped from 22.1 million in fiscal year 1981 to 21.7 million in fiscal year 1982 and to 21.5 million in fiscal year 1983. A 1984 Urban Institute study found that the number of poor children eligible for Medicaid dropped by almost 4 percent between 1981 and 1982.

A May 1983 Congressional Budget Office estimate found that in February 1983 about 10.2 million people—5 million unemployed workers and 5.2 million dependents—had lost health insurance coverage because of job loss. Rather than expand Medicaid eligibility rules to assist these families, the budget cuts forced the states to restrict coverage.

The General Accounting Office found that when 493,000 families—including one million children—lost their AFDC benefits because of Reagan cuts, as many as 60 percent of the children were left with no health insurance. The incidence of untreated medical and dental problems rose substantially.

Even though the families who lost AFDC benefits and Medicaid coverage had family members who worked, many had no health insurance benefits through their jobs.

In 1984 a Princeton University study looked at the Medicaid programs in a number of states after the Reagan AFDC changes and found that between 1981 and 1982, 27,000 Massachusetts mothers and children lost Medicaid benefits; 30,000 lost coverage in Mississippi; 34,000 lost coverage in New Jersey; and 35,000 lost benefits in Texas.

Those women and children who managed to remain eligible for Medicaid often found vital benefits cut. For example, according to the national Governors Association State Medicaid Information Center, Alabama limited inpatient hospital coverage for children to 30 days per year in 1982. In 1982 Alabama reduced the number of inpatient hospital visits covered by Medicaid to 12 a year. South Carolina reduced coverage from 18 to 12 days per year.

A 1984 General Accounting Office study of the Maternal and Child Health Program shows a similar story of reduced access to health care. The Maternal and Child Health Block Grant was created in 1981 to replace several programs that had been separately funded. MCH is among the health programs that overall were reduced by 5 percent according to CBO. The GAO report found that lower funding has forced the states to ration limited services:

New York City maternal and infant care programs have a waiting list of 1,200 mothers at any given time. The Child Health Resource Center testified that, in 1982, one project was forced to turn away 1,000 pregnant women because of a lack of funding; in 1983 the number of women turned away increased to 1,534.

Twelve of thirteen states surveyed by GAO either eliminated or reduced special maternal and infant care projects which had proven successful at reversing low birth weight, premature births and infant mortality.

GAO found that states have been forced to lower the priority of lead poisoning prevention and sudden infant death syndrome prevention.

Several independent research projects on maternal and child health care and community health centers support the GAO findings:

The Arkansas Department of Public Health programs report that lead poisoning screening in the state was reduced by 50 percent. The number of children screened last year was down two-thirds since the MCH block grant replaced categorical programs.

The Harvard School of Public Health released findings in the spring of 1984 that even in Boston, where the economy remained relatively strong during the recession, infant mortality skyrocketed between 1981 and 1982; the number of pediatric visits to neighborhood health centers that depend on federal funding dropped 13 percent. Maternal and child health block grant funding at the Boston centers fell 54 percent between 1980 and 1983.

Preliminary findings by the Harvard School of Public Health in Detroit and New York appear to be consistent with their Boston findings.

The number of people served by Community Health Centers, which treat Medicaid patients and uninsured patients with incomes below 150 percent of poverty, dropped by approximately one half million between 1981 and 1983. A quarter of the CHC patients are under eighteen and about a quarter are women of child-bearing age.

POLICIES INCREASED RISK OF ECONOMIC INSECURITY

The level of protection offered by unemployment and disability insurance has eroded over the past four years. If you are unemployed, you are less likely to qualify for unemployment compensation; if you are disabled, you are less likely to qualify for disability insurance.

According to official Social Security Administration data, the number of people terminated from the disability program after an investigation of their continued eligibility increased over 400 percent from 44,273 in 1980 to 182,074 in 1983. The number of initial applicants awarded benefits dropped from 396,559 in 1980 to 311,491 in 1983, a decline of 21.5 percent.

Department of Labor statistics show a similar trend in unemployment insurance. Eighteen months after the peak of unemployment during the 1975 recession, unemployment was 7.7 percent and 59.2 percent of the unemployed were receiving unemployment compensation. Eighteen months after the peak of unemployment during the 1982 recession unemployment is still over 7 percent but only 29.8 percent of the unemployed are collecting unemployment benefits.

POLICIES INCREASED THE RISKS TO THE ELDERLY

Many of the spending cuts described above had a direct impact on the well-being of older Americans. Even with Social Security, the official poverty rate among the elderly was 14.6 percent; 2,355,000 of the elderly live on the edge of poverty.

According to a study by the Johns Hopkins University, Medicare only covers 45 percent of the health costs of the elderly. Between co-payments deductibles, and uncovered expenses, the average elderly person pays $1,700 a year out-of-pocket.

This year, Medicaid wil provide hospital, nursing home, physician, prescription drug, and other vital health benefits to about 3.3 milion senior citizens. Reduced federal spending on Medicaid resulted in a tighening of state Medicaid programs—particularly in services to people who qualify because high medical expenses push them into indigency. Tighter standards for this category of beneficiaries—called the medically needy—resulted in a 4 percent decline in the number of aged people qualifying for Medicaid from 1981 to 1982, according to a 1984 Urban Institute Study. At the same time coverage for the blind and disabled dropped 9 percent.

Twenty percent of all foodstamp beneficiaries are elderly. Across the board foodstamps cuts reduced benefits of nearly 1.5 million households which included at least one senior citizen.

POLICIES OVERALL REDISTRIBUTED INCOME UNFAIRLY

In an April 1984 study CBO documented the dramatic shift of income that has taken place under the Reagan Administration. Even when the small tax cut for families between $10,000 and $20,000 is accounted for, families under $20,000 lose $20 billion while families over $80,000 a year gain $35 billion between 1983 and 1985.

CBO analysis of the distribution of the spending cuts shows that 40 percent of the spending cuts hit families earning less than $10,000 a year, while less than one percent hit families earning over $80,000.

THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WISE. I thank the Speaker, and to my colleagues who are here, I have noticed that night by night the attendance seems to be growing, so I think that is a positive thing. We may see that this debate indeed does grow.

Mr. WEBER. Debate?

Mr. HUNTER. Debate?

Mr. WISE. I am sorry. I heard something. I have the time at this time.

I would like to follow up on a point, for a few minutes, and I guess what is very important to me, and indeed I think it is important to all of us. Let us say that clearly. It is that we need a true, serious approach to the question of the deficit. Yes, the deficit is serious. We can just parade the horribles out, and we have heard a lot of it from both sides of the aisle in the past few months. I know one area that was not talked about I just want to touch on for a second is the whole area of imports. Many of us come from very import- or export-sensitive States. Because of the high deficit, because of the fact that interest rates are kept high, that attracts foreign capital, it keeps the dollar stronger than it naturally should be overseas, and the result is that on a ton of coal that leaves West Virginia or another manufactured product from any chemical plants, there is an effective 25-percent to 35-percent surcharge on every dollar of that product, so that that product costs 25 percent to 35 percent more overseas.

Conversely, that means that an import is reduced that much. Now, we can argue, and it is a subject of later special orders, about domestic content legislation, steel import quotas, that type of approach. But there is no contesting the impact that deficits have on our exports and our imports.

We talked about the deficit in terms of the budget deficit. One area we have not touched tonight—the gentleman from Wisconsin mentioned it—is the trade deficit. The trade deficit last year was the highest it has ever been, $60 billion. An incredible figure, is it not? $60 billion. That trade deficit this year is estimated to be at this point $110 billion, and it may go as high as $140 billion, $140 billion more going out than coming in.

It is kind of interesting, going back in time, poor Jimmy Carter, we have heard him blamed so much, he had a $59 billion deficit. The President's deficit this year is going to be—the deficit that was projected in the budget—something around $180 billion. Hopefully, it will be less.

But, that is part of the problem also.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on Jimmy Carter?

Mr. WISE. I will tell you what, I will yield following my remarks and some remarks we have here, and then perhaps we might structure some back-and-forth discussion. I am happy to do that on my time. One of the gentlemen here has yielded to me in the past.

Mr. HUNTER. I have always yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. WISE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield on Jimmy Carter?

Mr. WISE. Poor Jimmy, so many have yielded on him already. What I would like to do is complete my remarks, and then us go back and forth, and I promise when you are talking I will take some notes and come back.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield just for one 20-second point?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That point is the persistent bringing in of poor Jimmy Carter. I would just like to point out for the record that Jimmy Carter left office—I believe it was early January 1981. He was defeated as President of the United States. And since Jimmy Carter, we have had a President named Ronald Reagan. I just wanted to point that out for the record because of the persistent discussion about poor Jimmy Carter is, I think, a bit unfair. Let us talk about the present.

Mr. WISE. The last three unbalanced budgets——

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield on Walter Mondale?

Mr. WISE. The gentleman will not yield right now.

I think it should be pointed out that the last three unbalanced budgets have not had Jimmy Carter's name on them.

Now, continuing along the line that I would like to go to, which is neither Jimmy Carter nor Ronald Reagan, quite frankly—it is the American people—it is neither Republican nor Democrat. I would like to take a look at the budget. I would like to take a matter-of-fact look. It is going to take a few minutes, for those who are here, to show exactly what the extent of the problem is and whosever rhetoric it is, it simply is not going to address the problem; it is only going to be when we roll up our sleeves and when we get down to some hard work—more work and less rhetoric, I might add.

Let us take a look at the fiscal year 1984 budget, some rough figures. Roughly, this Government is going to have $850 billion to $852 billion in outlays. That is going to be your entire budget. Of that, roughly $242 billion will be in the military; $213 billion of that will be Social Security and medicare part A.

So now we have $242 billion and $213 billion. I do not have my calculator with me, but as I recall, that is something like 52 percent, 54 percent of the budget is consumed by two main areas, military, Social Security, and medicare.

Now, let us toss in that area that the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from New Mexico were talking about as they closed, and that is the interest on the national debt. That is, simply, what you are paying for the privilege of running a deficit; $108 billion this year.

So now we have got something like 63 percent or 65 percent of that budget, that $852 billion, eaten up by three areas.

Now, what is left? Roughly, $300 billion. What is that $300 billion? It is every other function of Government, as the gentleman from Wisconsin was saying, it is the Environmental Protection Agency, it is the Department of Transportation, it is the interstate highways, it is the FAA, the Federal Aviation Administration, the FDA, it is education, it is all the public assistance programs.

□ 2050

It is every other function of Government. Now if you are running a budget deficit of roughly $180 billion, what do you do? Shall we cut every other function of Government in half? You still have not really solved the problem. So I think we come to the crux.

If you refuse to cut the military budget, as proposed by the President, if you refuse to cut Social Security and medicare, and I think this Congress has rightly said that they have taken their look at that and they are not going any further, you cannot cut the interest on the national debt, that is a legal obligation, what are you left with? You are not left with much.

I can get down in this well quite easily and say, "By golly, you are not going to cut my program. You are not going to cut whatever it is that I like." I happen to be very fond of the Appalachian Regional Commission. It has done a heck of a job for West Virginia.

Someone else says, "But, Wise, you are not coming over to my area and cut the military budget," say someone who has a military base, or a Trident base, or some research and development lab, whatever.

So now we get to the crux of the problem. We are in a democracy and there are competing interests. That is not bad. That is what a democracy is about. We are all trying to make ourselves heard and to be represented. I think that is maybe where this Congress falls down, and this is a statement to both parties. We fall down because we do not look at some kind of overall picture.

Once again, it is easy to come running out and say, "Let us cut the domestic programs." They got savaged in 1981. OK. Come at them again. But even if you cut—it is interesting. I totaled up every possible low-income or public-assistance program. I am talking about housing. I am talking about AFDC. I am talking about food stamps. I am talking about hot lunch programs, programs like that. Cut every one of them. Cut them. Eliminate them. You have now gotten something like $50 billion out. That is it; $50 billion, a third of what you have to do.

So there is no easy solution. So then what do we do? Well, one thing we can do is get down in the well and roll around and rail at each other for 2 years at a time. That has not done a whole lot either. But then I think we have to come to working together.

During the 2 years I have been here, I have heard from this side and this side. I have heard each blame the other. I have been blamed. I have blamed them. The President blames the Congress; the Congress blames the President. The truth is, it is a two-way street.

Let us look at the budget process. A budget and spending does not come out of a vacuum. It just does not appear, and it is not just the President. It is not just the Congress. The budget is something that is a joint product. The President presents a budget. That is the first chance to balance it right there. But the President then presents it and the Congress responds to it in both its budget resolution and its appropriations bills. It can completely disregard the President if it chooses.

Now, then, let us assume that the Congress has adopted or has passed these appropriations bills. Does it stop there and the President is bypassed? Absolutely not. The President then has a choice of vetoing those appropriations bills. It is not the President's responsibility totally; it is not the Congress' responsibility. But yet each has a valuable part.

So, therefore, for the President to hold a news conference and blast the Congress simply is not fair, and vice versa. I can point back and we can look at the history of the deficit and I can make an argument that Gerald Ford ran the highest deficit before Jimmy Carter. In fact, as I recall, Ford's last—and I stand corrected if I am wrong but I do not believe I am—that the last budget year under President Ford was higher than anything that Carter had proposed in terms of deficit. I can stand here and say that President Reagan has the highest deficit, 3 times higher actually, than any other President, which is true.

I guess I can make the argument conclusively that it was Republican Presidents who produced the highest deficits. Quite frankly, I do not think there is a lot of merit to be gained by that. I happen to think it is true, but I do not think there is merit. I have great problems with some of the individual policy decisions of President Reagan. I think that his policies have contributed greatly, but, quite frankly, my railing at the President and his railing at me is not going to get this problem solved.

The problem is going to be solved when we take time to look at an overall approach such as what was proposed in the McKay substitute, I think; such as what has been proposed in the pay-as-you-go proposals. The Democratic side has introduced the Bradley-Gephardt proposal. The other party has presented the Kemp-Kasten proposal. But we owe those all serious consideration.

I guess what concerns me is that we are hearing a lot of rhetoric, a lot of vitriol on the budget deficit, and who caused it. The fact is, everybody caused it. The gentleman from Montana, I think, said eloquently that, yes, he thinks that the Democratic Party bears responsibility. It does. So does the Republican Party. And so do the policies that have brought us, many of the policies, that have brought us to this situation, that brought us to this day.

So I hope that in the next month that this body will have, and I anticipate that we will be getting together here on the floor much more, I hope that that may be some of the spirit that pervades our discussion in genuinely trying to work out what those differences are and where we can go from there.

I think it is important to point out the differences between us. I have great differences with the Reagan policies. They have been disastrous for my State. But at the same time, I think that we have an obligation to consider them and to object to them on their merits or to approach them on their merits.

But I think we have to agree on one thing: The deficit has to be dealt with, and it has to be dealt with this year. It does no good to rail at each other without at least coming forward with a first step. I think the House budget resolution was a first step. It was $180 billion. And to those who say, "Well, so far you have $50 billion worth of tax increases and $13 billion of spending cuts," that is right. But that is the first step. That was, incidentally, part of what the President suggested in his Rose Garden strategy. So this is the President's tax increase as much as it was the tax increase of any Member of this body or the other body, and I think that should be pointed out.

No good is going to come from the President simply saying, "Taxes, not me." The President is responsible for these tax increases as much as anyone else. I hope it is because he recognizes the need to be fiscally responsible but I just want to make that final point, too, that in the House budget resolution, assuming that it is carried through to its final conclusion, that for every dollar of tax increase there is at least $2 of spending cuts, and that is the agreement. That is the contract with the American people.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MOODY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman makes a good point, that it is very tempting to stand here and excoriate our colleagues in this body or anywhere else, who are also men and women of good will who want to do the right thing. I think we all know that.

The real issue is, where do we go from here? This upcoming election, I would submit to my friends on the other side, is about the future. I think you owe it to us and we owe it to you to talk about the future. What are the policy choices that are now before us that we have to come to grips with, and where will they lead us?

I think any discussion that wants to talk about either this administration's recent history or the Democratic administration's less recent, more distant history is fairly barren. We have plenty of criticism to go all around.

But where are we going to go in the future? That is why I would like to, if I could, steer the discussion back to the consequences of the deficit.

We know why they are caused. They were caused for the reasons we have been talking about, but where will they lead us, and way is it so important that both sides of the aisle to cut them, to improve the economy. We have discussed the fact that we are becoming a debtor Nation through the deficits, that by 1988 we will owe more to foreigners than they owe to us, and that we will begin to lose control of our own fiscal policy and our own monetary policy. The fact is that foreigners will be sharing in whatever growth we can eke out. It will be siphoned off to other nations, the fact that we will lose control of our own destiny.

The fact is that 42 cents on every dollar of income tax will be going to pay debt service, and the fact is that this will be the most massive transfer of wealth from wage earners to capital holders. Eighty-five percent of wages—and the gentleman in the well, I think, would agree that most of the people we represent are wage earners; people in my district tend to earn wages. They work hard and they earn wages. Eighty-five percent of wage income was subject to withholding.

□ 2100

Forty-two cents of those wage withholdings are going to go to pay owners of capital, people who own or who are buying or will buy Government bonds.

Who buys Government bonds in our society? Who buys debt? Who owns debt? They are not the people at the middle and lower end of the spectrum, by and large; they are the upper-income folks in our society. They have a right to own debt, and that is fine. We are glad they do. I am glad somebody is buying it or everything would come grinding to a halt.

But the long-term consequences to our society of massive income transfers from wage earners to bondholders is another frightening byproduct of the runaway deficit. That is why we have to get control on it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY]. He is, I think, more of a diplomat and statesman than I am, and I think he has stated what I tried to state, although maybe it did not come across very clearly, that we have got to have bipartisan solutions and we have to have a consensus. But I think the issues are not going to be what went wrong in 1980.

The issues are not Jimmy Carter or Gerald Ford or what Harry Truman did or what John F. Kennedy did—the President who perhaps is one of our most admired Presidents by both Democrats and Republicans—but what will the future hold in the years ahead. What will be our policies in resolving the problems of our country?

I think the debate in 1984 should be a debate on what policies we are going to have to take us into the 1990's and the year 2000. I think, instead of bringing up once again Jimmy Carter, I would like to see us talk about the future leaders and the future policies and programs of this country.

I think if we look at what our broad goals should be, we should look at what Republicans and Democrats can do together to pursue overall economic policies that sharply reduce deficits, that bring down interest rates, that generate free savings for private investment, that prevent another explosion of inflation, and that put the dollar on a competitive footing. Let us have policies that are Democratic and Republican, that will establish a framework that will support growth, productivity, and opportunity.

What is wrong with dealing with those concepts and having policies together that can deal with these issues?

Instead of conflict, let us have dialog and let us have cooperation, but let those cooperative measures be backed by trade, tax, and financial regulations that will serve the long-term growth of the American economy and the broad national interest.

Instead of ignoring America's future, as some of the policies in this administration have done, with some blame on the part of some Democrats, let us make a series of long-term investments in research, solar energy, nuclear research, all kinds of research that will not only expand the mind of the American people but will let us know about what necessarily is going to be needed in the years ahead. Let us have space research. Why not have these investments in training and retraining so that it can help those who lose their jobs?

I come from an area of New Mexico where mining has been the main industry for many years, but our mining industry has been devastated. I represent the coal industry. I have a lot of coal plants, I have uranium mines, I have oil and gas, and I have potash. This vital energy industry has been devastated.

But perhaps if we invested in research to technologically try to do better in this area, to have more jobs in production, to stop the State Department from favoring purchasing foreign imports, it would help. I mean our State Department prefers to buy uranium from Australia and South Africa. It prefers to purchase all kinds of potash from other nations to line the pockets of many dictators around the world. We could purchase our own uranium and help our own energy industry. Our copper industry in New Mexico and the Southwest is devastated by foreign imports.

If we are going to stand up for the industries and rebuild our infrastructure, we have got to give our industries and our businesses and our natural resources an even break.

Now, the President talked tough about saying no to these dictators and protecting our imports and protecting our energy industry. My State has been devastated. I think my colleague, the gentleman from West Virginia, has seen that, too.

I think we need investments in long-term education and retraining and infrastucture and energy research. Perhaps we will make some mistakes in the future in investing and trying to find out what is best for this country. But let us not go back and tear these programs down and stop this research at universities and foundations and among our people.

Our people out there, not our bureaucrats or our bureaucracy, are finding out what is best for this country. Let us give them that ability and provide those funds for investment. If we are going to invest in education, in the future minds of children, in biomedical science and technology and retraining, that money will serve a purpose in the future because those children will become taxpayers and citizens of this country that will produce. What is wrong with spending funds on that? That is in the area of domestic spending.

I hope that my colleague touches a bit on Social Security and what we tell our senior citizens in this country. What are we going to tell them about their programs in the future?

I know that my colleague has many issues he wishes to discuss. We need to talk some of the consequences of this deficit and what we, together as Democrats and Republicans, can achieve as a consensus that will bring not just peace in our country but also economic prosperity.

I am ready to stop calling anybody names if they are ready to do the same, but you can bet that tomorrow they will be back and they will be saying "the liberal welfare state," and that the gentleman from New Mexico is wrong in this statistic, and they will give us all these facts and figures. But I am ready here to say, let us enter into a dialog and at least let our leadership of our Budget Committees, JIM JONES and the leader of the Senate Budget Committee, get together and reach a deficit reduction plan. Perhaps our colleagues can ask the President to let them proceed and at least meet. Otherwise the people of this country will have no budget reduction plan.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made a point that I would like to talk to briefly, and that is on Social Security.

I am glad the Congress finally took a step that in my feeling was long overdue. A year ago we mandated that in the future Social Security will not be considered as part of the unified budget. It has always been, until the late sixties, considered as part of the budget. In other words, Social Security, which is a separate fund paid for by payroll taxes, has been used to offset in the bottom line the deficits that have been incurred in the general fund. That has been good when Social Security was flush, but it did not work too well in the last few years. But when Social Security kicks back up and the revenues become better with more people returning to work, and also with the changes that this Congress mandated, we will see Social Security once more become solvent. In some ways, on Social Security, we ought not to make that the whipping boy for the deficit. We ought to take that on the outside and look at the Social Security fund on its own, which it is. It is a separate fund.

But now let us look at the general fund problems. When people talk about cutting Social Security, if they cut Social Security, they have not done anything. If you cut Social Security, you have not done anything to cure the overall problem within the general fund. So I wish that Social Security could be considered for what it is, and hopefully the action that this Congress took will remove it from that consideration.

The fact of the matter is that the Social Security fund at this time is solvent, and it is becoming more solvent. There is a crisis coming in the medicare fund, and this Congress will have to deal with that. But I get concerned when I hear people say, "Well, we can solve the deficit problem by maybe freezing the COLA's for Social Security recipients."

□ 2110

The money for Social Security does not come from the general fund. It is a payroll tax. It is generated strictly for that purpose. The same thing with Social Security disability, and therefore to talk about cutting back Social Security as somehow solving the deficit problems, as has been suggested in past years, is faulty.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. WISE. Yes, certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman for the approach he has taken.

I think if we look at 1983, after we were elected, I think one of the shining lights of this Congress was the passage of a bill that basically saved the Social Security System until about the 1990's, but there some painful cuts were made. Cost-of-living increases were postponed, new Federal employees went into the system, higher income Social Security recipients were taxed, but that was done on a bipartisan basis. Is that not correct?

Mr. WISE. The gentleman is absolutely correct, but it was done on another basis, too, that I think is important and should pervade this discussion of the deficit. It was done on an across-the-board basis.

I held town meetings before that vote was taken on the Social Security package. I talked probably to 1,000 senior citizens across the 14 counties in my district. I explained to them the elements of the package. Employers give up something. Self-employed give up something. New Federal employees come under Social Security and you will be asked to defer your cost-of-living adjustment for 6 months. Then I would take a vote at the end on how they felt. Only 2 out of approximately the 1,000 people said that they were not willing to accept that COLA deferral, even though everyone else was giving up.

The message was clear. As long as it is across the board, as long as it is fair, as long as everyone is giving, then we are willing to give.

I think that could also be the message here in dealing with the budget deficit problem, not pointing fingers, not saying it is domestic spending, it is military spending, it is your program; no, it is your program. We have got to look everywhere and we have got to make sure it is fair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the gentleman has hit the issue very succinctly, very clearly. I think while nationally a perception might be that there are some Democrats that are big spenders, I have learned in my town meetings and many constituents at least give many of us credit for protecting Social Security.

I think if you look at the 1981 Budget Reconciliation Act that the President supported, that produced $21 billion in cuts for Social Security, and if you look once again in May 1982, the President endorsed that Republican proposal in the Senate that would have cut Social Security by $6 billion in fiscal year 1983 and $17 billion in each of the next 2 years, a total of $40 billion.

The people of this country, mostly senior citizens, mostly those on fixed incomes, had nothing of that, so there was a very quick retraction.

Our point, I think as the gentleman has said, is the issue of medicare and medicaid, that is something we have to deal with. It is in crisis.

If the gentleman will yield further, I have some health care statistics that I would like to discuss that I think are very relevant to the debate that we are having today.

Mr. WISE. Sure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And regrettably, I think the policy of this administration has been characterized by proposals that would increase the cost of health services to the elderly under medicare, reduce the Federal matching rate for medicaid services and mandate that the poor share in the cost for even basic health care research, placing unwarranted reliance upon competition in the marketplace to curb rising health care costs.

Now, I think the administration's attitude is that you solve the health care problem by putting the burden on the patients.

Now, any person in this country will tell you, what is the biggest problem we have? And maybe those of us here will say the deficit. I personally think that is the biggest problem we have, but time and time again, young, middle class, old, wealthy, will talk about the crisis in health care, that we cannot continue to put the burden of health care on patients.

Now, 4.5 percent of a $12.7 billion GNP in the United States went for health care in 1950, whereas 10.5 percent of a $322 billion GNP goes for that purpose today. This is where the priority of health care is today. Health care costs now are $1,325 per year per person. This jumped 50 percent—50 percent between 1979 and 1982 and the figure is expected to reach $2,395 by the year 1990 if we continue these policies.

About 12 percent of all Americans, or 1 in 8 have serious problems in access to adequate health care and I can speak for that in my district where I have rural health care clinics and Indian reservations. They simply cannot get to a health care facility.

One million families have had at least one member refused care for financial reasons. This includes 208,000 families that are uninsured.

Now, let me just talk about some of these statistics. I think this points to glaring inequities in where our human priorities should be. There are people still in this country that cannot defend themselves. They do not have big lobbies like the AMA. They cannot come up here and lobby to keep rural health care clinics open.

I want the gentleman to know that the first bill I passed in this House was a rural health care clinic that changed the payback formula for clinics around the country, because this administration while wanting to spend billions and billions for the MX and billions for the International Monetary Fund and foreign aid could not pay $60,000 in many cases for one doctor, one federally funded doctor to go to a rural health care clinic in areas that are very remote. Those were slashed. That was cut.

I had to fight here simply to change the payback formula which would not have increased the cost for this program. There was opposition to this by the administration, not by my Republican colleagues on the committee, they supported this, but by the administration that said becasue of OMB directives, the Office of Management and Budget, that we had to cut rural health care for defenseless people. I represent many of those people.

I just think it is important that if we are going to look at reducing the deficit, we have got to control health care costs and we can do that by more efficient reimbursable policies.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield back for a minute, I think the gentleman is absolutely right, particularly medicare. Let us look at the problem of medicare. Medicare is a fund also generated by payroll taxes, at least medicare part A.

The problem is that you have got money coming in through the payroll taxes, but as health care costs rise so sharply, three or four times the rate of inflation, and so the money coming in while it may be going up according to the CPI, the money going in may be increasing, but the cost, the outgo, is increasing at a far greater rate.

You can, as unfortunately has been proposed and done, you can cut benefits. You can raise the medicare tax, but you are just putting Band-aids on a very serious problem. It is not until you deal with the root elements, it is not until you deal with rising hospital and health care costs, and the gentleman has cited well the expansion of those dollars, it is not until you deal with the real cause of the problem that you are going to get it down.

There is a figure, for instance, some people say, "Well, I am not sick. How does health care affect me?"

Go out and buy a car today. Every car has built into it, an American produced car, has built into it around $600 which is health care cost premiums, insurance policies for the employees, basic medical care coverage. Those premiums keep going up. Why do those premiums go up? Because the costs are going up.

Yes, this Congress took a beginning step with the DRG, diagnostic related groups prospective payment, but that only deals with medicare. That does not deal with the private insurer. That does not deal with the insurance policy that I have to pay for and anybody has to pay for. Those premiums keep going up as the costs go up.

So health care costs affect us in several ways. First is the patient. Second, as the taxpayer paying for many of the health care programs, and third, finally as an overall consumer, because health care as the gentleman points out, is now 10 percent of the gross national product, 10 percent.

It is one of the fastest growing industries, if not the fastest growing industry in the Nation, so whatever we buy has those health care costs factored into it; so the gentleman makes an excellent point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about another issue. We are talking about the consequences of the deficit and misplaced priorities. That is the issue of hunger and what budget cuts have done on social programs for women and children.

Now, I recall very succinctly a statement made by a Member of the body, Senator JOSEPH BIDEN of Delaware, who told us that the very day the Census Bureau was announcing that the poverty level in this country had reached the highest point in 15 years, the same day the President, who went ahead and savaged the food stamp proposal, the President literally eliminated the School Lunch Program and cut nutrition programs for infants and the elderly, was announcing the formation of a task force to determine why there was hunger in America. Was it not I think Mr. Meese who at that time was a member of the White House staff, I think he still is, who said that to his best available evidence, there was very little hunger in this country.

I have seen hunger people. I have seen those meal sites for senior citizens. I have seen the lines for cheese in many parts of my district. There are people that are hungry in this country.

What about women and what about children? What about their situation?

In 1981, 62 percent of all women 18 through 64 were working. More than half of all children, including 1.5 million children under 6, have working mothers.

□ 2120

Yet working women make less than men in every job at every education level. And for women who had families, half of all of those that are in poverty, the budget cuts will mean a faster decline into deeper poverty, less child care, less nutritional assistance, fewer health services. For those that are separated, divorced, widowed, or abandoned by their husbands, it means less job training, less support for the children's education and more difficulty getting legal services.

So I think if we are fashioning a consensus, as my colleagues said, that as Republicans and Democrats we cannot forget those that are at the deepest scale of the economic ladder. But somehow we have also fashioned policies I think in some cases and in some programs that only benefit the very, very, very poor and the very, very, very rich. So there is that great middle that many times do not have access to assistance programs in education and health care.

I have found so many of them that basically, for instance, want some funding and assistance in getting a farmer's home loan, or the soil conservation to come in and help their farms and ranches, or some kind of a student loan. They fall just below that scale.

So what we need to do is I think try to fashion an economic policy in this country that helps us all. I mean this is I think an election year and to say that we are going to stand for only the rich or the middle class or the poor is wrong, just as our colleagues I think should recognize that we are in fact in this together, that we should show each other some respect, that we should have some dialog, that we need to achieve some of these goals in a bipartisan fashion.

I yield back.

Mr. WISE. I applaud the gentleman's statements. You bring to mind a incident that happened to me.

I was going door to door in my district one time. I think we just need to look at the impact of what this body does, particularly when you talk about budgets cuts. I totally support the concept. In fact, in the State legislature I led a committee, bipartisan committee, I might add, called the "Trim Committee" which went line item by line item through the State budget and came up with roughly $100 million worth of suggested cuts. You can find money there. But you have to look at the impact.

I was going door to door and I knocked on the doors of two separate people in the same block, of ladies that seemed to be somewhere between 55 and 65 years old, low-income area. Both of them were very, very frightened. The reason is that that was when certain budget cuts had come down in the medicaid program and all of a sudden medicaid would not reimburse for certain types of outpatient medicines and in my State hypertension meds were on that list.

The result was that to save dollars, several dollars per week in hypertension meds for these people, now no longer could these women get that medicine, that medicaid assistance. Therefore, at least one was doing without. In order to save the money for those hypertension meds, and you would save several dollars a week, these women would then develop high blood pressure such that they had to be either hospitalized or put into a nursing home. What does that cost to the medicaid system? It is $900 to $1,200 a month. Pennywise and pound-foolish type of approach, as well as being I think inhumane.

So I think you have to look at the budget cuts.

It is another thing when you talk about cutting the budget. It is real easy to say we are going to cut this year, we are going to cut this capital cost, we are going to cut the building cost, we are not going to buy new equipment, we are going to do this. That is fine. But what happens in the out years?

At some point that equipment begins to wear out, or human beings being to wear out, and you have to take into consideration what happens in the years to come. I think in some areas what you are going to be seeing is that because of neglect—and we are seeing this, incidentally, in the armed services in a few areas already because of neglect of certain areas—to save a few dollars now you are going to pay a lot more dollars later.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I will be glad to.

At some time if anybody else in the Chamber wanted to respond, I wanted to give them that time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks. I have a number of statements that I would like to insert in the RECORD.

Mr. WEBER. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana]. The gentleman from Minnesota reserves the right to object.

Mr. WEBER. I reserve the right to object to make clear, the gentleman from New Mexico is going to revise and extend his remarks on just this special order for the gentleman from West Virginia, and not the previous special order?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I had asked to revise and extend my remarks previously and in my hour, and I wish to do that in his hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Mexico, as the Chairman understands it, is asking permission to revise and extend his remarks on the current order.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

Mr. WISE. I thank the gentleman for his remarks. I had promised that if anyone wanted to respond, and I think the gentleman from California had wanted to.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the gentleman to yield.

Mr. WISE. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Let me say simply that when I walked in on the floor and asked the gentleman from New Mexico to yield he stated that he was not going to yield, essentially because somewhere in the past one of the three of us who are presently on the floor from this side had not yielded.

Let me simply say for myself that with regard to myself that is not true. I have never refused to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is available to him and if he was referring to me he was not telling the truth. And I think that for the gentleman, for any of the three gentlemen to stand up and talk about a dialog and a debate and not debate, and not allow the other Members of the debate, those Members representing the other side to have their say is incredible.

Now, I walked out on the floor and I heard the gentleman say that I refused or one of the three of us refused to yield to him, and I would ask him to show me right now anyplace in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which records such words where I had refused to yield to him. If that is not true, if he cannot show that, I would like him to admit it because if he was referring to myself he was not telling the truth.

Mr. MOODY. Would the gentleman yield before the question is answered?

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask the gentleman who has yielded me this time to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico to show me where I have refused to yield to him.

Mr. WISE. Reclaiming my time, I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think once again what regrettably the gentleman is showing is disrespect. I said one of the three. It is correct, it was one of the three. It was the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let me finish my statement.

Mr. WISE. I reclaim my time and I continue to yield to the gentleman form New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My point was what we are trying to do is establish the dialog and the gentlemen well know that they have had for nearly 9 months, they have had an open season. And I have been here and the gentleman, my friend from Pennsylvania, may not recall. And I cannot cite the instance in the RECORD at the moment. But I did ask him to recognize me and he very patently refused to do that.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WISE. Let the gentleman finish his statement and then I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the American public right now, I understand that the gentlemen here want to debate and want to talk issues. Now do you want to suspend all actions so we go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to find the exact time when you did what I consider to be a rude discourtesy to me at that time?

I wish to engage in a dialog. I want to have the opportunity when you have your special orders just as my colleague from West Virginia has done. He has recognized you and we are ready to debate some issues with you if you are.

Now, if you want to go back and try to find the time where we can be petty and picayune, as so many times you have done in the past, fine. I mean I am here to debate the issues before the American people. I am here to talk about health care and deficits and education. I am here to work with the gentlemen and I am here in an effort of good will. I respect my colleagues.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Since we are speaking primarily to a C-SPAN audience, I would say that the gentleman is causing himself I think some real problems because I think that most people understand that this gentleman in the time that he has been on the floor, and I spend a lot of time on the floor, constantly yields to others who ask me to yield. And the gentleman says it would be picayune to suggest that I would want a citation of where the gentleman does this.

The gentleman is accusing me of being a liar. I do not appreciate that. The gentleman seems to think that it is disrespectful for me to suggest that if he is going to charge me with something that he ought to be able to cite exactly where it was that this gentleman refused to yield to him because I think the long history and the long record of my performance on the floor would indicate that I have consistently yielded, as we all have, during our period of time when people come to the floor and ask us to yield to them.

□ 2130

That is the reason why we find this shocking and disappointing to have a situation tonight where the gentleman from New Mexico would claim to want to engage in debate and then specifically, time after time after time, refuse to yield on points where we felt that he was making just absolute errors in fact.

I do not want to think that——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will my colleague yield?

Is he stating that the——

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I yield to my colleague from New Mexico, and then you can yield back to him. This is exactly the problem, reclaiming my time, gentlemen.

This is exactly the problem, I might suggest. And what I think we would be better served doing is talking about some of the issues, the areas that separate us, and let us walk down that path as opposed to going back and forth.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. It is also my observation, in addition to the many months that the gentleman has been on the floor in presenting his case, the gentleman also has another hour following this gentleman's hour to make that case. So I would prefer to get into some of the issues if we might.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. And I will assure the gentleman that during the time that I have that I will yield because that is the way I think we conduct ourselves. I congratulate the gentleman for being willing to yield of his time. I am only disappointed that the gentleman who preceded him last night and the gentleman who preceded him here tonight did not have the same courtesy or the same ability to defend their point of view.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will my colleague yield? From Pennsylvania.

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. To my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WISE. I control the time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, I was addressing my colleague who is not facing me, who is looking the other way. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. WISE. He does not have the time.

Mr. WALKER. I do not have the time. Learn the rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will my colleague treat other colleagues with respect?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman from West Virginia controls the time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask my colleague something. All the things, all I want to do is in the months ahead, if the gentleman chooses to take special orders to discuss the issues that he is concerned with, that he give us on the other side of the aisle the courtesy of engaging in the debate that you have selected.

Now for 9 months, almost every day—can I finish, can I finish? Will—I am asking my good friend, my colleague who has the time if I can finish before my colleague interrupts me.

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico and then I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

What I would like to do is yield to the gentleman from New Mexico for a minute and a half and then I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania on this subject for a minute and a half, and then we might be able to move on to something else.

Mr. RICHARDSON. So I think it is very clear that in future special orders that either of us take whether it is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Minnesota, California, myself, that we engage in this courtesy of recognizing each other.

I simply was following a policy and practice that many times I observed on the floor of this House where there was discourtesy and failure to yield. That is all I am saying.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. May I finish? I still have one and a half minutes.

I am willing right here to put that away completely. I am willing to start tomorrow. I am willing to start next week when more special orders will continue. I think the gentlemen are disruptive because for the first time, they have had a clear sailing for 9 months and now there are three freshman Democrats here that wish to say their spiel and our statement, and they are upset, and there is no reason to be upset.

I want my colleagues to be forthcoming, to smile, to feel good. Let us have a good debate in the days ahead. And I mean no disrespect. I mean no bad feelings toward them. I know they are good and decent men. All I am saying is, between now and when we finish these special orders before the election, let us have a dialog where there is respect on the floor of the House for everybody and let us allow each other to recognize and debate the issues because between now and the election, most of the people decisions will be made.

That is all I am saying. And I mean no disrespect for my three colleagues, and I hope they smile and not get upset. I have nothing against them.

This is the first time I have participated in this dialog here on the floor. I do not take special orders. I just want to give my point of view, that is all.

Mr. WISE. I thank the gentleman, and for equal time, we will turn to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Well, I will say to the gentleman, I thank him for the equal time, I guess. And I would only say that during the time that I have been on this floor and I think the record will attest to it, we have never refused to yield. The first time we saw that pattern develop is when the freshman Democrats came to the floor and started that pattern. And I am only disappointed that it takes almost a sledgehammer over their head to get them to understand that that is the proper way that we proceed around here and that that is the way we engage in real debate; that it is not real debate to simply carry on a dialog without somebody else participating.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. To the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MOODY. I appreciate this lecture on floor etiquette from the gentleman from Pennsylvania because I think we can all use it from time to time. I am pleased to hear him say how exemplary his behavior always is. There is no one in this House that speaks as frequently as the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

In fact, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania has probably spent more hours on the floor than all the freshman Democrats put together. I think that would be an easy, an easy calculation to prove.

But I do object, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when you started off the early part of our session with constant points of order, "Will the gentleman yield?" "Will the gentleman yield?" I think you owe it to these two gentlemen and any other gentlemen who appear for the first time to let them basically develop their theme.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Without taking such umbrage, such huge, enormous umbrage over a few refusals to yield is not worthy of any gentleman in this House.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Because on the floor debates, day after day, many people refuse to yield while they are finishing their point and I think that is entirely reasonable. To constantly interrupt with the mike and say "Will the gentleman yield, will the gentleman yield?" is not constructive debate.

You have plenty of time. We have only begun this evening for the first time we have ever been here to do this. The gentleman may laugh if he wishes, but I am trying to make a sincere point. To be lectured by the gentleman on the courtesy of the floor ill-behooves the gentleman's high standing in this body.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. It is really stretching the point to suggest the gentlemen earlier this evening were just finishing their point when they were finishing their points for 1 hour and 42 minutes before any of the gentlemen here speaking would yield to any of us on this side of the aisle.

That is especially irritating to us on this side of the aisle because the gentleman from New Mexico among other things flatly misrepresented my voting record. He pointed to Members on this side of the aisle. I was sitting there. He referred to the MacKay budget and said, none of these Members voted for that.

I simply stood up to try to correct the record because I indeed did vote for the MacKay budget. I could not even get recognized to clarify the purposeful distortion of my record by the gentleman from New Mexico.

Furthermore, when the gentleman from New Mexico stood up to point out, not just that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had failed to yield to him but that we had not yielded time and time again during special orders, I again stood up just to correct the record because we have yielded to anybody that has come to the floor and I am willing to give names.

I would suggest that if the gentleman on the other side of the aisle talked to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WEAVER], the gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HUBBARD], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] or the gentleman in the chair right now, Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana, they should ask them if they have had any trouble coming to the floor, getting us to yield to them because they have not.

But the gentleman would not yield to us even to correct this obvious distortion of the fact.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. WISE. Reclaiming my time, we started this, I noticed because I clocked myself, at about 13 minutes ago. Now that we have resolved the question of etiquette on the floor, I would hope in closing that we can begin a serious approach to solving that deficit problem, indeed other problems arising from it, because I think that is going to be what chokes off any economic recovery that is occurring, which is occurring in varying degrees in different parts of the country, in some far better than others.

I know what bothers me, coming from the State of West Virginia, basic mining, heavy manufacturing, chemical manufacturing, primarily manufacturing, what concerns us greatly is that we see, by classical economic terms, we are halfway through the recovery, recovery being defined as 35, 36 months, this recovery technically started, by the economists in November of 1982; we are halfway through this recovery and we are still running at the interest rates we have, at the deficit, the staggering deficit proportions that we have.

So that has ominous implications for us all.

The American people I do not think want rhetoric. The American people I think want results. Now it was interesting, as I held a town meeting before the Christmas season, people said, "Well, will Congress do anything before the election?" And I said, "Well, I hope so, but it is only going to be if the American people make themselves heard."

□ 2140

I noticed there was a lot of speech making about the deficit then, but now what I have seen happen coming back after the Christmas break it was as though someone had flipped a switch and I think the message from the American people was getting through.

We are willing to take some hard talk. We are willing to take some hard solutions. We are willing to listen to reality, we are willing to listen to what is really going to have to be done. Do not sugarcoat it.

So I think that this Congress, this House, and its passage of the first House budget resolution—not a pleasant thing to have to vote for—I think this House began to grapple with that. So I think that we are going to have to continue to grapple and to wrestle with it in the months to come.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Ultimately this desire to cut the deficit has to be manifested in votes. I happen to have the gentleman's record in front of me. On 19 major votes that would have cut, in fact, the deficit by a very large amount of money the gentleman voted on Rollcall No. 19——

Mr. WISE. I am going to have to reclaim my time in 30 seconds because my time is about to expire.

Mr. HUNTER. Is the gentleman reclaiming my time because I am citing his voting record?

Mr. WISE. No; I am going to reclaim it because my time is running out. I am reclaiming my time. I would like to point out the gentleman has said he has 19 rollcall votes where I voted not to cut the deficit in his terms. That is absolutely right.

Now did the gentleman vote for the pay-as-you-go budget of last year? Did the gentleman vote for the House budget resolution? Did the gentleman vote, for instance, perhaps he did, I did also, to cut the legislative budget 2 percent.

No, I did not vote yesterday, for instance, to cut $1½ billion out of basic education and health programs since they have been so successfully savaged 3 years before.

I did not vote to cut cancer research 5 percent across the board. I did not vote to cut heart and cardiac research 5 percent across the board. I could not do that, maybe you all can, I cannot do that.

So, to the gentleman, no, I did not vote for that. And, yes, he does have that. But does he also have, for instance, my votes on other matters, such as the pay-as-you-go budget, such as on some of the measures that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has advanced?

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield, so that I can give him some of his other votes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. WISE. I will yield for 1 minute.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman.

The gentleman also voted against a savings of $127 million on the Wilshire corridor subway in Los Angeles, that would have saved $127 million.

The gentleman voted against the Coughlin across-the-board reduction on rollcall No. 208 that would have saved $551 million.

Against rollcall No. 217, which was the tax rate equity act, the Frenzel motion. That would have saved $12 billion.

The gentleman voted against the McDade amendment that would have been a 4-percent cut across the board, Interior appropriations, a savings of $250 million.

As you go on, out of 19 major votes, the gentleman voted against budget savings that would have totaled $20.4 billion.

The point that I am making——

Mr. WISE. I am reclaiming my time because my time is about to expire.

Once again, as I say, you can pick selected votes as I can probably find them with the gentleman.

My point is I voted for the House budget resolution. You know one area where I am in trouble, I voted for the President's defense appropriation. That probably makes me a budget buster. So I suspect that the gentleman voted for that also, in which case we both join that category.

The point is that you have to look at the overall picture and you have to look at overall deficit reduction. If the gentleman is going to keep pointing out votes like that, then the gentleman is not interested in seriously working together.

As I say, it is going to have to be a serious effort, not a partisan one. I look forward to joining with all my colleagues in that.

THE FUTURE AND WHERE WE GO FROM HERE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, now that several of us have had a chance to develop several themes, I would welcome the chance to use a good portion of my time in constructive debate with my colleagues. I do not want them to think they are not welcome to join in, because I want to them to, on both sides of the aisle, as long as we agree on one thing: We will concentrate on the future and where we go from here. I would only ask my colleagues, in courtesy, to emphasize that. Where do we go from here. What are your proposals, what great choices lie ahead, where do we come to grips with where we are.

I have a few opening points that I would like to make.

Does the gentleman wish to make an introductory comment? I would welcome it.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say that I think the framework the gentleman has set forward for us is perfectly reasonable. Speaking from this side of the aisle, we do not suggest for a minute that gentleman on either side of the aisle should not be permitted to come to the floor and talk about the subject matter that they want to talk about. I think the framework that the gentleman has presented to us is perfectly reasonable.

Mr. MOODY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we now find ourselves, as we move into the second half of 1984, in a very precarious situation. We are in the midst of a rosy recovery, a boom recovery, which has been wonderful in some areas of the country and not so wonderful in others, but in aggregate mass terms, certainly, we are in the up-cycle, in the upswing of the business cycle.

The question I think we have to focus on is what price are we paying to obtain this boomlet and where will it lead us and how long it is expected to last and what are some of the potential consequences of where we are and where we are going.

One of the things I think we have to acknowledge is that despite the talk of supply-side economics, we are in the most expansionary Keynesian fiscal policy period that this country has ever seen. Keynesian economics is obviously inappropriate for all situations at all times. It may be appropriate if one is in a deep recession. Keynesian economics of pump priming, stimulation, deficit finance, may offer some relief to jar an economy off of low-level excess capacity equilibrium. And an economy can stay at equilibrium with tremendous excess capacity in unemployment. It needs to be jolted off that.

But the shot of adrenaline that is now being injected into our society is extremely dangerous because the current growth rates, real growth rates, of 7-plus percent simply are not sustainable.

An earlier speaker this evening, our friend from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] said that "liberal economists." And I am not sure who they are. I do not consider myself one of those, but whoever they are, claim that only 3 percent growth is sustainable. I do not know of any reputable economist who says that. But certainly I do not know of any reputable economist who says that 10 percent growth, real growth, is sustainable either unless one is coming from a very low base with a tremendous excess capacity.

I think if you envisage the economy you can look at it as a kind of slanted ceiling of potential maximum output if everybody is employed or some frictional marginal amount, a number of people, are not employed, but almost all other resources are. That slanted ceiling probably grows at a rate something in the 5- to 6-percent range, depending on the capital stock available, the education of the labor force, and the amount of plowing into the future that one is willing to put. If you plow more into the future that projectory can be increased so that you can grow faster.

Unfortunately, we are not doing that. We are soaking up that capital for current consumption.

So we are in the middle of a consumer-led demand boom. As we approach that ceiling we are going to see some serious consequences. It is not like physical science. Economists are not like doctors where you can issue a certificate of malpractice because there are many unknowns in economics, but I think it is pretty safe to say that by sometime mid-1985 we will be reaching those ceilings of capacity and bottlenecks will develop and prices will begin to creep up.

The fact that we are in a rapid recovery phase now without inflation does not mean that Reaganomics has worked or has not worked. We are really in a period of classical recovery. It has all the earmarks of classic economic recovery which we have seen many times in our history.

The present set of policy combinations, of monetary and fiscal policy, simply prove the age-old adage, if you stimulate economy enough you can recover it.

I think this administration has reaffirmed two things which most classical economists have maintained for a long time, namely, if you are willing to hit economy with a sledgehammer, you can bring down inflation. If you are willing to undergo 10, 11 percent unemployment, you can bring down inflation.

□ 2150

This President has shown that that is true. Has reshown that is true, because that basically has been the classical tenet. It has been proved again that if you are willing to undergo those kind of unemployment figures, you can bring down inflation, and we have done so.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Now, that we have added under the Reagan administration 7 million new jobs to this economy from approximately 98 million jobs to 105 million jobs, why has not inflation under the theory that you just espoused, why has not inflation started to skyrocket ahead? In fact, why has it not done it many months ago as many economists predicted in 1983?

Mr. MOODY. To answer your question is because we are in a dynamic framework; we are not in a static labor market situation. There are more people in the labor force today than there were when this administration took office.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to point out to my colleague that you are talking about unemployment figures and GNP figures. Let me just deal very clearly with one of the campaign promises of 1980 that your party and the President promised sustained economic growth.

By 1984 you promised a GNP 15.5 percent higher than in 1980. Indeed, instead real GNP fell nearly 2 percent in 1982 which is a post war record, and in 1984 is up only 9.9 percent. The shortfall in output, which is about $500 billion, amounts to some $2,000 for every man, woman, and child in America.

Now, unemployment in 1980, when the President came in and you controlled the Senate, the average unemployment would be down to 6.4 percent. This is statistically proven. During the recession, during the Reagan recession or Republican recession or national recession, if we are going to be bipartisan, unemployment reached a postwar record of 10.7 percent, fully 11.9 million people looking for work. Yes; unemployment in 1984 is now 7.6 percent, so we are back where we started.

For you to claim great gains in unemployment I think just distorts the record.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield so I can reply?

Mr. MOODY. Let me reclaim my time. I will give you plenty of time to reply.

Mr. HUNTER. Can I correct a few figures?

Mr. MOODY. Yes; you will be given ample opportunity.

To round out what I was trying to convey to the gentleman in response to this question, yes, there are more jobs existing today than when this administration took over, but there are also more people in our country and more people looking for work in our country. I think the key number you want to look at is not the number of new jobs created, because we have to have always new jobs created, additional jobs created or we will really be in trouble. That has got to be constant. But what is the rate of unemployment. As I say, this administration's regime of Reaganomics that this Congress did two things: It showed that if you hit an economy with a sledge hammer you can wring inflation out of it, and it showed if you stimulate an economy with enough deficit spending adrenalin you can bring it back up, which is what we have done.

There is no magic in this; there is no new economic dicoveries in this process. We are in a classical boom-bust or bust-boom phase and let us not call it by anything else.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. We are not, as I understand, the unemployment rate is not 7.6, it is 7.1. It was not 7 percent in 1980, it was 7.4 percent. In fact, the gentleman's thesis of priming the pump, developing inflation, developing jobs does not run true and that we have now not only 105 million jobs which is 7 million new jobs, and we not only have a rate which has gone down to 7.1 percent. Many economists claim we would not break 8 percent until 1987, but we have done it without a high rate of inflation. We have a rate of inflation that is roughly 4 percent. The misery index, that was spoken of by Mr. Mondale and Mr. Carter, we are not speaking of the past, we are speaking of the gentleman who is running for President, was about 34.5 percent; 21 percent interest rates, 13.5 percent inflation rates in 1980. That is roughly halved by this President, and that includes a 4-percent inflation rate and a 13-percent interest rate.

Mr MOODY. I have every respect for the gentleman and I want you to develop your points, but let us try to stick to one point at a time. The misery index is another topic, let us stick with the issue we are dealing with, unemployment.

Let me be the first to concede that unemployment today is heading in the right direction at a very rapid pace, and I think we should all be very happy for it. There is credit and blame on both sides because this Congress voted for the whole program, and this Congress cannot shuck the whole thing off on anybody else. Nor can the administration claim all the credit because if it wishes to claim—

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will yield, is the gentleman saying it is not Reaganomics then that is responsible for the 105 million jobs we have today?

Mr. MOODY. Let me finish my point. I cannot handle that many interruptions all at once. Let me give you one at a time, OK? Let me say this: That you cannot simultaneously claim credit for the reduction in inflation unless you also claim credit for the job loss that we went through to get it. You cannot claim credit; you have to accept blame for both if you want to accept credit for one.

Mr. McEWEN. If the gentleman would yield to me, that is simply not the case. If the gentleman would permit me, as was pointed out by the earlier gentleman from Georgia today as to when the recession began the facts of the matter are that in the latter part of 1980 through October 1981, Americans were losing jobs at the rate of 10,000 a day or 60,000 a week. Now, when the economy is in a nosedive, as an economist, you can appreciate the fact, contracting at a negative 2.5 percent that people are losing jobs.

Now in order to turn that around, this Congress, the 97th Congress, made changes in August 1981 that would take effect beginning in October 1981 which actually impacted in 1982 at the earliest. So as the economy is contracting in 1980, contracting in 1981, people are losing jobs at the rate of 60,000 a week thoughout 1981. The President's policies begin to take effect in 1982, it is simply unfair to intimate that the recession was brought on by his policies.

Now, the reason that some of us are so concerned at this point is that we sat here hour after hour, day after day, listening to speaker after speaker on that side of the aisle point out to us that none of this would ever work. I remember Mayor Koch from New York stand up and say that this is a disastrous policy, and that we are going to have rampant inflation. In fact, as was pointed out earlier tonight, that all of their predictions were for that to happen. And many of you in your freshman class ran in 1982 on precisely those assurances that in 1983 and 1984 this country would be in the doldrums. What happened?

In 1983 we had a growth that grew from zero to 6 percent. From 1982 growth of stagnant economy to 6 percent growth by the end of 1983. Now what does that mean in real terms to you and me? The size of our economy to the United States of America, as an economist you can appreciate, that 3.5 percent growth means that enough new jobs are created to absorb the new people entering the job market. If the economy does not grow that fast, then more people enter the job market than new jobs are created and unemployment rises. When productivity rises more rapidly than 3.5 percent, then people are pulled off the unemployment lines and into the job market.

Now, in 1977 we had 5.5 percent real growth. That was enough new jobs being created.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman suspend?

Mr. McEWEN. We went down to a negative growth in 1980, and now we are back up to 7.5 percent growth. Now to insert the President into that and to say that that dip from 5.5 growth in 1977 to negative 2.5 by 1980, and back up to 7.5 percent now, to say that that is Reagan's fault that we went through that slump is simply standing logic on its head and worse than that, it is standing theory on its head.

I have imposed upon the gentleman's time, but I have much to add on this point and I thank him for yielding.

Mr. MOODY. I think you can now see why some of my earlier colleagues were hesitant to yield. We do not get a question or a short comment, we get a long speech. Let us try to keep the focus.

Mr. McEWEN. Does the gentleman disagree with anything that I said?

Mr. MOODY. Yes, I do.

Mr. McEWEN. Was it incorrect at any point?

Mr. MOODY. Yes, it was.

Mr. McEWEN. Would he point that out?

□ 2200

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman has said so much in what I thought would be a brief yielding that one hardly knows where to begin. I was not taking copious notes, but I stand by the following propositions:

A number of the policies which this period, 1981 through 1982, saw carried out, fiscal and monetary policies, had the effect of bringing down the inflation.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOODY. I will in a minute. When I am debating 4 people at once, it is difficult to finish a single sentence without being interrupted to ask another question. I am attempting to answer this man, and in the middle of that I am asked to yield again before even finishing the answer to him.

You can see why the first set of people were hesitant to yield under this barrage of questions. I will try to get back to this gentleman.

I will simply stand the assertion that in 1981 and 1982, a number of policies were put in place which had the effect of bringing down inflation. They also had the effect of exacerbating sharply what was the beginning of a decline. I am not saying the decline began with Mr. Reagan's tenure; it did not. The unemployment increases were beginning under Mr. Carter's adminstration, and that is absolutely correct.

That does not mean to say that none of the policies that ensued from 1981 on had any effect. If they had effect on inflation, and I think they did, a positive one, they also had an effect on unemployment, a serious effect. That is all I would say.

Mr. McEWEN. The reason that I responded in the manner that I did was because that was not what you said just a moment ago.

Mr. MOODY. I was attempting to develop my thesis and I was stopped in the middle.

Mr. McEWEN. Moments ago you said it was the Reagan administration and Reaganomics that brought down unemployment, and I thought it was appropriate to point that out.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana]. The gentleman in the well has the time.

Mr. MOODY. I would only ask that we extend each other the courtesy, which I know you want to, to let each gentleman finish his point without numerous interruptions.

I cannot verbatim reproduce what I was saying in the well, but I was attempting to make the point I just made: that it is a mixed picture; that the downturn was partly in progress when the administration changed, but it was made more steeply downward by a series of policies not all of which were this administration's doing, but some were. Monetary policy played a very important part of this time. We can discuss monetary policy and the interaction and the relationship of this administration to the Fed.

I would really prefer to move forward and talk about the consequences of where we are. I think that is much more productive because I do not think the blame anywhere all on one side or all on the other, and I think that is my essential point I am attempting to engage in the dialog with my colleagues on this side of the aisle.

The question is: Where do we go from here? The serious consequences of deficits of this magnitude cannot be doubted. It will entail the most massive transfer from wages to capital that the Nation has ever seen. As I mentioned earlier, 85 percent of the income tax is derived from withholding. By the year 1988, almost half of that withholding will go simply to pay interest on the debt. This is going to be a tremendous burden on our children, our grandchildren. As I have mentioned, it will represent a real transfer of wealth from one set of economic actors in our society, wage earners, to another set of actors in our society, holders of capital.

It will have a very serious consequences in terms of shifting real resources overseas, as overseas owners of our Government bonds, and that is a very sharply increasing number, will be earning these yields that we are now going to be obligated to pay.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage my colleagues in a brief colloquy if I could, and that is, once again, the issue of discussion and dialog.

I wondered if the gentleman could explain to us why it is that the President refuses to allow the Senate conferees to meet without conferees. Could the gentleman answer that, and I ask this in good faith. I will yield to——

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman does not control the time.

Mr. MOODY. I control the time.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I will, indeed, yield to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I thought we were going to discuss the future.

Mr. MOODY. That is what I wanted to do.

Mr. WALKER. I would prefer to discuss the future.

Mr. MOODY. I was attempting to develop some themes about the future.

Mr. WALKER. And I appreciate that. I think that is where the healthy discussion lies, because I think the gentleman would agree from what I understand him to say, that what we need is investment in that future; that we indeed have to have growth in the economy in order to do a number of these things for the future; that without growth we do not have very much chance of having proper employment, of having all of the things that families want.

The whole scheme of our economy is based upon the fact that we have growth in the economy. Would the gentleman agree?

Mr. MOODY. Absolutely. But let us try to keep it short, because I want to say some corollary things to what I was saying.

Mr. WALKER. OK. Would the gentleman just give me two answers to questions?

Is the deficit at the present time going up or down?

Mr. MOODY. Compared to 1983, the deficit appears to be coming in under it.

Mr. WALKER. And that is primarily because of growth; is that not correct?

Mr. MOODY. That is correct. That is primarily because revenues are up, tax revenues, because of the acceleration in the recovery, and correspondingly there is less safety net spending because of the acceleration of the recovery.

Mr. WALKER. I would agree absolutely with the gentleman. Let me ask just one other question and I will let the gentleman continue.

Is this an investment-led recovery or a consumer-led recovery, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. MOODY. In my opinion, and the opinion of a number of other observers, it has been a consumer-led recovery. It may lead to an investment phase. We hope so.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield further, I think that is where we may have a difference. I would contend that what we have is an investment-led recovery, and as you look toward the future, and so on, that has some different consequences than the gentleman's contention that it is a consumer-led recovery. I think that is where some of the dichotomy may be. I will await the gentleman making his points.

Mr. MOODY. All right. The consequences of the deficit are important to understand, because only if we do will we galvanize the political will to make the necessary sacrifices that have to be made on all sides in order to attack the deficit. There is no way, and I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will agree, there is no way to seriously attack the deficit without broad-scale sacrifice affecting wage earners, affecting pensioners, affecting farmers, affecting bond holders, affecting equity holders, at least in the short run.

In the long run if we do it right, everybody will be better off. I am not saying everybody is going to be worse off in the long run, because that is the worst of all scenarios, but we, I think, would have to agree there is going to have to be some shortrun pain in 1985, and hopefully we will begin that equitable sacrifice in 1984, in order to get where we all want to go.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I guess we would disagree with the point, not necessarily that there is no sacrifice unless we call for it, but the core of our economic beliefs says that this Government and this Congress should be pursuing policies which will maximize economic growth which, as the gentleman just agreed with our colleague from Pennsylvania, is really the only thing that thus far has contributed substantially to the reduction of the deficit from last year's levels.

I will not go so far as some of our colleagues and say that the entire deficit can be wiped out through growth. I would like to see that. I think it is possible, if you compare our growth rates to growth rates in Far Eastern countries, Singapore, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and Japan, if we achieve the growth rates of any of those economies have achieved over a period of time, then I would argue certainly we can eliminate the deficit through growth alone. But surely we believe that if we maintain a relatively strong pace of economic growth and couple that with modest spending cuts, that we can deal with the deficit problem in that manner.

Mr. MOODY. I agree, and I would not disagree seriously with what the gentleman has just said. I would qualify my agreement by saying this: The rates of growth experienced in Singapore and some of the other rapidly growing Asian economies are probably not possible in a mature economy, be it this one or any other. They are at a different stage in their economic path, and most thoughtful observers and economic historians feel that in those stages you can achieve much higher rates of growth than you might later. So the 12 or 14 percent growth rates are probably not possible in this society.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. MOODY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, because the gentleman is touching on one of the really critical points, and really the entire point that our colleague from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], was making earlier tonight, which is that we believe there is mounting evidence that although the statement the gentleman from Wisconsin would have been true probably for the last 50 years, we believe it may not be so true any more because our economy is in such a state of transition that it may not necessarily be accurate to refer to it as a mature economy, to use the gentleman's term.

We are creating new industries. The economy is changing rapidly and it may be that rather than being at the peak or the plateau of an aging industrial economy, we are in the beginning stages of a post industrial economy.

Would it not be tragic if we looked at that initial stage of a new economy where we could indeed achieve tremendous growth through high technology information systems, new global markets, if we looked at that and said it is not possible to achieve those rates of growth and we must pursue policies that will reduce that rate of growth? That was precisely the point that our colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] was making.

Mr. MOODY. Indeed, it would be tragic if we took the wrong gamble, but it would also be tragic if we took a gamble the other way. I mean, we are playing for very high stakes. One could, if one bet the bank, bet the economy on undertaking tremendous debt, just a tremendous massing of data, in order to bet on those kind of growth rates, one would be taking a very big gamble. I am not saying it necessarily would not work, but it is not a gamble that I would want to take myself. I think we ought to be a little more cautious in the kind of growth rates we are banking on.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I was in the middle of something else, but I will yield.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Let me say to the gentleman that that is the reason why I think it is important that we distinguish between the gentleman's concept that we have a consumer-led recovery and my concept that we have an investment-led recovery. If in fact we are experiencing an investment-led recovery, and there is a lot of evidence to show that, then we are in fact seeing the kinds of growth that do appear to be sustainable over a long period of time, because what we have is the creation of new businesses. We are not approaching the peak of our productive capacity. We are in fact creating new productive capacities that would allow this economy to grow sometime in the future. That then is not being financed by debt. It is being financed by investment. It is being financed by investment that is in the hands of the American people right now and we think should remain there.

Given that, and if that kind of growth can be achieved, we think that then you can have a rapid deceleration of your debt obligation at the Federal level of your deficits simply because the growth will in fact bring down overall deficts.

Mr. MOODY. I understand the gentleman's point. Let me reclaim my time.

I do not think the case that we are making about the seriousness of the deficits rests over the debate whether or not it is consumer led or investment led. I think that is important, but it is not conclusive, for reasons that I can elaborate.

I would argue that it has been a consumer-led recovery. Why? Because until relatively recently, the investment picture has not been picking up. Now it is beginning to pick up. In terms of a time sequence, it has certainly been consumer led. Consumer purchases surged ahead as a result of the fiscal stimulus, the adrenalin that has been pumped into the economy.

I talked to some firms in my district. I have an industrial district. It is exactly the kind of district that should be benefiting if it is an investment-led recovery. It is not in my district at all and I do not think that is too typical.

Let me tell you what I asked these people who produce the kinds of things, investment goods, we produce investment goods in southeast Wisconsin, a lot of machine tools are produced there, mining equipment and a whole range of capital goods are produced there.

I asked my businessmen, with whom I am on good terms indeed, how does the 1981 tax cut work out, improved depreciation schedules and all the other benefits of ERDA? Are you going to be able to invest this new cash-flow that has been excused from taxation?

The answer was no, we cannot really do it now. We cannot do it in any immediate future because we have tremendous excess capacity now.

Tax stimulants to capital investments are not very useful when you have a large excess capacity sitting on your hands. If you have laid off 50 percent of your labor force, which is what happened in many of the machine tool companies in my district and you have 70 percent idle capacity, a tax investment is not a very important stimulus. It is later and it is beginning to be now, and that is all I would point out. That I think is a lot of strong evidence that it has been a consumer-led recovery.

That is not bad. I am not criticizing a consumer-led recovery. That is not bad. I am not criticizing it. Consumer-led recoveries sure beat the alternative of no recovery. Many times a consumer-led recovery will blend into an investment picture and that is what we are hoping to see. We all want to see that; but I think to expect the fact that we are creating new industries, which indeed we are, as our economy transforms, as we move away from industrial to service and as we do many of the things we are doing, as we become more interexport oriented, for example, which is very important; all those things will change our economy; but they do not get around the basic set of constraints inherent in any economy, that there is only a certain amount of capital and a certain amount of labor at a given skill level and it takes time to retrain people. It takes time to adjust those skill levels and achieve a new mix and it also takes time to rechange that capital, because capital does not blow away and disappear. It is set in concrete form literally and to turn it from producing mining equipment to producing computers takes time. That capital has to expire and be replaced by new.

The key to the whole process, and I think you gentlemen have said in effect that you agree, is the investment of new capital in the future, both embodied capital in terms of plant equipment and also human capital in terms of skills. Those can only be transformed at a certain rate in societies that have achieved the levels that we have, and we have one of the world's highest examples, have never yet been shown to suddenly take off and accelerate at rocket rates of 14 and 15 percent, except in coming out of a slump, but once you begin to hit bottlenecks, once you begin to lose unemployment, once you begin to achieve those full capacities or nearly full capacities, you begin to slow down. I think we have to take that into account.

We have to plan for this not necessarily being a continuously rising rocket. That is why the deficits are so serious and have to be dealt with, because when we hit those capacity restraints, we begin to hit those bottlenecks, we begin to hit that slanted ceiling I spoke of, whether it is slanting at 6 percent or 6½ percent or 7 percent, we are through a series of very simple calculations, which I think you would not dispute, going to continue to have some very serious deficits.

Now, if we get to the 14 percent growth rate, we can see the deficits maybe melt away; but short of those kind of growth rates, I would submit we are now in a situation of permanent structural deficits and why this leads to the horror scenario is that those deficits themselves are soaking up the capital which we desperately need to achieve growth. As we soak up capital for the deficit and just use it to run the Government on a daily basis, we are pulling out of the investment sector and as we do that we are not stimulating growth, we are destimulating growth.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I will yield, but the gentleman from West Virginia has not yet spoken and everybody will be given a chance.

I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. Good evening, world.

This is I think a worthwhile debate. I would just like to recount an incident that happened to me about a week ago, speaking about whether it is investment led or consumer led. Talking to a representative of a large industrial firm in my area and when asked a year ago, "Well, have these tax cuts made a big difference and are you now prepared to go forward and invest and stimulate the growth that we all want to see happen?"

He kind of laughed and he said, "It is pretty hard to do that when I am operating at 50 percent of capacity," and now he is up to 80 percent of capacity and hopefully he is getting to a point where that will make a difference.

I guess I would hope there is another point that is addressed and I look forward to the gentleman in the well or perhaps others addressing it, and that is in looking at statistics I see that investment, nonresidential domestic investment represented something like 11.7 percent of GNP in 1981. It is now something a little less than that. That would not seem to be the case were this a true investment led recovery. I would expect to see that amount increasing. Now, perhaps it is because the capacity has now become utilized and we are going to see some increase there.

I guess the other thing though as I see the consumer tax cuts and which was a classic remedy, Kenney used it in 1960, as I see the consumer tax cuts, I see them far larger than the corporate cuts, $22 billion perhaps, $87 billion consumer.

Once again it seems that suggests a consumer-led recovery.

I look forward to hearing a response, but I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct when he says that that has to be the crux of this.

I just would like to ask a couple of other questions. Not only is it consumer led, but it seems to me after all the dust is settled a typical Keynesian recovery in that you have come out of this recovery and we are still waiting in some areas, incidentally, for it, but we have come out of this recovery with a massive deficit, consumer led, and so it seems to me to be not much different than that which we have seen before.

□ 2220

As I say, I wanted to make those points and I look forward to a response.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I will do plenty of yielding but I am trying to move along before we quit, and I have several other points to cover. I hope everyone has a chance to speak.

As we begin to hit the point where these investments, tax credits and this investment stimulus begins to be important, when we move beyond 50 percent capacity and start getting it to 70, 80, 90, and the very ERDA tax cuts which were voted in this House at the request of the President in 1981 then will begin to take hold in real force.

Now, the danger is when this happens that you will have another surge in spending on the investment side without a medium—in fact, it is bound to be delayed, the surge in capacity because there is always a delay between spending and capacity when you enlarge a plant and equipment, and you begin to engage in a lot of spending and later you get more capacity, so you relieve some of those bottlenecks.

We are in danger of seeing start a double whammy take place in 1985. When you have a pretty rapid growth in consumer spending, which there is, and then add to it a surge in investment spending, and that could be, that could raise some very serious inflation. I am not positive what the numbers are going to be. But I think that is a real danger.

Now, why do I say that is so dangerous? The reason it is so dangerous is because so many of the entitlements are keyed to inflation. So much of our spending in government is keyed to inflation. In fact, this is frequently criticized as one of the ingredients of our problem. We are locked into COLA's in all kinds of ways, explicitly with the pension programs and implicitly in many other programs. As we give a supercharge to inflation, if that is what happens, then you are going to see a surge in government spending, pari passu, I mean necessarily, and then we are going to see some deficit jumps, again I am frightened to say, which has the effect, will have the effect, I think you mostly agree, of putting more pressure on financial markets in terms of interest rates.

So the horror scenario could well be in addition to the foreign debt problem that I mentioned, and we becoming a debtor nation by 1988, in addition to the massive transfers of wealth from wage earners to capital holders, we are skating on thinner and thinner ice and it is wonderful right now for some parts of the country, not so wonderful for others. But in general we have to agree that the country is moving upward and we are in danger of reaching a period where we have a relatively rapid overheating, a possible sudden enlargement of the deficit and another upward surge in interest rates.

That will have the effect of not remedying the problem but making it worse. Many economic programs, energy supplies, for example, have a self-correcting device within them. As oil becomes more scarce, the price goes up, and we ration it implicitly in that way and that is the value of prices, as a ration. They ration, and many economic programs have their own internal corrective devices. But here is one that does not because as the inflation gets bigger and some jolts can take place, can make it bigger, inflation can make it bigger, the COLA's can make it bigger, interest charges themselves are the most rapidly growing component of the deficit. If those things happen we find ourself in the situation where it is getting worse faster and instead of putting capital stock, instead of putting capital into investments, we are going to be pulling it out, to run government and meet our obligations, and lock in obligations which are 82 percent of the budget.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I reflected on the gentleman from West Virginia mentioning that he talked to one of his constituents who had a business. The gentleman said that his businessman said, you know, those tax cuts did not really help me when I am at 50 percent capacity. Now you say he is up to 80 percent, as many businesses are across the Nation, and he says now that we think perhaps some of these tax cuts will help, will help American business.

I think now you can understand why many of us do not think now is the time to raise taxes.

A second point I would make is that the gentleman has made a good case for reelecting the President. If you look at the future and look at what has happened this year, he has kept inflation down to around 4 percent. As the gentleman says, it would be disastrous if we had a 10-, 12-, 13-percent inflation rate.

I have heard of very few economists who predicted that things would be as good as they are right now. I do not think the gentleman predicted last year, in 1983, that unemployment would be 7.1 percent today, that we would have 7 million new jobs, and that we would have done that at a 4-percent inflation rate.

Could the gentleman, since I understand the gentleman is an economist, apparently, and I am sure you have made political statements, and academic statements last year, in 1983, can you tell me did you predict that inflation would be 4 percent and that unemployment would be down to 7.1 percent?

Mr. MOODY. No, I did not. But I did not predict anything else, because I know how hazardous predictions are. You can only I think reasonably predict trouble or the avoidance of trouble that you are headed for by what you do.

I do not think precise numbers are very frequently met with in reality. Most economists are disappointed, and that would be conservatives and liberals, because it is so hard to project to those numbers because there is such a vast interaction of numbers, inflation, unemployment, investment, and these things work as a large machine. It is very hard to know where any one gear on the machine is going to be.

Mr. HUNTER. Just one last point that I would like to ask the gentleman.

We do have a 4-percent inflation rate. I think the gentleman from West Virginia made an accurate statement. Many businesses across the country are now reaching the capacity where the tax cuts will be beneficial, will produce an expansion, will produce jobs. Both gentlemen have referred to that. They said we think now the tax cuts are going to do some good.

Does it make sense now to raise taxes, now that they are going to start working, in your estimation?

Mr. MOODY. I think we have to do some revenue restoration. Whether or not we raise those taxes I think is a very important, a very important national debate. And I hope the two Presidential candidates will debate which taxes have to be raised.

I would argue we have to restore some revenue. Some people argue for a consumption tax. Some people argue for different things. I do not think too many people are reasonably saying we should roll back all these investment tax credits, with the one caveat that we do not want to plunge too rapidly into what I just described as the scenario which might be where we are piling on a surge of investment spending on top of heavy consumer spending and then pump into capacity constraints again, and start seeing inflation.

I agree, inflation at 4 percent is important and we ought to try to keep it there.

So the tax cuts of 1981, which really have not been effective by our then agreement when we are at 50 percent capacity, suddenly become effective at the very moment that we have a very hot consumer stream of spending, which might lead us into some difficulty. So I do not think the 4 percent is a number that we can sit back and be self-satisfied with the 4-percent inflation. We can easily find ourselves moving higher from that number rapidly.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman would just yield briefly, the latest figures that I was looking at in Newsweek just a minute ago indicated investment spending, not consumer spending, but investment spending in this recovery has risen at approximately twice the rate of any postwar recovery, and that would seem to say that the gentleman is not entirely accurate when he is saying that he thinks this is a consumer-led recovery.

This recovery has strong elements of investment spending.

Mr. MOODY. May I just reclaim a moment here. When you start from the very disastrous base point that we were in the depths of this recession which virtually was a depression, the worst recession since the Great Depression of the 1930's, then I would say yes, the postwar recovery in everything looks pretty good from a very low point. So I do not think that is conclusive evidence when you have had a recession of the severity we had in 1982 and for part of 1983, and then to climb out, which can be very steep without saying that this is great, because you might be starting from a very low point.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Yes.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I just want to come back to the point I was discussing here earlier. We have kind of gotten around the horn there since. But I mean if we come back to the idea of what the future really means to the economy, when I talk about an investment-led recovery it goes beyond the statistics cited in Newsweek. It goes beyond some of the statistics that are out there. It is basically taking a look at the economy and what is reality right now.

And it seems to me that we lose track of some of this if we refer to this business or that business in my district, this industry or that industry in my district, that did not see the advantages of tax cuts right away, or its productivity is approaching the topmost point.

□ 2230

The point is this, that we are seeing a brandnew economy develop. The brandnew economy is a lot of small businesses are being created. We have had a historic expansion of small business in this country in the last couple of years. We have never seen small businesses created at the rate they have been in the last couple of years. Most of those are sole proprietor businesses because people are taking the tax cuts that they got and they are putting it into their own investment. That does not necessarily show up in Wall Street ledgers.

Mr. MOODY. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. WALKER. But it is happening in reality in the economy.

Mr. MOODY. May I interrupt the gentleman to make a point?

Mr. WALKER. Sure.

Mr. MOODY. There was a record number of bankruptcies during the 1982-83 period. Now if there is a record of new small businesses created, we may not be that much better off. I think the gentleman——

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Sure, I just wanted you to acknowledge that point.

Mr. WALKER. Sure; I acknowledge that point.

You always have when you are forming small businesses, you always have almost half of them fail. That has been historic.

Mr. MOODY. Not the rate of failure was record, one of the highest rates of failure of small business took place during 1982-83.

Mr. WALKER. I know; but the more people you have taking risks——

Mr. MOODY. No; the rate, the percentage.

Mr. WALKER. I understand. But the more people you have taking risks, the more people you have going into brandnew economic life, we are creating businesses that never existed before. We have an economy out there that is being created that never existed before. That is going to produce higher bankruptcies, but the fact is there are also more survivors than ever before in history. It is those survivors, it is that investment which is raising the productive capacity beyond anything we have experienced before, and which is the reason why ceilings on productive capacity really have no meaning in a debate about our economic future.

We do not even known what those ceilings are right now because we are in a period of expansion of what will ultimately be the major productive capacity of the country.

Mr. MOODY. Well, it is nice, it is wonderful to be optimistic. I am optimistic, and it is not a flat ceiling, it is a slanted ceiling. The debate is over what is the slant, the percentage of slant.

We may have a whole new economy where we can actually bet the bank, bet the economy, and bet the country on these fabulous rates of growth and the emergence of a totally new economy never seen before; but I would be cautious. I would be cautious because I think a more likely scenario is that we are going to see continually a changing economy as we have, but it will be a gradual change. It will be faster in some periods than others but we are not suddenly entering anew, I would suggest to the gentleman, we are not suddenly entering a new era qualitatively and quantitatively different economic relationships in a country this size with the capital stock this big and this important; nothing changes that fast.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Not on this moment.

So I think prudence is the better part of valor and I think the gentleman who purports, who proclaims himself to be a conservative would want to be conservative in the kind of chances he is willing to take with the economy. That is why I say the deficits must be brought down through positive action, not just waiting for growth to solve it.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Not yet.

To structure in deficits that rise to the $300 billion level by 1989 under CBO's projections is very dangerous, very dangerous.

Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would only say to you this: You and I cannot stand here and predict the future. I do not know what it is and you do not know what it is. But I do not think that our Nation should chart a course which is on a knife edge, and I described the horror scenario of the down side, on the assumption and on the philosophic belief that we are entering a whole new kind of economy and a whole new set of relationships and a whole new series of percentage growth rates are possible.

I think it important to focus on what could happen, as a conservative I would urge you to focus on what could happen if the President is wrong. What could happen, what could happen?

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Not yet.

What could happen if we are instead in basically the same kind of world which we have been in for a long time when capital stock changes rather slowly, where technology changes rather slowly, rapidly relatively to our grandfather's time, but slowly relative to the pattern now available worldwide.

If that is true, I tremble for my country's future because this administration is playing with stakes. And any future policy, if we endorse it as well, will be playing for enormous stakes on a very risky playing field.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. It does not mean it could not work out. It means we are on thinner and thinner ice, because the foreign debt bomb, the foreign debt fiscal time bomb which we are buying into with these deficits, because as I said before, 40 percent of our money is now being owed overseas, never before in the history of our Nation; 42 percent of income tax, corporate and personal, will go just to debt payment. The first $3,000 of the average family's tax liability will go just for debt payment. I ask you, how sensible and rationable can Government policies be in the future under that scenario?

Fiscal policy is going to be extremely hard to manage with that overhang of debt.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Because every point of the interest rate increase, it is not hard to imagine with debt that big you have great increases, but every point of interest rate increase, itself, will increase the deficit by $20 billion.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. I will now yield.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

You know, I find it hard to discuss the future if when I am discussing the future then you say we cannot predict the future, so there is no sense discussing it.

Mr. MOODY. Can I respond to that?

Mr. WALKER. And I would say to the gentleman——

Mr. MOODY. Can I respond to that, and then I will let you get your time back? I am urging caution because we cannot predict the future. What I am saying is if we are entering into an era where we are making these tremendous gambles and cannot predict the future it is still valid to talk about the risks entailed in the policy we now find ourselves.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will allow me to make my point.

Mr. MOODY. Surely.

Mr. WALKER. I would appreciate it.

Here is my point, and I thank the gentleman. I am not talking about taking a chance. I am talking about what is real, what is happening right now. You have tremendous growth in the economy right now with relatively low inflation.

Mr. MOODY. But it is not sustainable, it is not sustainable.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is making the case that it is not sustainable because we are about to reach the ceiling of productive capacity in this country.

Mr. MOODY. No; not just the capacity.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is making the point——

Mr. MOODY. We will soon.

Mr. WALKER. We are entering into a new phase in the economy where those productive ceilings that we have traditionally thought about are totally unrealistic, that in fact we do have the ability to grow.

Mr. MOODY. Let me ask you.

Mr. WALKER. That is not taking a chance. The real taking of a chance with the economy would be to choke off this recovery.

Mr. MOODY. We should not do that, either. And I am not proposing it. I am saying this——

Mr. WALKER. Taxes choke off economic recovery.

Mr. MOODY. They have two effects. They subtract resources from the economy.

Mr. WALKER. Just like interest rates.

Mr. MOODY. Yes; they have two effects: They subtract resources from the private economy, taxes, they subtract about 90 cents on the dollar from consumption and about 10 percent on the dollar from savings, that is what taxes would do because we save in about those ratios.

Mr. WEBER. All taxes?

Mr. WALKER. All taxes.

Mr. MOODY. No; income taxes, from personal income, tends to be in about that ratio. No; not every kind of a tax. An import tax does not; no.

Mr. WALKER. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. No; not quite yet because I am in the middle of a point. But taxes do, yes, subtract resources from the economy, absolutely. But borrowing subtracts it almost 100 cents on the dollar from your savings which should be going to investment.

That is why the two are not equal in their kind of subtractions. It is much more serious to subtract by way of borrowing out of a capital flow than it is to subtract by way of income taxes from the consumption which is also the borrowing flow.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman yield?

My contention is with taxes, you are taking the money directly out of the capital flow because what we are seeing expand is small businesses where people are utilizing the tax cuts that they got, utilizing some of the money that they have been able to save themselves to invest in their own businesses.

So that indeed comes out of the capital flow and as soon as you raise their taxes you reduce that capital flow to that small entrepreneur who may be on the verge of employing another person. And that is precisely the problem that we face if we start talking about massive new income tax increases.

Mr. MOODY. I think we are talking at cross-purposes here. An income tax does not come all out of small business, and I do not think anyone pretends that it does.

An income tax, my colleague, comes out of a wide variety of income.

Mr. WALKER. I do not disagree with that.

Mr. MOODY. OK; now we know statistically if you tax income you tax consumption a lot more than you tax capital because most people's income goes for consumption.

We are a fairly low-saving economy.

□ 2240

I need not remind the gentleman that we have one of the lowest savings rate of any industrialized country. One of the tragedies of that—it is great for consumption—is that we do not set aside nearly as much as a percentage as some other countries do, such as Japan, or even Canada for future investment.

So if you tax income, you are taxing 90, 88, 92 percent consumption and you are taxing 10 or 12 or 8 percent savings, so that it is not the same.

I would maintain that it is more important to not tax capital so heavily as in effect you do with the deficit. You borrow right out of the capital. You reach right into that capital savings pool and you lift it out and you spend it on government.

If you tax income, you lift it out of two pools, consumption savings and spend on government.

This is not to say we should not cut government, we should. We could spend another hour or two on that issue, but we are just trying to talk structural terms here. That is the point I am trying to make.

You may hurt yourself more by not taxing income than you do by taxing it. Nobody likes to pay taxes. You may not like to pay your bills, but if you do not pay your bills you have some very serious consequences.

Mr. WISE. If the gentleman would yield for 1 minute, that is a point that I think ought to be addressed because as the President noted in his State of the Union Message, he made the point that is being made that taxes directly taken out of the economy he is certainly right. But what takes it out equally and with interest often is the high deficit.

Sometimes, yes, you are paying a few dollars more, but when you put it to somebody on the basis of do you want to pay a few dollars directly now and to keep the deficit down, or do you want to in effect borrow those dollars that you are going to be paying back that interest over many years. That is something else altogether.

So I think the gentleman makes a good point. There has to be a balance. We are not talking just taxes. You are not talking just spending cuts. Spending cuts cannot do it by themselves either.

What you have to do is seek and find that balance. I think in the name of intellectual honesty that is what we ought to be realistically talking about, but recognizing, as the gentleman has pointed out, that taxes take out of the pool but so does that $108 billion of interest that we are paying this year that is going to go up to around $116 billion next year that is estimated to double by the end of the decade as the national debt doubles by the end of the decade. That is something that is coming right out of your pocket. And what is worse, you are paying interest on it.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. MOODY. Not quite, I want to round it out.

There is no point standing in the well or any place else in this room and complaining that taxes are all bad because they are going to zap small business.

Taxes are bad and good. They are bad because they withdraw resources from the private economy, but they are good because they can ease the pressure on financial markets if Government has gone overboard borrowing, which we have.

You have got to balance the two. And to take an ideological position on it is not very helpful or practical.

You have got to look at where the taxes are going to come. Some taxes come more out of business. Some taxes come more out of consumption. The tax cuts that were passed in 1981 benefited mostly business. I think most people would recognize that and acknowledge that.

My colleague, Mr. WISE, has pointed out that as deficits increase, the interest burden increases more than proportionally.

Here is the frightening thing. In today's economy the deficit is going to be $170, $180 billion. The interest charge on this debt, national debt accumulated so far, is going to be about $108 billion out of $170, $180 billion deficit. Well over half of it is going to be for interest charges alone.

By 1989, if we do not do something to seriously reduce the deficit, interest charges are going to be not one-half of the current annual deficit, they are going to be over two-thirds. In other words, we are going to sink faster and faster into a deeper and deeper hole.

We are now in the position in our society of borrowing money to pay interest charges. I do not need to tell you gentlemen on both sides of the aisle where that will lead. That is why it is wrong to take a flatout position that taxes cannot be raised. If they are raised to stave off disaster, they should be. They should be raised intelligently, not just willy-nilly. You have to pick carefully the kind of taxes we want.

But to refuse to talk about tax increases in order to stave off falling off the precipice is not sensible. I do not think ideological positions are helpful to this point of view. I think the President is making a very serious mistake for the future by not letting us get on with the spending cut side of the equation.

In truth, the gentleman from West Virginia points out, we have to have a balance. In truth, this House passed a resolution which went far more on the cutting side than on the taxing side.

THE BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. SPRATT]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to thank the gentlemen who did yield during their time this evening. I think it is healthy to have that kind of dialog. I think that that is what we should be all about out here on the House floor. I think that it is important that if we are going to raise issues that they be raised in the spirit of real debate in a way that assures that we do have an exchange of viewpoints here on the House floor.

We have been disappointed in times during the regular debate of the House that we feel that at many times debate gets shut off. Very, very often the other side will decide to impose gag rules in the midst of debates of important consequence.

I think that at least in the special order time we ought not to start imposing gag rules on the debate time. It is healthy and worthwhile.

Let me go for a moment to a couple of the points that the gentleman from Wisconsin was raising because I think it is important to understand specifically what we are talking about when we start talking about this business of taxes.

The gentleman admitted to me in the course of our discussion that in fact growth is bringing down deficits. If you are really concerned about doing something about deficits you have to have economic growth. There is no way you can tax yourself to balance budgets. There is no way you can reduce spending to get to balanced budgets. Taxing yourself to balance budgets would just have all kinds of anomolies in it. You would literally have to confiscate all income over $26,000 in this country in order to tax your way to a balanced budget.

I do not think that we can possibly conceive of moving in that direction.

You cannot get enough spending cuts out of military, out of domestic, out of anywhere to get yourself to a purely balanced budget. We have got to have economic growth.

As soon as you impose taxes on the economy you are in fact retarding economic growth. That is our point and the gentleman from Wisconsin told me, and he is absolutely right, that you have a retarding of growth of the deficit by the fact that you have more growth in the economy at the present time. As a matter of fact, it has come down by some $40 billion. I think it is important to understand that that is more than we have brought down the deficit in any other way within the economy.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will yield.

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

In addition, one of the things that is interesting about this is, one of the points that has been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin and other speakers on the other side repeatedly in that the economic recovery has not spread equally to all sectors of the economy and all regions of the country.

Let me tell you in my region of the country I know that that is true. Agriculture is still in a state of recession, if not outright depression.

The point is I do not conclude from that that the right prescription for our economy is to try to slow down the recovery for the rest of our economy. It seems to me that what we ought to be interested in is finding policies that will expand the recovery that has so benefited certain sectors of our economy in certain sections of our country to those sections of our economy, such as my congressional district, perhaps the gentleman from West Virginia, and others, that are not presently benefiting.

It seems to me ludicrous to suggest, particularly from those of us who come from districts in the country that are still hurting economically, that we ought to pursue policies aimed at reducing the rate of growth in this economy because we do not consider it sustainable. I am not suggesting that the gentleman from Wisconsin outright suggested that we ought to reduce the growth rate in the economy, although I think, as does the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that that would be the result of his policies. But certainly the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board makes no bones about it. He wants to very directly slow down the growth rate of the economy.

□ 2250

He talks about reducing growth in GNP, and when those of us on this side of the aisle get a little exercised about people who are talking about tax increases, I suppose that is one of the things we are concerned about—the steady flow of voices that say the economy is growing too fast, it is recovering too quickly. I am afraid my section of the country, if the Democrats have their way and if Mr. Volcker has his way, recovery will never reach my section of the country.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, I will be glad to extend to the gentleman the courtesy he did not extend to me, and I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is yielding to me?

Mr. WALKER. That is what I said.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not hear him.

I would just like to make two points. The first one is the gentleman talking about tax increases and stating that tax increases were harmful. I would like to just have the gentleman expand a little bit on that. Is the gentleman presently satisfied with our tax system as it is today?

Mr. WALKER. Of course not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You are not satisfied?

Mr. WALKER. Of course not. It stinks. It is a lousy contraption that has been built by a whole series of Democratic Congresses. Remember, every tax bill has to begin in the House of Representatives. It is a lousy, special-interest ridden tax system that ought to be totally reformed and abolished in its present form.

Mr. RICHARDSON. So I think the gentleman is also saying that the Kemp tax bill, which he obviously supports, was a Democratic initiative. My point, if I can ask——

Mr. WEBER. No. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is the gentleman yielding to me?

Mr. WALKER. Reclaiming my time, obviously there are people who have put forward plans. The Kemp tax bill that you referred to had two parts to it. It cut the tax rates across the board 25 percent and it changed the investment climate to create jobs.

Most of the other special-interest garbage, including the lowering of tax rates for the superrich in the country, the lowering of 70 percent down to 50 percent, that in fact was gerry-rigged on there by the Democrats.

I will be glad to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, I see. The Democrats.

As I recall, one of the proudest accomplishments of the supply siders and the President, although he seems to be backtracking, and I recall Mr. Stockman was sent to the woodshed for suggesting that the tax cut was not working, and I recall Dr. Feldstein, the former head of the Council of Economic Advisers, for talking about some realities and saying that the tax cuts had not been positive.

Mr. WALKER. Yes, but they were wrong.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And that the main problem we had was the deficit.

Mr. WALKER. They were wrong.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My point is, I believe if we are going to have some sustained economic recovery and if we are going to have fairness in this country that we need to change the present Tax Code.

The gentleman is saying that ultimately any talk of a tax increase necessarily means that he—I got it direct that by his saying, not talking and tampering with the Tax Code, that he is opposing his flat tax or he opposes the flat rate income tax or Kemp-Kasten or the Bradley-Gephardt.

Mr. WALKER. I do not know where the gentleman got that. All I am saying is that we ought to reform the tax structure. But you can do that without imposing an additional tax burden on the American people.

I do not think you ought to charge the working families of this country one additional dime in taxes. You can reform the tax structure, but let us do it without raising taxes on the American people. They are paying too much already. They are paying far too much in taxes already. Let us reform the Tax Code.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman think that the Kemp-Roth tax bill, as initiated by your colleagues and supply siders, has contributed to the deficit or not? Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. WALKER. I think it has contributed to the deficit in bringing it down.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In bringing the deficit down?

Mr. WALKER. As a result of the growth that that has built into the economy, we now see the deficits coming down. This year the deficit will be reduced $40 billion as a result of growth. The growth in the economy is directly attributable to the tax cut that was enacted in 1981. So, yes, it has had an effect on deficits. It has helped lower deficits substantially. And I think that that is a positive benefit to the economy, and I am shocked when people come to this floor and suggest that there was something horrid that happended back in 1981, and that somehow we hurt the economy. The economy at the point the tax increase was passed was at 21½ percent interest, 13 percent inflation, 7½ percent unemployment and negative growth. We have reversed all of those things at the present time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think, as the gentleman knows, there is a basic disagreement between him and Members on his side of the aisle and this side of the aisle on what has caused the current recovery. Most of us, and I include myself in this, disagree that the trickle-down tax cut of 3 years ago is responsible for today's economic recovery. I think most economists agree with us, and that is that the economic recovery today is consumer-led, No. 1; and, No. 2, it is occasioned by too much Government spending. That is what is leading the economy. In other words, we are borrowing money at such a rate that it is expansionary in the short term. That is what is leading us out of trouble in the short term. Not the trickle-down tax cut.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is obviously not in agreement with us. He has a right to his opinion. But I would say to the gentleman flatly that the facts show that this is an investment-led economy, that we do, in fact, have much investment in the economy. I have pointed out the fact that much of that investment is coming in small businesses, we have had a record number of formations of small businesses, we have had a record number of those small businesses survive. They are now in the process of expanding so that you have employment rising as many of those small businesses are created. We have created more jobs in the economy in 1 month this year in May than the entire European Common Market created in 12 years. There are real things happening out there. And to say that it has nothing to do with the tax cut I think is to ignore reality. The fact is that the deficits the gentleman is talking about are coming down. That is not to say we are not spending too much in Government. We are. We are spending far too much in Government. That is the reason why this gentleman has consistently brought amendments to the floor trying to cut back on that spending, and I must say I have not had very much success with that.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I disagree with the gentleman when he says that the majority of American economists would agree with him that the tax cuts are not the reason why unemployment has dropped to a point in which we have now a 7.1-percent rate. We have created 7 million new jobs. Inflation is still at 4 percent.

Let me just read from the business section of Newsweek, and at least one noted economist. This is the most recent issue.

> The recovery strength has turned much of conventional wisdom on its head. Yet its roots are no mystery. They lie in the tax cuts of 1981, which will provide reductions of $300 billion in personal taxes and $50 billion in business taxes over 1983 and 1985.

According to Allen Sinai, chief economist at Shearson Lehman American Express.

I would simply say to the gentleman from Montana that I have heard him make that statement a number of times, that he does not agree with that proposition. I would like to have him cite at some time the economist that he claims he has backing him up on that proposition. I have not seen them, and I have not seen their statements.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Let me yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, and then I will yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding.

Let me say that I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his analysis.

But furthermore, even if the gentleman from Montana, our friend Mr. WILLIAMS, is correct in that this is a consumer-led recovery, that does not necessarily lead one to the conclusion that the tax cuts that we voted have had no impact on that recovery. Presumably an expansion of consumer spending has some relationship to the individual's disposable income, and we can prove fairly definitively that disposable income in this country has improved over the last 3 years in large measure because of the reduction in inflation and the fact that we have reduced the tax burden on the average working American. That has resulted in an increase in disposable income without which even a consumer-led recovery would not be possible.

I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from California asked the name of an economist, asked the gentleman from Montana to cite, that stated that the tax cuts were not responsible for the recovery and were not working. I would like to cite Mr. David Stockman, who is presently head of the Office of Management and Budget.

Mr. WALKER. David Stockman is not an economist.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe he is head of the President's Office of Management and Budget.

Mr. WALKER. He is an administrator and a former Member of Congress, but he is not any economist.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You disagree with him? You asked for the name of an economist.

Mr. WALKER. You have not cited the name of any economist. I happen to disagree with some of the gloom and doom that David Stockman has put forth. I think David Stockman's analysis of the economy has in many instances been wrong. We can show time after time where Marty Feldstein and David Stockman have just been absolutely wrong in their projections, that they have been almost as bad, not quite, but almost as bad, as the Congressional Budget Office.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman does not consider them economists, is that correct? Mr. Feldstein and Mr. Stockman.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Feldstein is an economist. You did not cite Mr. Feldstein. You cited Mr. Stockman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I cited Mr. Stockman. I cited Mr. Feldstein earlier when I talked about——

Mr. WALKER. You just answered the gentleman from California, you cited Mr. Stockman, and the point we were making to you is that Mr. Stockman, who happens to be a friend of mine, is not an economist.

I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The question that I asked was, the question that I put to the gentleman from Montana was, to name some of the major economists that he claims a majority—at least my understanding of his statement was that a majority of the American economists do not lay the present recovery at the feet of the 1981 tax cuts. Most of the economists that I have read, and practically all of them lately, say it is no secret. Again, "the recovery strength has turned much of the conventional wisdom on its head," I am quoting, "yet its roots are no mystery."

Now, we sat here in 1981 and 1982, when the country was having some difficult times, and people laid the difficult times at the feet of the tax cuts and the President.

Reaganomics was a term we heard every day from gentlemen on that side of the aisle as well as many of today's media commentators. Today you do not hear the term very often, but I think the statement Mr. MOODY made, Mr. WISE made also, should be well taken. They talked about the fact that there is hope that this economy will take on strength from the tax cuts that are now available to America's business people as the capacity of our businesses edges up to 80 percent. They think that tax cuts will help the economy, and my question to them, if they would like to answer the question, then would be, do they think then that Mr. Reagan, that this Congress should give up those tax cuts at this time just when, in the words of your small businessman in your district in West virginia, just when they are starting to do some good.

Mr. WALKER. Let me yield to the gentleman from West Virginia who just had a direct question asked of him.

Mr. WISE. I will be glad to respond to that and I appreciate the gentleman yielding. Should they be given up? Some of them, no; some of them, yes. I think some of them should have clear strings put on them. For instance, I do not think that United States Steel should be given free reign to go out and take their tax cuts and invest in Marathon Oil. I think that this Congress I hope was intending that those tax cuts would be, that in the truest spirit of an investment-led economy, would be put into reinvestment in the steel industry, and not——

Mr. HUNTER. Let me make my question more specific, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield.

Mr. HUNTER. I am talking about the specific tax cuts that you said that your West Virginia small businessman was hopeful would help his business, and you said you thought it perhaps would as his capacity gets up to 80 percent. Now would you in the interest of cutting this deficit that you have talked about, would you take away those tax cuts from that business and businesses like it? Those are the tax cuts I am talking about.

Mr. WALKER. Let me yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania. First of all, the gentleman from, the business person from West Virginia I was speaking of was not a small business person, a large manufacturing concern. Second is he as concerned about the deficit as he is about the tax breaks because when he goes in to borrow money, he is going to pay a high interest rate if something is not done about it.

Mr. HUNTER. So what is your judgment? Should you take those tax cuts away from him that you say will probably help him.

Mr. WISE. You look at the tax package as a whole and you take that which is not accomplishing that which you want to.

As an example, the United States Steel example where you have——

Mr. HUNTER. I am not talking about United States Steel you know, we can——

Mr. WISE. Yes, sir, you are.

Mr. HUNTER. No, I am not talking about United States Steel, I am talking about the specific——

Mr. WALKER. Wait a minute, DUNCAN, I have yielded to the gentleman from West Virginia, I will continue to yield to him and I will get back to you.

Mr. WISE. Yes, in a way you are, sir, because you are asking how would we restructure the tax cuts. I would say do not give the tax cuts that do not accomplish what I think both you and I would seek which is investment in domestic industry.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman, and I would simply say to the gentleman that I would love to think that this Congress is able to micromanage the economy in that fashion. That we can say that we are going to give you this investment tax credit except in these instances. And so we say to a company we are going to give you a tax credit, but we do not want you to invest in anything out here that might be profitable that would help you then put new productive capacity on line for your basic business.

I do not think we can make those kinds of judgments. There are some gentlemen in the House who are economists; I am not one of them. There are some people who are much more versed in the ways of business than I am, but I do not trust our collective judgment to know all and be all to the economy. It seems to me that what you have got to do with taxes is assure yourself that you have created a fair tax structure and one which encourages a growth in the economy. Those are the criteria that we ought to look at. That we ought not try to micromanage everything through the tax system. That is the problem we now have. We have got a real problem in our taxes because we try to micromanage everything. We have tried to tell people when to put storm windows on their house, we have got everything in there. We have got virtually every special interest in the country covered in some way in the Tax Code. It is time to reform it.

I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think the gentleman has made the point very clearly, but I would just, if the gentleman would allow me to direct a question to our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, I think the nub of this debate really is what taxes are you going to increase? We have laid out fairly clearly our view that tax increases are detrimental to growth in the economy.

But as I look at what we are hearing from the Democrats in their platform, tonight on the floor, from candidate Mondale, what do we hear? First of all, we hear that they are committed to real dollar increases in defense spending. Now, I am not criticizing that; I think that is the proper approach. I contrast that though with what is probably the popularly held view, at least in my district, that the Democrats will solve this deficit problem by cutting defense spending. The fact is, they are committed to real after inflation increases in defense spending. It is just the matter of degree that is different.

Second of all, throughout the Democratic platform and on this floor tonight we have heard a litany of areas in the domestic budget that the Democrats feel have been neglected over the last 4 years where presumably they will propose increases not decreases in spending.

Hence, when I hear the Democrats talk about tax increases, I do not hear little tax increases, I hear great big tax increases. I would say to our colleagues tonight, what we would like to know is where would you increase taxes?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. I think it is a good and fair question. I am going to answer that question but I am going to come back at you with something also, because I think that is what at the spirit of this, is where do you also cut and where do you raise taxes, where do you cut, and where does growth, the increase in the economy, where does that also play a factor because I think everyone here is agreed that you are not going to solve the whole deficit problem simply by expansion and growth.

First of all, where do you look at taxes, well I think you take a start where this Congress took its start, part of the President's policy, I might add in the recent Tax Reform Act that was passed here, which Congress looked at. Certain loophole closing, certain luxury taxes, things along those lines.

Now in terms of real dollar increases in defense, you are right, the Democratic Party supports an increase in defense, and you are also right when you say but not to the degree that you or apparently the President supports.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would let me reclaim my time just to ask him a question. It is not good enough to tell us that you are going to close loopholes. In all honesty, they go through that exercise around here, and it does a few billion dollars and so, that is not going to get you to a balanced budget, it is not going to eliminate deficits. Where are the major tax increases that are going to take place that are going to achieve something real about deficit reduction.

Mr. WISE. Would the gentleman yield? Because it is not good enough to close loopholes and it is not good enough to say you are going to balance that budget by ending waste, fraud, and abuse. That is exactly what we have heard for the last 4 years.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman has not listened very well to what I have been saying tonight. I have been saying that we need to reduce Federal spending, and I have come out here and offered an awful lot of amendments on the floor that are aimed at reducing Federal spending, and so my record is pretty clear on that. I can show you appropriations bill after appropriations bill where I have tried to save a few billion bucks, and those savings would add up to far more than the loophole closings that we hear so much about. But I would also say to the gentleman what we have suggested is that growth in the economy is the main way of reducing the deficit. That we are very, very firm on that; that that is the way we are going to get there. What we are concerned about is the proposals that we hear coming from you all are proposals that are aimed at retarding growth in the economy. That taxes, big taxes, lead to retarded growth in the economy. That is going to have a devastating impact on deficits; it is going to expand deficits, and when you expand deficits, you get to all the horror shows that the gentlemen have so vividly outlined to us tonight when you have high deficits.

I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. I think we are getting right back into a nonproductive area where you are saying high taxes, big taxes. We are not saying that; what we are saying is that you are going to have to take a balanced look. In terms of taxes, you are going to have to look at that area, like you are going to have to look at growth and like you are going to look at spending cuts.

Now, I ask the question would you support a budget freeze such as has been propounded by Members of both sides, I think, a freeze to freeze at last year's level that would give defense, for instance, a 3.5-percent real growth. Such as a freeze put forward by Senator HOLLINGS in the Senate.

Mr. WALKER. Well, I would say to the gentleman that is not a freeze.

Mr. WISE. What?

Mr. WALKER. That is not a freeze the gentleman is talking about. If we start talking about how much you are going to give over and above inflation.

Mr. WISE. Exactly. But you are also——

□ 2310

Mr. WALKER. I said here on the floor last evening that I think that if you put real growth into the economy, if you sustain 6 to 7 percent real growth over a period of 5 years——

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Let me just make my point. That you can allow the Federal budget to grow at a 3-percent rate, and within a 5- to 7-year period you can balance the budget with growth alone. So I would say to the gentleman that I am willing to see us begin to cap the rate of growth of the Federal Government; yes.

Mr. WISE. At all levels?

Mr. WALKER. At all levels. At all levels of the Federal Government, defense, all of it. I am willing to see us put some caps on the rate of growth of the Federal Government, but let us live with them. I mean, this business, this phony business of creating caps, and pay as you go, and everything in a budget and then waiving the Budget Act when you come to the floor with appropriation bills, and exceeding those growth figures in the appropriation bills is the phoniest thing coming down the pike.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. WALKER. That is what I think we have to get away from.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Let me yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I just want to say, with all due respect, that the argument that we have not been at all specific about spending just does not hold water. We all voted for budget resolutions this year. The gentleman in the well and myself, and I believe the other gentleman here, voted, for instance, for the Dannemeyer budget resolution.

If you want to find specific cuts that reduce the deficit substantially without tax increases, go back and look at the Dannemeyer budget resolution. We all voted for that. In addition to that, I voted for the MacKay budget resolution, contrary to the assertion of the gentleman from New Mexico a little earlier tonight.

Furthermore, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has probably offered more specific reductions in the budget than any other single Member of Congress, probably more specific reductions in the budget than any other 20 Members of Congress put together. What we are asking you tonight is, what taxes are you going to increase, and all we have heard is "certain loophole closings."

I will tell you, if you are going to increase defense spending, increase domestic spending and reduce the deficit, balance the budget, which is what your party is promising, you are going to have to increase taxes $50 billion to $100 billion. That is a lot of loopholes to close. Where are you going to start.

Mr. WALKER. You have one item in your platform, one item in the platform that I had costed out the other day that is $153 billion of add-on spending. Just one sentence in your platform totals out to $153 billion of add-on spending. That is an awful lot of taxes you are going to have to raise to accomplish that particular item.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Could you tell us what that is?

Mr. WALKER. Yes. It is an item in there that says you are going to clean up all environmental sites that might be a threat to the public health. That involves 17,000 sites at $9 million a site. That is $153 billion of add-on spending.

What you are saying there may be very meritorious, but you are going to have to find the money, folks.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. You cannot talk about these things without finding the money.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Just for the gentleman's clarification, that is known as the Superfund law which we will be debating, and understanding the gentleman's position that he does not obviously want to clean up some of those sites——

Mr. WEBER. That is not what you said. That is not even close to that.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman has been engaging in a whole group of——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield? May I finish?

Mr. WALKER. Let me take back my time for a moment and then I will yield to the gentleman, but the gentleman has consistently this evening engaged in a series of distortions that are, I think, very, very disconcerting and I would hope are not reflective of the kind of message that the gentleman carries beyond this floor.

This gentleman did not say anything about the Superfund. I simply said that that one item in your budget says that. I said that it may be meritorious, but I am saying that in order to do what your platform says you are going to do, you are going to have to find a lot of new taxes. That did not say that this gentleman is not in favor of Superfund. I voted for Superfund when it came through here.

So I think when the gentleman engages in distortions of the kind that he has time in and time out tonight, that he ill serves the kind of debate that we ought to have.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank the gentleman. All I did was ask the gentleman.

Mr. McEWEN. No, you did not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You said that we were increasing $153 billion and he did not explain what. I asked him and he said it was to clean up some sites, and that is the Superfund.

Mr. WALKER. And then you accused me of being against Superfund. You see, that is precisely the kind of distortion——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, the gentleman does not explain what he is criticizing, and I think it is only fair that I ask him what he is talking about.

Mr. WALKER. I did. I explained——

Mr. RICHARDSON. When I asked the gentleman earlier on to——

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will let me take back my time, I explained to you exactly what I was talking about in your budget. I explained it was a $153 billion item, and then the gentleman engaged in the distortion that——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Are these the gentleman's figures? Will the gentleman yield? Did the gentleman make these figures?

Mr. WALKER. No. I had the Energy and Commerce Committee develop the figures.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we should get back to the heart of the debate.

First, the gentleman from West Virginia has tapdanced all around the question that was put to him about 10 minutes ago, and that is, what taxes would you increase? And I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to the gentleman so he can answer that question.

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. I am not tapdancing around the question, but you want to have it—it is a very nice debating style. You keep talking about higher taxes. I keep trying to tell you, and I am not tapdancing. I keep trying to tell you that it is a balanced approach and it has to to be spending cuts, it has to be growth, as you say, in taxes, and you are going have to also acknowledge the fact that there may be some taxes coming down the road. Even our President acknowledges that.

Yes, you can get some—I think I heard the term "revenue restoration." The President the other night talked about loophole closing. I am not the first one to talk about it. That is where he seems to think it is going to come from. You are probably going to have to look at some kind of tax on people, as I have voted for, and I make no bones about, a tax, a surcharge on income over a certain amount, $50,000, $60,000. You may have to look at a consumption tax.

I do not stand here and tell you that I have all the answers. But I went through, if you remember, during my special order, I went through the complexities of the problem, and it is not ill-served to talk about taxes.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. WALKER. Let me just take one point here. We keep talking a lot about it and we hear from the Democrats all the time that they are going to get all this money out of the high-income people. We keep hearing about these $60,000 a year people that it is going to tax, and so on, and that is going to get them all kinds of revenue.

The statistics, of course, belie that. The statistics show that you could tax away virtually every penny of income over $50,000, and I know the gentleman is not talking about confiscatory taxation. I know that they really do not mean to do that. But you can tax away every dime of income in this country over $50,000 and get enough money to run the Federal Government for a total of 21 days.

We have a massive deficit that goes to 100 days or more, so that simply does not get you there, and I do not think anybody wants to do that because that really does impact on small business.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. This idea that income taxes somehow do impact on small businesses, that we talked about earlier this evening, one of the main payers of income tax are small businesses. Sole proprietorships pay income taxes; they do not pay corporate taxes. And in large part they pay those income taxes on their full income in that business. In large part, when you start talking about taxing these so-called high-income people, what you are really doing is talking about taxing the small businesses that are struggling to get started, and I think we have got to be very careful of that when it is small businesses that are creating most of the jobs in this country.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Furthermore, and I am glad we finally got it specific because we are trying to make a point here, the gentleman has suggested now a specific increase, a surcharge on incomes over $50,000. The fact is that the effect of the tax reductions that were voted by the last Congress has been to increase revenues from the over-$50,000 income bracket by 17 percent. It is those taxpayers earning less than $50,000 who have had their contributions to general revenues increased.

Why is that so? Because by reducing those top rates, we reduce the incentive for wealthy taxpayers to shelter their income; hence, to argue that we will increase revenues from wealthy taxpayers by imposing a surtax on them is fallacious. It is disproven by the exact experience that we have had over the last 4 years.

So the point I am making: We just do not buy it when we hear it from the other side, "We are going to raise taxes tens of billions of dollars, but it is all going to come from rich people. It is all going to come from big corporations. You average working Americans, you small businessmen and farmers, do not worry. It is going to be somebody else who pays that." It will be the working man and woman in this country, just like it has always been.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Let me yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for narrowing the field, and now I think the question should be put to the gentleman from West Virginia.

What specifically are you talking about. I think it has been proven by the gentleman we are raising more money now since we cut the tax rate for those making $50,000 and above than we were when we had a much higher tax rate, because people will come out of the shelters that they have been in.

So if you are really going to raise that money, what specific tax measures are you going to raise? Where are you going to raise taxes? Are you, and I think the question should be put to the gentleman, are you for eliminating the indexing?

Could the gentleman yield for an answer.

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I am glad to see the gentleman from California wants to play "Twenty Questions," are you for this, are you for that. I personally am opposed to the repeal of indexing because I feel that is something that benefits the middle income and lower income more than anyone else.

□ 2320

What I tried to say, and the gentleman does not want to listen to it, I realize that, that we are not going to gain anything unless we sit down across the board and be specific in all areas. The gentleman is going to have to give some and I am going to have to give some.

But that is not what I am hearing. The gentleman just wants to get me on the record saying, "You are for taxes."

Fine, have a lot of fun, come in the well and talk about the Democratic Party. It does not serve this debate well. It does not serve the American people well.

Mr. WALKER. Well, if the gentleman would allow me, you know, that is one of the problems, if we are going to have a debate it seems to me that you have got to be willing to deal in specifics, that you have got to be willing to come to the floor and say specifically what it is we are for and what it is we are not. It does not do much good to talk about these issues if we are not really willing to get down to the fundamental subjects, because we ultimately have to deal in specifics. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would the gentleman kindly yield 4 minutes to me? The reason I ask for 4 minutes is my colleagues railed against the Democratic tax plan and I think in all candor and in all fairness it would take me about 3½ minutes to read the tax platform of the Democratic Party.

Mr. WALKER. Well, I am going to reclaim my time here a moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would the gentleman allow me——

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman will remember that he did not yield to me at all. I am going to continue to control my time. I am going to yield to the gentleman. I am going to extend him that courtesy, which as I pointed out he did not extend to me, but I am going to continue to control the time.

I would say to the gentleman that knowing the three gentleman that are on the floor with myself, I know I have read the Democratic tax platform plank. I find it absolutely appalling. I think it will be very destructive of the entire economic base of the country. I have a feeling that my three colleagues have all read it, too.

We found the Democratic platform to be a most fascinating document, I would say to the gentleman, and I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to basically read what we are saying? We are not talking about tax increases. We are talking about tax equity. Let me just proceed. Is the gentleman going to allow me to proceed?

Mr. WALKER. What we are trying to have here is a debate. It does not seem to me that it contributes very much to the debate to have the gentleman read the Democratic platform which we have already read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Those people in the Chamber and listening are just listening to distortions that you gentlemen are making. Can I please read the Democratic platform?

Mr. WALKER. I would say to the gentleman——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is the gentleman afraid for me to read the platform?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is one that I would not want to have to use the word distortion very often, but let me yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I just made a couple observations here in the course of this debate over the last couple or 3 hours and that is when we are talking about economics, that is, if we look at where we were and where we are and where we are headed, we should break the economy down into about six areas. Let us start with unemployment. As we mentioned during the time that we tried to turn this economy around, people were losing their jobs at the rate of 10,000 a day, 60,000 a week. Unemployment was climbing.

Where are we now? We have created 7½ million jobs in the last 28 months. People are finding new jobs at the rate of hundreds of thousands every month. That is called Reaganomics.

In the area of savings, 38 months ago savings was at an all time record low. Out of the 25 industrialized nations of the world, the United States was last.

What has happened because of the President's tax plan, because of the increase in individual retirement accounts and other factors? We find out that savings is up nearly 300 percent as a percentage of disposable income going to savings. That meant that the savings and loans institutions that were falling lke dominoes during the 1981 timeframe are beginning to stand on their feet soundly once again.

Let us talk about productivity. As we mentioned earlier, productivity, creating new jobs, was growing at the rate of 5½ percent in 1977, but because we followed the policies of the previous administration, by 1980 we were in a 2½-percent decline. Hence, the increasing unemployment, hence the high interest rates and high inflation.

We have been able to turn that around to 9½ percent growth in the first quarter of this year, 7½ percent growth in the second quarter of this year, as we mentioned, with all the new jobs.

What about interest rates? Interest rates that were 6¼ in 1976 climbed all the way to 22½ percent by the time Reaganomics began to take effect.

What has happened to interest rates? They are half of that now.

As for inflation, inflation was at 18 percent for the first quarter this year when Reaganomics went into effect to try to put a stop to the disruption in the economy, to savings, to the elderly, those on fixed incomes.

What is inflation today? Inflation today is at 3.3 percent. It is the lowest it has been in 17 years.

Now, what does that leave you to talk about? You are left with trying to divide between rich and poor, black and white, young and old and find out of this whole maze here someplace, let us talk about the one thing that TIP O'NEILL has his finger on the most and that is the deficit; so therefore we are going to parade it out here and talk about only that. We are not going to talk about unemployment that went for day after day, month after month, all during 1982 when we were trying to turn this economy around. We do not hear the first word about unemployment.

Mr. WALKER. Well, on that parade of 1 minute that were talking gloom and doom about the economy, now they are trying to figure out a new way to talk gloom and doom about the economy.

Mr. MCEWEN. We do not hear the first word about productivity. What we were told when this went into effect by the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, if we continued to pursue their policies, that somehow or another it would correct itself, that what we were trying to do was absolutely wrong. Then when it became apparent they were wrong, they said, "Well, there might be a recovery, but it will be just a weak little blip and it won't be significant and it can't be sustained."

What has happened? We are in the largest, greatest, strongest expansion since World War II.

Now where are they? Well, they say next year is going to be bad, so what we need to do is put our policies back in because you have had your 3 years of growth, you have had your 3 years of new jobs, you have had your 3 years of low inflation, it is time for us to get in here and start lighting some fires once again.

The reason that I came over here and sat for 3½ hours, I will say to the gentleman, is because I was signing letters in my office and I listened to the series of distortions that went on. One of the most horrendous distortions was the intimation that this President is not involved in arms control negotiations, and therefore, it is our President's fault that he is not over in Geneva or someplace talking with the Soviet Union.

It failed to point out the condition of the first year and a half that he was in office in which we have learned that the head of the Soviet Union could not make any public appearances. Eventually he died and then he was replaced by another leader of the Soviet Union that we find out during his brief tenure he was unable to conduct negotiations.

Now we find out that it is very difficult, if the gentleman will spend just half a moment with the State Department or anyone concerned in this area to discover that it is very difficult to get any kind of prompt cohesive response from the Soviet Union on any of these matters.

So this constant distortion that somehow or another because of the cleaning up, the mopping up process that has taken place over the last 36 months, is damaging to the President's efforts, and therefore, he should be turned out of office, the idea that he is deliberately thwarting arms control negotiations when the fact of the matter is that he has pursued every avenue, it is that type of thing that has been a source of great concern to me. I think it does not serve this House well and I rise in strong opposition to this kind of thing.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

I just want to make the point that I did not want to talk about the whole series of distortions I thought maybe we would talk a little bit about the future of the economy and some of these things, but it was mentioned earlier also in the same series of distortions that the President has never sent a balanced budget to Capitol Hill and so therefore he should not talk about it.

Well, this document right here is the budget of the U.S. Government for the fiscal year 1982 where indeed the President did submit a budget which called for a balanced budget in 1984. I had a $32 billion surplus in 1984.

It was immediately rejected out of hand by the pundits around this place, the CBO and all the people around here, and the President had to go back to negotiating a budget on their terms; so the fact is the President did send a balanced budget up here. The figures are right in this book and they are available for anybody to see, rather than distorting the record.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Cailifornia.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Let us get back to the heart of the matter, what the gentleman called phony baloney a few minutes ago, because it is phony baloney.

Even if you talk about the deficits, ultimately you have to manifest your concern in votes. Now, the gentleman on the other side of the aisle has talked long and hard about the McKay budget. Ultimately you have to vote against spending bills if you are going to cut the deficit. Of these 19 key votes that were made, again the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY] voted consistently every single time against the deficit cutting vote, for a total of $20.4 billion.

The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] voted every single time—excuse me, except for two, for a deficit of $20.4 billion.

And the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE] who is very concerned about the deficit, voted every single time, except once, against the deficit cutting measures, for $20.4 billion.

The only thing I would say to my friends is that you cannot just get up here and posture about the deficit, as you have been doing tonight. Ultimately you have to take out that card. You have got to show some courage. You have to put it in the machine and you have to vote no.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has voted "no" many times. He has put many amendments up here in front of you in which you could have cut the deficit. If the deficit really is mortgaging the future of our grandchildren, why do you not act on it? Why do you not move? You cannot just do it by cutting defense. If you cut the M-1 tank, the B-1 bomber, the F-18 and one of two other large weapons systems out of the economy, you would get maybe a $13 billion cut this year. You have to go for more cuts than that and you gentlemen have consistently been budget busters; so for you to stand up here and talk about the one vote, this McKay budget which did not pass, which had no effect, but simply gave you a posture or a platform on which you could say you were moderate to conservative, is ridiculous.

□ 2330

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentlemen from New Mexico. The gentleman deserves to have a response, although he did not allow other people to respond to charges when he was in the well.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I might add that I have asked you to yield and somehow I have not proceeded for more than 20 seconds without being interrupted.

All I have asked is simply the gentleman seemed kind of reluctant for me to spend minutes reading the Democratic tax plan of the platform. There is a large group of people that probably would want to hear it and would want to make up their own mind on their own.

Mr. WALKER. Let me say to the gentleman if it was that important the gentleman had an hour of time here and why didn't he read it, the Democratic platform? I am sure that that would have been enlightening.

What we are saying to the gentleman is I took the time here to engage in debate. For the gentleman to suggest that I have not yielded to him, I mean, I find it incredible. You really do have a good deal of gall, I will say that. I mean, after standing here for an hour and not yielding to anybody and then suggesting when we yield to you that we don't give you enough time, I mean that is really—that takes a lot of gall, I will say to you; that takes a lot of nerve.

You know, I admire you.

OK. Let me yield to you a little bit more.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I just want to make two points. One, with all of the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle saying that because the deficit is declining and the expanding of the economy that explains to me why you did not answer my first question. My first question to you that you ignored, because you said you wanted to debate the future, was why don't you get your President to have the Senate Republican conferees meet with our conferees so that we can have a budget deficit reconciliation.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. WEBER. Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. SPRATT]. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WEBER. The point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that the rules of the House prohibit Members from mentioning the other body or Members of the other body.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to speak?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman has a right to a point of order. I have yielded to the gentleman and I am allowing him to speak. The gentleman, however, has heard the ruling.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Wait a minute now. The gentleman has just heard that a point of order was sustained against his language so that we hope that he will not further engage in language which is beyond the scope of the rules of the House.

I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What was the ruling?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order was with regard to mentioning of the name of a Member of the other body.

Mr. WEBER. Or the other body.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not name a Member of the other body.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman used the term "Senate" and that is not permissible.

Let me continue.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Mexico is taking far too much time to explain.

Mr. WALKER. I want to reclaim by time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] has the floor and has a right to the time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thought the gentleman yielded to me. Is that correct or not?

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would wait just a moment, I am trying to reclaim my time so that I can yield further to the gentleman.

Now if the gentleman would allow the proper procedures to go forward here, that is what I am attempting to do. The time is mine. Is that correct, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Speaker and I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will now read the tax portion of the Democratic platform.

Mr. WALKER. No; I would say to the gentleman, you know, it seems to me, it seems to me that that is absurd. You know the gentleman is attempting here to impose upon us something which we have all said we have already read. Now I do not know what the gentleman is attempting to do except probably take time away from this debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are many who have not read it, that have not spent the time, and I am caring about other people that might benefit from this.

Mr. WALKER. I understand and I know, but the gentleman, the gentleman understands that under the rules of the House——

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman has not yielded to me; is that correct? Is that correct?

Mr. WALKER. I have yielded to the gentleman consistently. I am reclaiming my time at the moment. The gentleman understands——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is the gentleman yielding to me or not?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman understands that when he reads he addresses the Chair, and that all addressing has to be to the Chair. If what the gentleman is saying is that he wants to spend the next several minutes reading to the Chair the Democratic platform, I think the gentleman in the chair is a Democrat, is a good Democrat. I assume that he understands what is in his platform. And so that probably is not any more needed, and I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I do not particularly care if the gentleman from New Mexico reads the Democratic platform plank in, but that is quite beside the point.

What we are talking about here tonight is the statements that you gentlemen have made here on the floor about tax increases.

Furthermore, the gentleman from New Mexico mentioned earlier the Democratic platform talks about tax equity, not tax increases. What happened to the great, courageous displays that we were all subjected to with Vice President Mondale going before the country and saying "I will raise taxes?"

I thought the Democrats were proud of the fact that they are going to raise taxes next year and now we see you three Democrats running away from that term.

Mr. WALKER. It is interesting. It is interesting I would say to the gentleman that now we are hearing that the tax platform does not mention increased taxes. I thought that is what Mondale told us it was when he made his speech. He told us that was in the platform. He said I am going to raise your taxes. You know, that makes it pretty clear. I do not think there is any doubt about where he stands.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. I appreciate it because I did want to respond to the gentleman from California as well as to the gentleman from Minnesota.

The President was simply stating a fact. The Vice President was simply stating a fact.

Mr. WALKER. We believe that.

Mr. WISE. I believe he is trying to be realistic.

To the gentleman from California, I appreciate, of course, hearing my record restated. It is encouraging. My record, as I said, you can go and you can pick out individual votes and that is fine. But that completely underscores the problem which is you have to come in in a broad approach, you have to agree to budget resolutions and now you are right, I could not agree to cut, as was the vote yesterday, $96 million from cancer research. I am sorry, I could not. Perhaps you can. And those are many of the other votes.

I think it is interesting to note many of the votes are still within the context of the House-passed budget resolution. Some even are under what the administration was requesting.

Now you mentioned $13 billion of military cuts and you are right. You cannot solve the deficit simply by cutting the military. But then I must infer from that that you did not vote for my military cuts, so therefore you kept the balance, the deficit up on your end of it, too, did you not.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

The reason why we raised some of these points, I admit to the gentleman, it is selected votes. You know, we get the selected votes of the AFL-CIO coming into our districts and telling us that we are against working people, too, and all of that kind of garbage. And we see and so the gentleman ought to be used to it around here by now, that he is going to have selected votes used to label him a big spender.

I would say to the gentleman in response to——

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will in a moment.

But I do want to point out to the gentleman the reason why we regard it as a problem when we see all of the spending votes on the House floor, because we look at the cumulative record of the Congress and we keep hearing all of that talk about Reagan deficits, all of the problem is with Reagan. I have a 5-year cumulative congressional increase or decrease beyond the President's budget request, and guess what it shows. Over the last 5 years Congress has spent $174.3 billion more than the President requested, so that all of those spending votes have ultimately added up to increasing deficits.

The cumulative 5-year congressional increase-decrease over the first budget resolution, we hear all of that talk about budget resolutions here and we do not obey those budgets. They are just plain silly in terms of what we obey. We have had $153.9 billion in increase over what we passed in the first budget resolution and so we have got a very, very bad spending habit around here.

When we talk about taxes, we hear a lot of talk about the fact we are going to solve these deficits through taxes. Well, when it comes to meeting the revenue requests of the President, not this President, but this goes back to the Carter years as well, where he was requesting additional taxes, we find that Congress is a minus $100 billion in revenue increases, and compared to the first budget resolution we come up $125.4 billion short on those.

So in effect what Congress has done over the last 5 years is we have added over that 5-year period $274 billion to the budget deficits over the President's request, and we have added $279.3 billion to the deficits over and above what we said we were going to do in the first budget resolution. That is the reason why we are concerned about spending. Spending has an impact.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding. He has made most of the points that I wanted to make and that is that sure, these are selective votes, although they were not selected particularly for us. These were selected because these were 19 of the most important votes that would have taken the biggest pieces of the deficit, and you voted regularly against them. And the point that is being made is that over the last 5 years we voted for $274.5 billion more than the President requested.

You have joined him, I am sure, many times in that, in going over the President's budget.

The gentlemen who are here tonight are not moderate spenders. They are certainly not conservative spenders. And I heard the word conservative used at least one time.

I think for the purpose of keeping our viewing audience totally informed we should not misrepresent ourselves.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. WISE. Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Please do not refer to the viewing audience or television or any other reference of that kind.

Mr. HUNTER. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. But the point that I am making is that you are not a conservative. You are not even really a moderate when it comes to spending. You have been a big spender in this Congress and that is a fact. And for you to come down here and to rail for an hour and one-half about deficits and how terrible they can be for the economy is ridiculous.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WALKER. Let me yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], who has not been a part of this debate for a little while.

□ 2340

Mr. WISE. He is calling names and throwing accusations around.

Mr. HUNTER. I am not throwing names.

Mr. WISE. "You are having a good time, you are a big spender, a deficit spender; all that has done nothing for the country."

Mr. HUNTER. Let me just say that the gentleman is not only conservative——

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, do I control the time or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Walker of Pennsylvania has the time on the floor. But the gentleman has yielded the time to several people and I cannot tell the gentleman to whom he has yielded the time.

Mr. WALKER. Well, I do control the time, Mr. Speaker, and I had yielded to the gentleman from Montana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana.

Mr. WALKER. I think that is correct, is not it? I yielded to the gentleman from Montana, was it not you whom I yielded to? I lost track here, for a moment.

So I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I hope he will permit me to just for 30 seconds change the subject.

I have, as the gentleman knows, been involved in some of these special orders and I have stayed around for 3 hours tonight to watch this one in its entirety. I have come back to the Chambers on numerous occasions and sat in the back of the Chamber, on numerous occasions, and watched some on TV when late hours would not permit my attendance here or in my office. I do that because debate and dialog is very important to this body and to the American people and also becuase I am on a committee, an ad hoc committee here in the House, on our side, which will be making our recommendations to the Speaker with regard to these special orders.

Let me say that tonight I have come to a conclusion, and that is that these special orders are a terrible and absolute waste of time.

We have heard charges of absurdity tonight, we have had more debate about who is going to yield than we have had about the issues themselves. That is something that goes on night after night from what I have been able to see.

We have had lessons on the House rules. The level of debate in these special orders, let's face it, fellows, is exceedingly low. And I tell you what I think, what I am going to recommend to this committee, and that is that we do away with these special orders.

And I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. WALKER. OK, I thank the gentleman. I hope that we will have an understanding across America of exactly what the gentleman is talking about, more gag rules in the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. WALKER. The majority party has consistently throughout this session of Congress talked about gagging the Congress. The gentleman has just admitted to me that that is what he intends to recommend to the committee.

And I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania made that point, because what the gentleman from Montana is suggesting tonight is that we should eliminate the one vehicle through which we have been able to discuss the balanced budget constitutional amendment, the line item veto, the voluntary school prayer amendment, and a whole host of issues that the American people are concerned about, but which the Democratic leadership of this House, which controls the calendar, refuses to schedule during regular business.

So we have one opportunity to discuss all those and numerous other issues, and that is here during special orders. And the gentleman from Montana is suggesting we should cut that off, no debate on any of those issues ever.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALKER. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. That is almost exactly what I am suggesting, and I do so for many reasons, including the cost of these special orders and the terrible unfairness to this staff, in the Chamber, outside of the Chamber, and outside of this building, that are required to be here to protect the Members of the House.

Mr. WALKER. Well, I thank the gentleman for his observation.

I would say to the gentleman I just recently completed a survey. I find out that it is the Democratic Party that has used far more time than the Republican Party, that there are Members of this House that have used already far more time in special orders than this gentleman has used, that there was more time in debating the freeze, if we are worried about operating the House, debating the freeze took 42 hours. That is far more time than all the time that we have spent in the whole COS operation debating here on the House floor.

The gentleman is selective in his criticism, he is selective in where he wants to apply his gag rules. He only wants to gag the minority. The majority, it is perfectly all right for them to talk on and on and on about their subjects.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am disappointed in the gentleman. I thought that he was someone who believed in open debate in the House of Representatives, someone who really did want to see a clash of ideas in the country. It is obvious now that the gentleman simply wishes to see the House become one more—take one more step toward tyranny and dictatorship controlled wholly by his own leadership.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. HUNTER. On that point I think in listening particularly to the debate and discourse that we had with the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. MOODY], that we have done something, we have thoroughly discussed some economic issues that have not been discussed on the floor in a long time, and I think it was very worthwhile.

I thank the gentleman for his leadership and also the gentleman from the other side for their participation in this special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman [Mr. WALKER] has expired.

INFORMATION REQUESTED OF CHAIRMAN PAUL VOLCKER TO ASSIST BANKING COMMITTEE IN INVESTIGATION OF CONTINENTAL ILLINOIS BAILOUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, in my floor statement of July 26, 1984, I indicated that the Federal banking supervisors among others would be asked to testify before the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs in hearings which begin on Tuesday, September 18, 1984, to explain the Continental Illinois bailout.

Today I sent a letter to Chairman Paul Volcker of the Federal Reserve Board requesting specific information which will assist the committee in its inquiry of CINB. I ask that a copy of the letter be inserted in the RECORD at this point. An identical letter was sent to C. Todd Conover, Comptroller of the Currency and William Isaac, Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The letter follows:

(Identical letter sent to the Comptroller of the Currency and Chairman of the FDIC)

COMMITTEE ON BANKING,
FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, August 2, 1984.

Hon. PAUL VOLCKER,
Chairman, Federal Reserve Board,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Actions taken by federal bank regulatory agencies to prevent the explicit failure of Continental Illinois National Bank (CINB) are requiring expenditures and credit extensions of many billions of dollars by the United States government. Large portions of these financings are likely to contribute directly to increases in the federal deficit, the level of federal credit guarantees, and in the volume of outstanding federal debt in the hands of the public.

The credit extensions and expenditures of concern to this Committee include, but are not limited to, discount window advances and the interest rate subsidies implicit in cedit extended by the Federal Reserve, funds expended for various purposes by the FDIC, and employee compensation costs over and above normal agency work levels incurred by the Office of the Comptroller, FDIC, and Federal Reserve. The issue of concern to the Banking Committee in this regard is whether the present level of CINB-related expenditures would be less or could have been avoided altogether had the federal agencies performed their statutory responsibilities with sufficient rigor and thoroughness in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

In addition to these concerns, it is apparent to us that the actions taken by federal regulatory agencies to assure the continued operation of CINB will profoundly affect the long-term relationship of the U.S. government to the banking industry, and the competitive relationship between small and large banks and between businesses affiliated and not affiliated with bank holding companies. Moreover, because a significant body of evidence indicates that banks respond to increased government protection by taking on greater risk, the CINB rescue could greatly affect bank safety and soundness in the longer term.

The House Banking Committee will commence its hearings on CINB and its holding company, and their financial and supervisory history, on September 18, 1984. At the appropriate time, correspondence will be forwarded to you regarding your appearance before the Committee and the specific issues you will be asked to address.

In the meantime, you are requested to assist this Committee in its inquiry of CINB by providing the Committee on or before August 10, 1984, with the information enumerated below:

1. Supervisory History of Continental Illinois National Bank (CINB) and Continental Illinois Corporation (CIC). Since January 1, 1971:

(a) All examination reports of CINB and CIC;

(b) All National Bank Surveillance Reports, Uniform Bank Performance Reports, and Early Warning System results;

(c) All reports, analyses, opinions, tabulations, internal memoranda, correspondence with all parties and agencies, minutes of meetings, memoranda of conversations, and other documentation of any type in the possession of your agency relating to:

(1) Examiner findings and recommendations;

(2) Actions taken in response to examiner findings and recommendations, including correspondence or meetings with CINB and CIC boards of directors, memoranda of understanding, supervisory agreements, cease and desist orders, or other supervisory actions;

(3) Internal CINB and/or CIC audits or reports;

(4) Management fees, dividends, or other transfers of funds among the corporate elements of CIC;

(5) CINB loan loss reserves, liquidity and capital adequacy, and deposit outflows; and

(6) Communications with the Securities and Exchange Commission regarding CINB or CIC.

2. Continental Bank Assistance Program. Since January 1, 1984, all agreements, public statements, reports, analyses, opinions, tabulations, memoranda, correspondence, minutes of meetings, memoranda of conversations, and all other documentation by, between, or among the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Federal Reserve System, Treasury Department, CINB, CIC, and the Securities and Exchange Commission and other public or private entities, relating to the origins, need for, planning, and implementation of the CINB assistance program or any other potential alternative plans that were previously considered for the merger or acquisition of or for assistance to CINB.

To coordinate and facilitate the provision of all documentation enumerated above, please have an appropriate member of your staff contact Dr. Paul Nelson, Committee Staff Director.

The enormous size of the CINB rescue program and the serious and in-depth nature of the Committee's inquiry of it make the cooperation of each of the federal bank regulatory agencies imperative. During inquiries of this sort in the past, agency responses to the information requests of this Committee have at times been dilatory, bordering on obstructive. Your full and complete cooperation is expected in providing the information requested in this letter and such other information as the Committee's inquiry may require.

Sincerely,

FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN,
Chairman.●

JAY SOLOMON, A TRUE PUBLIC SERVANT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, in 1977, Jay Solomon agreed to join the Carter administration and to assume one of the most thankless jobs in the Federal Government: Administrator of General Services. Jay led GSA with determination and distinction. He will be remembered with admiration and respect for the forthright way that he confronted corruption in GSA and worked to root it out and to change the systems that encouraged such corruption. In addition, Jay brought to GSA an appreciation for the Federal Government's responsibility to improve the appearance of Government buildings and to encourage the restoration of historic structures.

Mr. Speaker, Jay Solomon was a true public servant. He was motivated not by the prestige that his position offered, or by the salary, or the power, but simply because he wanted to do a good job for his country. I join my colleagues in expressing to his wife and family our condolences and our appreciation for his service to the Nation.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

AN APPEAL FOR TV IN THE SENATE

HON. CHARLES McC. MATHIAS, JR.

OF MARYLAND

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, in the July 21 issue of TV Guide, a publication reaching many millions of Americans every week, our distinguished majority leader again reminded us of the irretrievable loss to the American public, and to American history, of our continuing failure to televise the floor proceedings of the U.S. Senate and to broadcast those proceedings throughout this great land.

The appearance of this article is especially timely, with the Democratic Party's National Convention having just occurred, and the Republican Party's National Convention beginning on August 13—both of these historic political events being broadcast live on national television to the Nation, and all over the world. We now have the President, the House of Representatives, two national political parties—all sending their respective messages to the citizens of this country. Only the Senate remains dark—as though nothing of importance were happening in the world's greatest deliberative body.

Mr. President, this Congress, the majority leader and I, joined by 21 of our distinguished colleagues, have sponsored Senate Resolution 66, a measure to establish regulations to implement television and radio proceedings of the Senate. The Committee on Rules and Administration, reported Senate Resolution 66 on June 28, 1983, whereupon it was placed on the Senate Legislative Calendar, and where regrettably it languishes still. It is my fervent hope that Senate Resolution 66 can be agreed to before the sine die adjournment of the 98th Congress—as final tribute to our able majority leader, as evidence of our own collective wisdom, and as a vital service to the American people.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator BAKER's article entitled, "We're Losing Political and Historical Treasures," be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

WE'RE LOSING POLITICAL AND HISTORICAL TREASURES

(By Howard H. Baker, Jr.)

Otto von Bismarck, the "Iron Chancellor" of Germany, is supposed to have said, "If you like laws and sausages, you should never watch either one being made." I say, "Baloney."

The fact that we are still not televising the proceedings of the United States Senate, four decades into the television age, is nothing short of tragic. We are short-changing history, the American people and the Senate itself.

In 1850, what has been called "the greatest debate in congressional history" raged for eight months in the Senate. The issue was the extension of slavery into the American West, and the debaters were such political and oratorical giants as Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun and Daniel Webster. At the end of the debate, a compromise was reached that averted civil war for a decade.

Here was the Senate at its best—an assembly of strong, talented, often brilliant politicians who gloried in the battle of ideas, who debated public policy in what was truly the world's greatest deliberative body, and whose collective importance in public affairs overshadowed that of the President.

The words of that great debate were dutifully recorded in The Congressional Globe, a forerunner of today's Congressional Record, and serve as eloquent reminders of that earlier time. But what would we give today to see what a privileged few witnesses saw then from the public galleries above the Senate chamber—the passion, the verbal thunder, the intellectual lightning, the stresses and strains and majesty of men caught up in the most important issue of the century.

All of this is lost to us. So are the great debates over America's foreign policy leading to our entry into World War I and World War II. So are the debates over civil rights. And more such historical treasures are being lost every day.

The late senator Hubert Humphrey said that a 20th-century Congress cannot be content with employing 18th- or 19th-century technology. I wonder if public reaction would have been different if the debate on the Panama Canal treaties had been viewed, as well as heard, by the country? I wonder if the sight of 100 senators dissecting the treaties, working out amendments to safeguard our interests, might have changed opinions about the legislation? Or would there be a better understanding of the need for a change in direction of our economic ship if the public had been able to see the lengthy debate on the Reagan budget?

Looking to the future, it may be that nothing would serve this country so well as a televised Senate debate on the reform of entitlement programs—Social Security, Medicare and the rest—so that Americans can understand not only what will happen if we change them, but what will happen if we don't.

If we are ever to reach a national consensus on these and other contentious issues, it can only come from a better understanding of these issues among the American people—an understanding born of education in which television could play an immensely useful role.

Some will say the Senate isn't quite so interesting or important as it was in the last century, that Clays and Calhouns and Websters are in short supply in Washington today. I would suggest that a Senate debate involving Pat Moynihan (D-N.Y.), Jesse Helms (R-N.C.), Ted Kennedy (D-Mass.), Bob Dole (R-Kan.), Fritz Hollings (D-S.C.) and Lowell Weicker (R-Conn.), for example, would rival the duels of earlier days and make most Presidential debates of recent memory seem comatose by comparison.

But in a way, the critics are right. The Senate is not what it used to be or ought to be. Since the 1920s, when senators were first popularly elected rather than chosen by state legislatures, the Senate has become more and more like the House of Representatives. The only difference that most people can see is that senators represent states rather than districts and serve six-year rather than two-year terms.

And that has become almost the only difference. The Senate must give its advice and consent to the ratification of treaties and the appointment of major Federal officials, but aside from that, the work of the Senate and the House is practically identical.

But it's not supposed to be. The founders of our Government intended that the House of Representatives should be the people's house, where the majority always rules and the weight of current public opinion always prevails. The Senate was supposed to be different. Its rules, first written by Thomas Jefferson, encouraged extensive debate and gave the rights of the minority the greatest protection and the fullest and fairest hearing in the history of governments.

These are the beliefs that made the Senate the world's greatest deliberative body to begin with the insistence that ideas matter; that one person who is right should prevail over a majority that is wrong; that vigorous debate is viatal to our system of government.

Too often today, that debate is stilted, truncated, ritualized, canned and read into the Record with all the conviction of a talking computer. The actual creation of public policy has passed from the Senate chamber to the committee rooms and leadership offices, and we file into the chamber only to ratify in public what we have decided in private.

Television could help change that. Any honest senator will concede that when the television lights are on in our committee hearing rooms, attendance is high and political competition is keen. Televising the proceedings on the Senate floor would have a similar energizing effect—and it is an effect the American people seem to appreciate.

The public's highest opinion of Congress in recent years was registered in 1974, during the House Judiciary Committee's televised impeachment proceeding against President Nixon. Day after day, the television camera was relentlessly trained on that committee as it faced one of the most difficult issues of our time. The public—and even the committee members' congressional colleagues—saw earnest, able, meticulous, eloquent men and women who had a terrible job to do and did it well.

Anyone caught "showboating" in such circumstances would surely have seemed out of place and unworthy of the company of these remarkable representatives. Television didn't make them remarkable, but it didn't make them foolish, either.

Five years later, the House decided to allow television coverage of its floor proceedings as well as its committee hearings, and the evening news regularly features film of the people's house doing the people's business with dignity and zeal. And extensive live coverage, by the C-SPAN cable service, has brought House deliberations into millions of American homes.

Presidents, of course, have long since recognized the value of television as an instrument of education and persuasion, and their domination of the airwaves is crucial to public-policy debate.

Even the courts have opened their doors to television cameras. Decorum has not been lost, and a better public understanding of our system of justice has been gained.

The Senate, by contrast, remains cloaked in mystery. Our images are reduced to the artist's caricature, our words to the reporter's paraphrase. We stand in danger of surrendering our special place in American Government by technological default at the very time when the American people's interest in public affairs is at its peak.●

NATION'S HAZARDOUS WASTE PROBLEM DEMANDS REFORM OF SUPERFUND PROGRAM

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw my colleagues' attention to a recent article which provides an excellent summary of the problems which have beset the Superfund Program since its inception in 1980. The program was designed to facilitate cleanup of abandoned hazardous waste sites through a fund financed by a tax on the chemical industry. In addition, to encourage parties handling hazardous wastes to initiate cleanup on their own, strong enforcement authority was vested in EPA.

The stories of mismanagement and delay in the implementation of the program are by now familiar. Perhaps the most significant result of this history is that after 4 years, cleanup has been completed at only 6 of 546 sites on the "National Priorities List." It is imperative that we remedy this situation promptly. The Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1984 which I have introduced will provide adequate funding as well as a mandatory schedule which together will ensure that the cleanup job is done properly.

An article detailing the history of the Superfund Program follows:

[From Outdoor America, Summer 1984]

FULFILLING THE PROMISE OF SUPERFUND

The Superfund legislation originally held the promise of beginning to put an end to these chemical horror stories. Enacted in 1980, the legislation established a $1.6 billion fund to pay for the cleanup of abandoned hazardous waste dumps around the country. But now, four years later, the promise of Superfund has been sadly unfulfilled. Bureaucratic delays, cutbacks in enforcement and charges of political favoritism have seriously undermined the Superfund program.

The original idea behind Superfund was simple. Create a special federal trust fund from a tax on the chemical industry to pay for cleanup of abandoned hazardous waste sites. Then link this fund with strong legal authority that would not only enable EPA to recover damages from those parties responsible for the dumping but would also encourage present hazardous waste handlers to clean up their act to avoid damaging lawsuits. The result was supposed to be a short-lived program to enable EPA to act quickly to protect human health and the environment from chemical abuse.

But the program ran into problems right from the start. The National Contingency Plan, a set of key regulations intended to guide the program, was delayed. Only after the Environmental Defense Fund sued EPA was the agency forced to finally release the needed regulations—more than 18 months after the date originally mandated by the legislation. In February 1981, the Reagan administration proposed a $50 million cut in the Superfund program. Later that same year, EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch disbanded the agency's Office of Enforcement and ordered the regional offices to cease issuing orders for the cleanup of hazardous waste sites unless they received approval from Washington. Finally, allegations of political tampering with the program led to the resignations of Superfund head Rita Lavelle and then Gorsuch herself and further set the Superfund program off course.

One result of this confusion is that during the four years since enactment of Superfund, EPA has completed cleanup of only six hazardous waste dumpsites. During this same period, in an effort to downplay the extent of the problem, EPA was slow to investigate the existence of new dumps. Now it appears that the number of dangerous dumps is even greater than EPA originally thought.

In March 1979, EPA estimated that there could be 1,200 to 2,000 dumps leaking chemicals into our soil and water, However, five years later, EPA Administrator William Ruckelshaus admitted to Congress that there could be between 17,000 and 22,000 dumps around the country that could pose problems for human health and the environment—over 10 times the original estimates.

The full magnitude of the problem is still unclear. So far, EPA has evaluated only 7,100 of these sites to determine which chemicals are present and what sort of threat they pose to the surrounding environment. The condition of the rest remains unknown.

But what is clear is that the present Superfund is completely inadequate to deal with the new dimensions of the problem. Of the 7,100 sites that have been evaluated, 2,200 were found to be in need of urgent attention. Yet, under the present legislation, only 546 sites are eligible to receive Superfund dollars. And, to date, cleanup has begun on only 315 of them. As a result, it could take decades to decontaminate our nation's abandoned dumpsites.

As if the problem weren't bad enough, critics charge that EPA's weak regulations may be actually multiplying the number of leaking dumpsites around the country—sites that an already overloaded Superfund eventually will be forced to deal with.

Superfund was originally intended to be only one part of the nation's hazardous waste management policy to clean up old abandoned dumps. To control and reform present waste management practices, Congress enacted the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA) in 1976 which, for the first time established what was supposed to be a "cradle-to-grave" system to track and monitor hazardous waste during each step of its journey. Each landfill and treatment facility was to receive a federal permit after passing rigorous standards that would prevent the dangerous leaking dumps of the past. In addition, those who generate and haul hazardous waste were required to report what chemicals they handled and where they disposed of them.

Here again, delays in producing regulations, efforts to weaken existing regulations and poor enforcement combined to cripple the program. For example, consistently low funding levels and mismanagement resulted in delays in releasing the crucial regulations governing the operations of landfills. To deal with the huge backlog of permit applications from landfill operators, EPA developed weak "interim" permits that had numerous loopholes. In addition, EPA loosened the regulations requiring landfill operators to monitor their sites to warn of any leakage from the facility. This meant that if a leak occurred, no one would know until after the contamination had already become apparent. Adding another regulatory insult to environmental injury, the agency, in February 1982, under pressure from industry, lifted the regulatory ban on liquids in landfills. In the three weeks before the ban was reinstated due to public pressure, an estimated 220,000 gallons of poisonous liquids were poured into landfills, many of which were already known to leak.

In February 1984, the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment was asked by Congress to analyze the effectiveness of EPA's regulatory program. Their report confirmed conservationists' fears when they said: "RCRA groundwater protection standards are not likely to prevent land disposal sites from becoming uncontrolled sites that will require cleanup under Superfund."

To further compound EPA's difficulty in managing hazardous waste, the nation's output of toxic waste appears to be growing rapidly. According to one estimate, after World War II, the United States produced about 1 billion pounds of hazardous waste each year. By 1980, EPA estimated that the amount of toxic waste generated each year had jumped to 80 billion pounds. By 1983, EPA acknowledged that even this figure was too low; according to the agency's best estimate, the nation's annual hazaradous generation was 320 billion pounds—four times the earlier number.

Legislation introduced in this Congress should go a long way toward correcting some of the abuses of the past. A growing coalition in the House, led by past Superfund champion Rep. James Florio (D-N.J.), has introduced a new version of Superfund—H.R. 5640—which would boost the money in the fund from the present $1.6 billion to $9.0 billion over a five-year period. In addition, the legislation would strengthen the liability sections of the act, regulate leaking underground storage tanks and place EPA on a strict clean-up schedule.

The bill was approved unanimously in Rep. Florio's Commerce, Transportation and Tourism Subcommittee on May 26. In an unusual move, Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill forged an effective compromise between the other congressional committees that have an interest in Superfund. This will enable legislation to be considered on the House floor in early August—just weeks before the Republican convention. Supporters hope that this tactic will keep the issue in the public eye and encourage House Republicans to take a strong stand on the issue. On the Senate side, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works and "father" of the original Superfund, Sen. Robert Stafford (R-Vt.), has vowed to have a Superfund measure through his committee and approved by the Senate this year. The result could be that Superfund could arrive on President Reagan's desk before the election.

On the regulatory side of things, an improved Resource Conservation and Recovery Act was approved by an overwhelming majority in the House earlier this year. A similarly strengthened measure was approved by the Senate Environment Committee and was awaiting action on the floor of the Senate at press time. These bills would toughen groundwater protection requirements and tighten standards on burning hazardous waste. Most observers believe that bill could come before the President by the end of the summer.

But even this new legislation will not really attack the central problem: the need to phase out landfills entirely. Because land disposal has been cheap in the past, American industries have been slow to realize the benefits of reducing and recycling the waste they produce. Now, with the real price of land disposal becoming apparent, there are signs that basic attitudes are beginning to change. The 3M Corp., for example, has been operating its "3P" Program (Profit from Pollution Prevention) since 1975. Through product reformulation, equipment redesigns and chemical recovery, the company has eliminated 75,000 tons of air pollutants, 500 million gallons of polluted waste water and 2,900 tons of sludge per year. The company estimates that it has saved more than $20 million during the first three years of operation. Similarly, other companies are exploring waste treatment processes that detoxify wastes and solidify them so they're less likely to migrate into water supplies.

In the end, it is clear that the real solutions will come not from Washington but from these fundamental changes in the way we dispose of our hazardous waste. Until we discover how to encourage these changes, we may be trapped into a costly and perpetual clean-up campaign.●

LEGISLATION INTRODUCED TO RESTORE AUTO BUMPER PROTECTION

HON. ANTHONY C. BEILENSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to restore automobile bumper protection standards to the 5-miles-per-hour requirement which was in force when the current administration took office.

As part of President Reagan's plan to ease the regulatory burden on the automobile industry, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration rolled back the 5-mi/h standard, which had been in effect since the mid-1970's, to a much weaker 2.5-mi/h standard.

The bumper standard is the speed at which a car should sustain no damage when it crashes directly into a flat barrier, but bumpers meeting the 5-mi/h standard also sustain less damage in angular crashes and crashes into poles.

Mr. Speaker, the argument for relaxing the standard to 2.5 mi/h was that weaker bumpers would be cheaper to install, and their lighter weight would improve fuel economy, saving consumers money on the purchase price and operating cost of their cars. And the Government promised to provide bumper data to consumers so that the market would reflect the choices of informed consumers about the amount they wish to spend for extra bumper protection.

Sad to say, Mr. Speaker, these economic benefits have not materialized. Not only is the Government ignoring the consumers' need for adequate, accessible crash safety and damage information, but the carmakers themselves are not reducing prices on the cars that they have equipped with the weaker bumpers. And in at least some cases the stronger bumpers weigh less than the weaker ones, so there has been no saving on fuel economy either.

By some estimates, consumers have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in extra repair costs because of the additional damage incurred in slow speed accidents. In tests done by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, cars with weaker bumpers sustain damage in 5-mi/h crash tests of up to $2,000 in repair costs. Surprisingly, on some models the stronger bumper actually costs less to replace than a weaker bumper on another model from the same manufacturer.

Mr. Speaker, the administration made a serious, costly mistake when it rolled back the bumper standards. It has cost consumers millions of dollars, with no offsetting economic benefit at all. Some manufacturers have continued to supply the tougher bumpers voluntarily, but consumers are not being informed about which cars offer the better protection.

It is time for Congress to reverse this foolish and costly error by establishing in law the same standard that existed by regulation prior to 1982. We can save consumers millions of dollars by a proven regulation that worked well in actual practice only a few years ago. This administration has shown that it will allow rhetoric about the burden of Government regulation and the advantages of free market economics to blind itself to the reality of the economic and human costs of automobile accidents. It is up to us to restore rationality to automobile bumper protection standards.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this simple, straightforward bill.

The bill follows:

H.R. —

A bill to amend the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act to require that the motor vehicle bumper standard established by the Secretary of Transportation shall be restored to that in effect January 1, 1982

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 102 of the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act (15 U.S.C. 1912) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall amend the bumper standard contained in sections 581.1 through 581.7 of title 49, Code of Federal Regulations, to ensure that, except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), such standard is identical to the bumper standard under such sections which was in effect on January 1, 1982. The amended standard shall apply to all passenger automobiles beginning with the model year after the date of amendment of the standard.

"(2) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit the Secretary from requiring impact speeds under such sections higher than the impact speeds contained in such amended standard.

"(3) The Secretary may not amend or modify the application of such amended standard in any respect which results in less impact protection than that afforded under such standard as in effect on January 1, 1982."●

TAX DOLLARS OF ILLINOIS

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring an editorial, which appeared in the Chicago Tribune on April 17, 1984, to the attention of my colleagues. The editorial discusses the inequitable distribution of Federal tax dollars to Illinois, and projects the thesis that since Illinois residents earn a high income and exceed the national tax average, we are understandably paying more into the Federal Treasury than others. On the other hand, because Illinois has no shipyards or aircraft facilities it cannot compete for many Defense contracts that would return more to the Illinois economy.

But, Mr. Speaker, even if this argument is correct, the Illinois delegation must continue to work to assure that Illinois receives a fair return to our State for the heavy burden of taxes we pay. It is not acceptable to be near the bottom of the list for whatever reasons. I commend the article to my colleagues, particularly those from Illinois.

The article follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Apr. 17, 1981]

ILLINOIS ISN'T BEING CHEATED

(By James W. Fossett and J. Fred Giertz)

(James W. Fossett is an instructor at the University of Illinois' Institute of Government and Public Affairs and Fred Giertz is a professor of economics there. Giertz formerly was research director of the Illinois Tax Reform Commission and Fossett spent three years at the Brookings Institution in Washington.)

It has become an article of faith among Illinois business and political leaders that the state has been persistently shortchanged in its dealings with the United States government. A recent report by the state comptroller, for example, argued that Illinois received only 66 cents in federal spending for every dollar its citizens paid in federal taxes in 1982, the largest such deficit in the country, and received far less per resident in federal procurement than most other states.

Such figures are frequently cited as evidence that the state is not receiving its "fair share" of federal support and that the state's congressional delegation should try to increase the flow of federal funds into the state.

We take issue with both parts of this argument. It is far from clear that Illinois is being systematically exploited by Washington or that political efforts to improve the state's "balance of payments" are called for.

First, much of the reason why Illinois shows a relatively low ratio of taxes paid to payments received is a result of the state's wealth and the resulting high level of federal taxes paid, rather than decisions by federal bureaucrats to award contracts or grants to other states. Illinois citizens earn high incomes relative to those of other states, and the progressive nature of the federal income tax system causes their tax burden to exceed the national average by an even larger extent. Even if federal funds were handed out on an equal per-resident basis to all states, Illinois would still show an appreciable "deficit" in its transactions with the federal government.

This point is reinforced by the observation that Illinois does, in fact, receive payments near the national average from most classes of federal expenditures. State and local governments in Illinois receive payments per resident from a variety of federal grant programs that are only slightly below the national average. And from programs that make payments directly to individuals—such as Medicare and Social Security—the state receives payments that are only marginally less than the national average.

If one excludes the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia, which are the headquarters for most federal agencies, Illinois received federal nondefense wages and salaries that were not appreciably below the national average. In all these cases, spending in Illinois was above the average for other Midwestern states.

The only area of the budget, in fact, where Illinois received payments substantially below the national average is defense salaries and contracts. It is far from clear, however, that this disparity reflects any fundamental unfairness in the allocation, of defense dollars. The distribution of defense contracts is heavily influenced by a small number of extremely large awards that fund ship and aircraft developments and construction and that are received over a period of several years. Since Illinois has no shipyards or aircraft facilities, it is not in a position to compete for these awards and hence will inevitably appear to be receiving a relatively small share of defense contracts even if it succeeds in attracting contracts in those areas where its industrial base is strong.

The Illinois industries that are in a position to compete directly for Pentagon dollars, such as construction and electrical equipment and food production, are competing for contracts that are smaller than those to develop and construct aircraft carriers or major weapons systems. Even if they are spectacularly successful in securing these awards, the state will still receive a substantially smaller share of defense spending than such states as California and Massachusetts, which contain major shipbuilding or aircraft production facilities.

Perhaps more important, the state benefits from defense spending in ways that do not appear in these data. A variety of studies have shown that much of the increase in employment supported by enhanced defense spending comes from increased orders for materials used in the construction of ships, planes, tanks and other military equipment. Large percentages of these orders are for goods such as steel, metal castings, machine tools and electrical equipment produced by industries that are major employers in Illinois.

The current increase in defense spending may result in increases in production and employment in the state which are not reflected in the original distribution of contracts. While the impact of defense spending on Illinois' economy may well be smaller than in other states, it is almost certainly larger than the figures in the comptroller's reports suggest.

Even apart from these programs, it is far from clear that Illinois has any valid general claim to a larger share of federal funds. A large fraction of the federal budget supports payments to individuals such as Social Security recipients or retired federal or military employees. Still other programs are directed at such groups as Indians, farmers and the elderly. These programs provide widely varying amounts of support per resident to different states, but this difference is largely the result of differences in the location of the groups these programs assist and cannot be called unfair or discriminatory.

Figures such as those contained in the comptroller's report provide political ammunition for challengers to berate congressional incumbents for their poor performance in attracting federal dollars or for those same incumbents to press claims that the state "deserves" a larger share of a particular federal program. By themselves, however, they neither reflect the true impact of federal spending on the state's economy nor provide convincing evidence that Illinois is being "shortchanged" in any way in its dealings with Washington.●

FEDERAL WORKERS: REWARDS DUE FOR A JOB WELL DONE

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I have been increasingly disturbed by the maligning of the Federal service, the Postal Service, military and veterans' programs. The negativism, misrepresentations, and alarmist and unfounded claims about their salary schedule and the funding of their retirement systems have become increasingly strident. I believe that this has gone far enough and that I must speak out.

We must bear in mind that career Government personnel are highly experienced. They have devoted many years to providing loyal service and expertise during periods of great stress and strain. Most Federal employees are intent on helping to improve Government administration and service. It is time that these positive attitudes and accomplishments are acknowledged, not only to disprove the misconceptions being publicized about career Government employees, but to recognize and to honor them for their labors on behalf of our Government and our citizens. I'd like to start by summarizing a few of the key issues affecting Federal employees and retirees and veterans.

I. CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT SYSTEM [CSRS]

The Federal civil service system was created by Congress in 1883 to put an end to the "spoils system" and thereby establish a high-quality service organization with a sense of continuity and dedication. It was only in 1920 that Congress passed the Civil Service Retirement Act. The intent of Congress was to improve Government efficiency by providing a humane method of retiring Federal service employees whose age and disability prevented performance of their duties.

Social Security was created in 1935 to specifically cover employees in commerce and industry. Since CSRS was already in place and functioning, it was not considered necessary or desirable to cover Federal workers under Social Security. This separation was maintained until quite recently, when efforts have been made to eventually merge the two systems. I opposed action taken by Congress when it legislated that after January 1984, newly hired Federal employees would be enrolled in Social Security. Congress must act carefully because of the potential for unfairness to those employees and retirees who fall on either side of the new cutoff date. Precautions must be taken to ensure these civil servants receive a fair share of the benefits in proportion to what they paid into the system.

It is apparent that the CSRS is a viable program. Before congressional action last year, some experts judged it as having resources to meet its obligations for the next 75 years. It has performed a valuable service by filling the ranks of the Federal work force with highly qualified and motivated personnel. Any attempt to disrupt CSRS will contribute to a further deterioration of morale, will increase the feeling of insecurity among employees, and cause many in the Government service to seek employment elsewhere.

II. FEDERAL EMPLOYEES HEALTH BENEFITS PROGRAM

Established in 1960, the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program [FEHBP] rapidly became the largest group health insurance program in the Nation. The FEHBP is presently composed of more than 140 different health plans, providing health insurance coverage to some 10 million Federal workers, retirees, and dependents.

The entire FEHBP has been weakened in the past 3 years; each "open season" has seen unprecedented numbers of enrollees shifting from one plan to another in search of affordable premium levels. In response to this chaos and increased costs of the FEHBP, a number of legislative measures designed to bring stability and affordability to the program were introduced in the first session of the 98th Congress. Of these legislative measures, I support H.R. 656, the Federal Employees Health Benefit Reform Act, and H.R. 4261, the Federal Employees Health Benefit Information Act. I strongly oppose the so-called voucher health system.

III. FEDERAL EMPLOYEES COMPENSATION ACT

This special act was put in place by the Congress in 1916 and amended to provide just compensation to the injured civilian employee. However, I have found numerous problems when interceding for my constituents who seek help from Office of Workers' Compensation Programs. An audit of the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs by the General Accounting Office may be in order.

IV. COMPARABILITY OF PAY OF FEDERAL WHITE-COLLAR EMPLOYEES

The Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970 is a major factor in setting Federal salaries; it established the procedure for annual, more or less automatic, implementation of comparability. In effect, it ruled that Federal white-collar pay should roughly equal private sector pay for similar jobs.

Many Federal employees are concerned that the basic soundness of the Comparability Act might be undermined by increased criticism of the Federal pay scales and by recommendations for alternative proposals that are impractical, untested, or expensive. The current administration's attitude toward Federal pay is demoralizing and is raising a sense of insecurity and unrest among Federal employees.

VI. COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS

Since 1967, the majority of employees and retirees in both the public and private sector have had their wages and annuities aligned with the Consumer Price Index [CPI]. For the retired, whose primary source of income is an annuity or pension, cost-of-living adjustments [COLA's] are essential in order to remain solvent. I support regular and equitable COLA's for Federal retirees.

VII. CONTRACTING OUT FEDERAL WORK AND POSITIONS

Over the past several years there has been an increased emphasis on moving workload and positions from the Federal Government to the private sector. This thrust has come from the executive branch of the Government, primarily the Office of Management and Budget [OMB]. The pressure to contract out appears to be politically motivated and intended solely for the purpose of reducing the size of Government and expanding the private sector.

Federal employees are not opposed to contracting out certain jobs or functions if it makes sense from a practical and economic point of view. I suggest requiring each agency to provide a rationale for contracting or not contracting out specific functions.

The Federal Government relies on certain principles in order to function in an open, democratic manner. Among these principles is the theory of service and dedication to a common cause. Our public officials and civil servants fulfill this noble cause when they choose to give up the larger benefits available in the private sector. Without them, our Government would cease to function. It is only fair and wise that we bestow upon them the benefits that they have rightfully earned. Let us not forget this when we meet again to decide the future of the Civil Service Retirement System. Thank you.●

SOVIET JEWRY

HON. THOMAS J. TAUKE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, as I and my colleagues have done previously as participants in the Congressional Vigil for Soviet Jewry, I would like to speak again on behalf of the many Jewish citizens suffering persecution in the Soviet Union. While the Soviet Government continues to disregard the human rights and religious freedom of their Jewish countrymen, I will continue to bring their sad story before my colleagues and all Americans who, thankfully, know no such persecutions in this country.

It is clear that the mistreatment of Soviet Jews is a very real part of Soviet society. One does not have to look very far or very hard to uncover new incidents where the Soviet Government has succeeded in ruining the lives of Jewish citizens through harassment.

There are many convenient ways that the Soviet Government has mastered to deny this select group the human rights all people should enjoy. We hear stories of Soviet Jews being exiled to labor camps. We hear stories of Soviet Jews being denied admission to universities. And we hear stories of Soviet Jews being forced to stay in a land where anti-Semitism is promoted by the media and in literature.

Consider, for example, the plight of Abe Stolar and his family, who have suffered greatly at the hands of the Soviet Government. Abe and his sister Eva were born in Chicago, where their parents had settled after fleeing tsarist Russia. In 1936, after returning to Moscow, Abe's father was arrested during one of Stalin's purges and has never been heard from since. Abe's grandmother and aunt were also arrested and sent to Siberia, where they both died in concentration camps.

Abe himself was expelled from the Moscow School of Arts and made to work as a hard laborer. In 1941, he joined the Russian army, serving on the front line until the end of the war. Abe survived the war, and Eva survived the Holocaust; she managed to emigrate to Israel some years later.

In 1974, Abe, his wife Gitta, and their son Mikhail were granted visas to join Eva in Israel. In order to leave, they were required to sell their apartment, relinquish Soviet citizenship and pack all of their belongings off to Israel. One year later, with only a few small suitcases, they were prevented from boarding a plane. On June 19, 1975, they were told that Gitta's visa was not in order; the family was prohibited from leaving because of a fabricated claim that she had had access to secret information at the time of her retirement 2 years before. Twelve days later, they were informed that they could not leave the Soviet Union for 2 years on grounds of "security." Even though their pensions were reinstated by the Soviet Government, Abe and Gitta refused to take up their Soviet citizenship again.

Without a place to live, Abe and his family were put into an apartment belonging to someone else. They have been living in that empty apartment on the meager allowance the government pays them to remain in the Soviet Union.

Mikhail, Abe's son, was unable to get into an institute of higher education because of the circumstances in which they are living. Threats have been made that Mikhail will be called for 2 years of military service. If he is called to serve, the family's visas would be delayed again at least another 6 or 7 years, or refused entirely on the same convenient grounds of "security." Mikhail applied to emigrate to Israel alone and wait for his parents, but he was told that he could not leave the U.S.S.R. because of his mother's supposed knowledge of secret information.

In 1978, Abe wrote three letters to Mr. Brezhnev, asking that his war service be counted favorably toward the family's emigration application. These letters were never even acknowledged. The Stolar family is subject to constant petty harassment from Soviet authorities. They are now being sued for the price of their cooperative apartment. This is the apartment the authorities put them in when the family was first kept from leaving the Soviet Union. The rightful owners want to get Abe's family evicted, which would leave them on the streets.

Meanwhile, Eva had been soliciting the help of friends in California in the hope that her brother's family would someday be able to join her there. She campaigned vigorously in Israel and America, and as she was about to leave for a meeting on her brother's behalf, she collapsed and within a few minutes, died.

I would like to believe that the fight against the mistreatment of Soviet Jews will not die with Eva. In February 1981, Abe and Gitta celebrated their silver wedding anniversary, and in December Abe reached his 73d birthday. He remains cheerful, resolute and undaunted, still hoping to escape the grip of the Soviet Government that continues to deny his family their visas.

The case of the Abe Stolar family is but one of many cases. I urge the Soviet Union to stop persecuting the Stolar's and other Soviet Jews. We in the United States must continue to call attention to these blatant denials of human rights. I urge my colleagues and the American people to join me in protesting the abuses of the Soviet Government.●

OUR INTELLIGENCE MESS

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I introduced legislation yesterday, House Joint Resolution 633, to eliminate the House and Senate Intelligence Committee and create a streamlined Joint Committee on Intelligence. I want to share with my colleagues my reasons for this legislation.

I originally proposed this idea in my weekly district column on May 18, 1984 following the furor over the mining of the Nicaragua harbors (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD June 6, 1984, 15207. This debacle prompted me to ask, "Is Congress capable of practicing responsible congressional oversight of intelligence activities, once those activities are viewed as an integral part of a foreign policy that has become controversial and the subject of partisan debate?"

I have shared my reasons in a statement today to the Senate Temporary Select Committee to study the Senate Committee System, and I quote from that statement:

> We cannot afford to allow what presently masquerades as Congressional intelligence oversight to continue any longer. With politics intruding so heavily on the process, it is time to give serious thought to merging the existing intelligence committees into a joint committee composed equally of Republicans and Democrats who, in addition to the requisite trustworthiness, competence and responsibility, also possess the rare restraint to subordinate political considerations to the national interest.

A serious question with dangerous implications presents itself: Is our democratic form of government unable to keep any secrets, no matter how sensitive to our national interests? As we all know, the calculated, politically motivated leaking of highly sensitive information has become a Washington art form, and one that is not confined to Congress alone.

It appears the only way to mount a successful covert operation these days is for such an activity to have the nearly unanimous support of both Intelligence Committees and the involved agencies of the intelligence community. Anything short of that is doomed to failure, as opponents will selectively leak material to their acquaintances in the media with the expressed purpose of torpedoing the operation. Moreover, as recent press disclosures clearly demonstrate, you can count on a flurry of these leaks just before anticipated congressional action on the disputed issue.

What is especially disturbing is that those who are doing the leaking probably have never stopped to think what the short- and long-term implications of their revelations will be with respect to U.S. intelligence efforts, as well as to U.S. foreign policy. They are so preoccupied with scoring political points that they do not even begin to realize how their action may be impacting on the lives of U.S. intelligence and foreign service personnel overseas or the thousands of people in the Nicaraguan resistance movement to which the United States has made a commitment.

Creating a new joint oversight panel along these lines would diminish the possibilities for partisan posturing and significantly reduce the number of individuals having access to sensitive information, thus minimizing the risk of damaging, unauthorized disclosures. At the same time, it would retain in a more effective and concentrated manner the essential of congressional oversight over the activities of our intelligence agencies and preclude the possibility of executive branch intelligence components playing one committee off against the other.

Practical considerations played into my decision also. The two committees reflect different perspectives, and they frequently do not focus on the same matters and there is hardly any interaction or coordination. Another thing to bear in mind in this connection is that Congress has increasingly insisted upon being consulted and briefed by the executive branch concerning national security and foreign policy questions. A consolidated oversight panel would provide one point of contact for consultation and briefings in those instances where time is of the essence in a fast breaking crisis situation.●

A NEW BOOST FOR ALCOHOL FUEL PRODUCTION

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, "Out of Gas" and "No Gas Today" signs sprung up overnight across the Nation in 1978 in response to a second oil embargo, gasohol became widely known to the motoring public. Gasohol, a blend of 10 percent ethanol and 90 percent gasoline, helped satisfy our Nation's need for transportation fuel by extending limited supplies of gasoline. At that time, alcohol fuel was chiefly regarded by the general public as an important gasoline extender.

In time, as the supply of gasoline increased, the service stations signs which advertised gasohol disappeared. With this disappearance, many people incorrectly believed alcohol fuel had also vanished from the marketplace.

Alcohol fuel didn't disappear from the marketplace and in fact the demand and use for alcohol fuel increased. In addition to reducing oil imports and providing expanded and stable markets for our agricultural products, ethanol also proved to be an excellent octane enhancer.

From virtual nonexistence only 5 years ago, our domestic alcohol fuel industry will produce a projected 400 millions of ethanol this year, a 40-fold increase since 1978. Increased need for higher octane motor fuels, as a result of newer high compression engines and lead-in-gasoline standard changes, has accounted for this increased demand and use of domestically produced renewable ethanol fuel.

The recently announced proposal by the Environmental Protection Agency to reduce lead in gasoline from 1.1 grams to 0.1 grams per gallon, which recognizes the harmful environmental effects of lead in the atmosphere, provides another significant boost for alcohol fuel production because lead is primarily used in gasoline as an octane enhancer. Ethanol, of course, is not the only additive available to replace lead and increase the octane rating of motor fuels. MTBE, Oxinol, BTX and other so-called oxygenates, like ethanol, can also be used to increase fuel octane rating, but in comparison to these other additives, ethanol offers many advantages. Ethanol is environmentally benign and medically safe and can be produced from our abundant agricultural production. Getting the lead out, as the Environmental Protection Agency has proposed, provides an important new boost for fuel alcohol production and use.●

HONK IF YOU LOVE ED DONOHOE

HON. MIKE LOWRY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I could not let the retirement of the most colorful pen in the Northwest's labor circles go by without extending my own words of congratulations. Ed Donohoe, the editor of the Washington Teamster, has kept the State of Washington's establishment on its toes. His weekly column has been chuckled over—usually by those not subjected to its coverage, vilified—often by those who are covered, but always read and enjoyed. I might add he has taken the hide off me a few times when I deserved it also.

I have had several opportunities to work with Ed and have the highest admiration for his work. While he will be missed as editor of the Teamster, I'm certain that Ed will continue to play an active role in the Northwest. To use Emmett Watson's words, another great Seattle area scribe, "We need guys like Ed. The city is too monochromatic." Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert into the RECORD the following article on Ed Donohoe's retirement from the Washington Teamster:

HONK IF YOU LOVE ED DONOHOE

(By Joe Mooney)

By a special proclamation of the Honorable John Spellman, governor of Washington state, Sunday, April 1, 1984, has been set aside officially as "Honk If You Love Ed Donohoe Day."

It promises to be an occasion filled with meaning, particularly, as the governor noted, for "people who love peace and quiet."

Not only will the automobile horns of this region be stilled for 24 hours, but (talk about peace and quiet), effective that date, Donohoe has promised to drain the battery acid from his pen and retire as editor of The Washington Teamster, in its heyday a weekly publication whose principal civic virtue may have been that it kept its editor out of print for six days each week.

The state's chief executive, who came to be known as "Governor Spellbound" to the legions of Donohoe's readers, was one of a dozen or more forgiving dignitaries who gathered over plates of chicken, pasta and mounds of cooked carrots at the Catholic Seamen's Club last week to celebrate this region's coming editorial deliverance. The governor, for one, couldn't help noticing how appropriate it was for Donohoe to bow out on April Fools' Day.

HERE COME THE JUDGES

In all, more than 300 people showed up at the luncheon, and I suspect what they represented was a partial list of people who had resisted the urge to file libel suits against Donohoe, whose prose over the decades has mainly inspired two things: mirth and litigation.

Statistics show there was actually a great deal more of the former than the latter. As Ed explained, summarizing a career in which the English language came to be used as an ill-concealed weapon: "Not bad. Only sued twice, and thankfully both have been dismissed." (I'm sure they had nothing to do with the dismissals, but there were no fewer than three judges at the head table when Ed presented the figures.)

Donohoe inspired these responses in many irascible ways, but he may be best known for his unkind characterizations of public figures. With a stroke of the Donohoe pen, former Washington Secretary of State A. Ludlow Cramer became "Lud the Dud"; U.S. Sen. Slade Gorton became "Slippery Slade"; former Seattle Mayor Wes Uhlman became "Graytop" ("He's not only prematurely gray," wrote Donohoe, "he's prematurely dumb"); and former King County Prosecuting Attorney Charles O. Carroll, who was a standout football player in his college days at Washington, became "Faircatch."

Donohoe once dismissed the League of Women Voters as a group of females "who left the bed for the good of the commonweal." He took exception when Seattle Mayor Charles Royer made a deliberately atrocious pun on the name of former Washington Bullets coach Dick Motta, whose team was contesting the Sonics for the world championship at the time. In a tongue-in-cheek proclamation, Royer referred to the coach as "Persona non Motta," which inspired Donohoe to refer to the mayor as "an airhead." "In fact," Royer told the luncheon, "he referred to me as 'Airhead Squared,' because my brother (former Deputy Mayor Bob Royer—helped me write it."

As if to demonstrate that neither age nor the prospect of retirement had softened his heart, Ed stayed in character to the end. When Seattle surgeon, former school board president and honorary Irish tenor Dr. Ed Palmason got up to sing, a grateful Donohoe described him as "the man who made 'Preparation H' a household letter in Seattle."

Few people of consequence escaped the Donohoe treatment over the years, but one who did was Arnie Weinmeister, who, as president of the Joint Council of Teamsters hereabouts, is Donohoe's boss, and who, as a recent inductee into pro football's Hall of Fame, is bigger than most of the trucks Teamsters drive. Ed gave the following reasonable explanation to this editorial oversight:

"Every Monday, Arnie comes into my office, leaves a broken arm on my desk and says, 'Whatcha writing about this week, Ed?'"

Naturally, the affection Donohoe lavished on state and local public figures couldn't go entirely unrequited. Governor Spellman saw to that with his "Honk If" proclamation, and so did Mayor Royer, with the offer of a post-retirement city job for Ed. After carefully weighing Donohoe's skills, qualifications and, of course, his disposition, the mayor was prepared to offer Ed a position as a "biter at the Spay and Neuter Clinic."

Weinmeister, who does not really put mangled limbs on Donohoe's desk, did put a merciful end to the proceedings by introducing Ed's wife, Mildred, and other family members, who were promptly given a standing ovation.

A TRIP TO EUROPE

As quickly as it came, the chicken was gone, the pasta was gone, the carrots were gone . . . and with the promise that soon Ed, too, would be gone, it was suddenly time to present that timely symbol of retirement, the gold watch.

Instead of a gold watch, however, Weinmeister announced that the hat had been passed around the Teamster offices and it came back with enough money to send Ed and Mildred on a trip to Europe. The trip would begin, Arnie said, with an appropriate stop in Dublin. Then, after leisurely intervals in several fashionable spots on the continent, the Donohoe party would finally arrive in Rome. Unfortunately, "We run into a problem there," according to Weinmeister. (Long pause). "We've got enough money to get Mildred back . . ."

Personally (and for Rome's sake as well), I hope that Ed will find his way back, too. The Eternal City has withstood attacks by the Carthaginians, the Visigoths, the Huns and an assortment of modern armies in two world wars. As much as I hate to resort to a phrase from the Nixon years, I think that Rome (like at least one Teamster-endorsed former president) has suffered enough.●

ACID RAIN; DRIVING IN THE DARK

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, when we drive cars at night we observe a simple rule: don't outdrive your headlights. At the heart of this maxim is so much common sense that it is less than profound; when a hazard appears at the far reaches of your car headlights, you should be capable of stopping to avoid collision or disaster.

This rule of the road deserves to be applied to other issues that our Nation faces. One such issue is acid rain. We are polluting our air at such a rate that we may very well permanently damage our natural resources before we develop the ability to stop in time.

As we all know, water ecosystems are sensitive to high concentrations of acid rain. Drastic changes in pH resulting from acid rain in these lakes, rivers, and streams alter the biota of living organisms and can kill all life. Hundreds of lakes in the Northeast United States have become sterile; many more are deteriorating. Thousands of Canadian lakes suffer severe damage from acid rain, portions of which originated in the United States. Canadian officials estimate between 2,000 and 4,000 lakes in Ontario alone are dead—devoid of fish.

Yet we know now we should be concerned with more than our lakes and streams. It is evident that our foliage, our crops and forests, are also affected by air pollutants and the acid rain they cause. These effects are difficult to gauge as air pollutants rarely kill trees outright, but rather reduce their vigor, rendering them overly susceptible to ordinary stress factors such as drought, blight, or disease. We see this phenomenon in man, who may suffer cancer and finally die of heart failure or pneumonia. Because it is nearly impossible to duplicate within laboratories the complex factors which affect forests, we must rely on real world laboratories to collect the data necessary to document and assess the impact of acid rain on our forest resources.

A hearing on air pollution's effects on forests was recently held by the Interior Committee's Subcommittee on Mining, Forest Management, and Bonneville Power Administration. I found the testimony of Baron Reider von Paar, president of the West German Forestry Association, particularly pertinent to these problems. West Germany has a great number of trees that are dying or already dead. By the best estimate, over one-third—34 percent—of all trees are damaged. All types have been affected; of fir species, a staggering 75 percent has suffered damage. The West Germans have a word for this dieback of the trees: "Waldsterben." I was able to observe some of those dying forests personally when I was in Germany last month.

These trees have been dying slowly. An examination of annual growth rings of the trees in West Germany showed a gradual decline in growth rate over the past 15 to 20 years. Later, foliage damage symptoms became visible. When unexplainable symptoms began appearing in 1978, politicians and the public scoffed at theories that attributed these symptoms to air pollution. Now that trees of all main species have become diseased, the Baron can conclude, "Without air pollution, there would be no forest dieback." Van Paar discussed the present attitude of West Germans regarding this phenomenon:

> Those scientists who can be taken seriously, although representing various schools of thought, are all more or less agreed that the death of our forests is mainly due to air pollution caused by human beings. The lively discussion among scientists now taking place in West Germany is merely concerned with the questions as to what types of pollution, to what extent and by what mechanisms work to trigger the damage, and to what extent natural stress factors contribute to the process.

In the context of our own situation the results of the West German real world laboratory are extremely frightening. The levels of emissions deemed harmful—sulfur and nitrogen oxides, dust and hydrocarbons—are higher in some States than they are in West Germany. The West German dieback continues despite the fact that levels of most airborne emissions are declining, and have been since 1970. The type of explainable symptoms observed in West Germany before the more accelerated tree decline have been seen in our country as well.

There is a growing body of evidence to support the claim that our forests, the natural filtration system for our air, and other forms of vegetation are in danger. An ongoing study at the University of Vermont reported that all species in the study area, save yellow birch, were declining in number and in biomass over the study period, started in 1965. One species, red spruce, had declined by 50 percent. This study could not identify a disease, insect pest, or climatic or forest successional event which would account for the decline. The Presidential Task Force on Acid Rain estimated the decline of red spruce in New Hampshire at 60 percent. Another study, in the southern Appalachians, by North Carolina State found that the trees grew as much from 1958 to 1962 as they have in the 21 years from 1962 to 1983.

The most recent information we have—from the June 1984 4-year study by the Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] entitled "Acid Rain and Transported Air Pollutants—Implications for Public Policy"—warns us that any action we take now to reduce the amount of these emissions will take 7 to 10 years to implement. The West German forests show what may lie ahead for us in the very near future if no action is taken.

For many years, we have stalled on taking legislative actions to reduce the concentration of acid rain, arguing that there was not sufficient understanding of acid rain to support Federal policy. Our Acid Precipitation Act of 1980 established a task force to develop and implement a comprehensive national program, and called for a 10-year study on the causes and effects of acid rain. While this study is ongoing, others have been completed.

The Interagency Task Force on Acid Rain stated in its second annual report to the President that there has been a systematic and sustained growth decline of our forests in the Eastern United States over the past 20 or 30 years which might be caused by various pollutants, and possibly acid rain. The previous annual report declared that airborne pollutants cause acid rain.

The recently released OTA report underscores the necessity for our timely consideration of this issue. The study concluded that: "Acid deposition and other transported air pollutants * * * pose substantial risks to American resources." The report also pointed out that:

> Despite relatively strict pollution controls mandated for new sources by the Clean Air Act, emissions of both sulfur and nitrogen oxides are likely to remain high for at least the next half century. (Italic for emphasis their own.)

Many independent surveys on acid rain have also been undertaken. These include studies by the National Academy of Sciences, the Society of American Foresters, and the Electric Power Research Institute.

How many more studies must be completed before Congress acts to resolve this country's acid rain problem? At present, there are several proposals addressing the problems of acid rain in the United States: H.R. 5314, the acid rain control amendment to the Clean Air Act; H.R. 4404, the New England Caucus bill; and H.R. 3400, the Sikorski-Waxman bill. All of these bills propose a required reduction in SO_2 emissions, yet none are expected to be reported out of the House Energy Subcommittee, delaying the issue again. The momentum behind S. 768, passed by the full Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, has slowed, partly as a result of our hesitancy to produce an accompanying measure.

Damage to crops, forests, and water bodies from air pollution, particularly acid rain, is occurring in this Nation. The effects of pollutants can be subtle as seen with their impact on plants and forests, as well as acute as seen with the effects of acid rain upon sensitive lakes. Our environment gives us warning signals that the West Germans saw several years ago. The potential damage to water bodies has been documented; the damage to forests is just being revealed. We now have a glimpse of the hazards which are looming in the path of our headlights.

Will the United States continue down its path of indecision, taking little action to slow the impending damage to our natural resources from acid rain? Or will we learn from the real-world laboratories which are telling us that our headlights are not as far reaching as we had assumed? Mr. Speaker, any legislative proposal we pass will take years to implement. If we are to avoid continued damage to our country's vulnerable lakes and forests, we must apply the brakes to our air pollution rate now.●

THE ACADEMY OF MODEL AERONAUTICS

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, July 12, I had the opportunity to visit the Academy of Model Aeronautics which is located in Reston, VA, in my congressional district. I personally enjoyed my chance to observe some of the many exciting activities taking place at the academy, and I wanted to share with my colleagues some information about this valuable resource located so close to our Nation's Capital.

The Academy of Model Aeronautics was founded in 1936 to represent and coordinate the interests of all model aviators in the United States. As a division of the National Aeronautic Association, the academy has grown to truly national group with more than 90,000 members in 1984. The academy hosts international contests in the United States and sends qualified teams to foreign countries to represent the United States abroad in the challenging field of miniature aircraft competition. Distinguished Americans such as Frank Borman, Neil Armstrong, and Dr. Paul MacCready are or have been members of the academy and credit youthful interest in model aviation as the factor that led them to careers in aerospace.

Thousands of Americans of all ages and backgrounds spend their leisure time with this instructive, constructive, challenging, and educational form of recreation. The educational aspects of model aviation have been well recognized by hundreds of schools across the country and the academy actively encourages its members to assist local schools to use the sport as a helpful tool to encourage young people to grasp the basics of science and mathematics.

The academy provides several scholarships each year from its own funds to assist deserving college age students in their pursuit of higher education. Many recipients of AMA scholarship have gone on to careers in the field of aerospace. Many academy members have contributed greatly to the advancement of aviation and aerospace interests in this country due to their research and ingenuity developed through years of exposure to miniature aircraft.

As a nonprofit association, the academy is completely self-supporting and does not receive a single penny from any government source. In spite of this the academy recently opened its own headquarters in Reston, VA, with all initial funding provided from its members and supporters. This beautiful building, named the National Center for Aeromodeling, houses a research library, a museum with thousands of model aviation exhibits, and a visitors center. Thousands of visitors have passed through the doors in the last 18 months—people from all over the United States and hundreds of overseas guests. The center has become a resource facility for many schools and youth groups in the metropolitan Washington region, allowing teachers and other youth leaders to introduce young people to the wonders of model aviation.

In 1984 the academy will again host its annual national championships, this time in Reno, NV, providing the opportunity for all members to compete in more than 70 different events that represent all phases of the world of miniature aircraft. Membership in the academy is open to all people regardless of their background or economic status, thereby providing a completely unrestricted opportunity for all persons having an interest in model aircraft to meet, exchange ideas, to compete against their fellow members, and to gain knowledge and fellowship. The 58th annual championships is expected to draw thousands of flyers and guests from dozens of States.

As the academy approaches its 50th anniversary, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate all those associated with the organization for their constructive and very valuable contribution to the important task of interesting Americans in aviation, and for their work in opening the eyes of young Americans to the pleasures, skills, and learning opportunities that are available to them through model aviation.●

UNITED STATES-SOVIET DIPLOMATS SHOULD BE EQUAL

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would correct a serious disparity that has existed for many years in our relations with the Soviet Union. While we are allowed to send no more than 300 diplomats to the Soviet Union, they have approximately 1,000 diplomats here in this country. To some people this may not seem unusual, but given the fact that many of the Soviet diplomats are in actuality KGB agents or operatives, this situation becomes extremely grave. The repercussions of having 700 more Soviets in the United States than we have in Moscow begins to seem even more serious when one examines what their goals are: to obtain classified U.S. military and technological information; to plant and disseminate disinformation in the media that is favorable to the Soviets or unfavorable to the United States; to recruit agents of influence from among the ranks of journalists, politicians, and the military.

Because of this disparity, I am introducing a bill that would limit the number of Soviet diplomats in this country to the same number of diplomats that the United States is permitted to send to the Soviet Union. This idea of reciprocity would extend to any other Communist country as well, thereby keeping the number of Communist diplomats at a more reasonable level. This bill would also apply to diplomatic immunities—any immunity that is not granted to our diplomats will not be granted to their diplomats here.

I believe that passage of this legislation is be in the best interest of our national security and our diplomatic representatives stationed in Communist countries, and I therefore hope that my colleagues will join me in cosponsoring it.●

TRIBUTE TO COLUMBIAN-PROGRESS NEWSPAPER

HON. WAYNE DOWDY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I believe that a free press is one of America's most important and basic rights. Today, I join with many citizens in my district in contratulating the Columbian-Progress—a newspaper that symbolizes this freedom—as it celebrates more than a century of service to Columbia, MS, and surrounding areas.

This week the Columbian-Progress is celebrating its 102d birthday. Although the present-day newspaper has been known at times during its history by other names—the Pearl River News, the Marion County Progress, and the Columbian—it has been consistent in its leadership and service to Columbia and the Marion County area.

The Columbian-Progress has been recognized annually for the past several years by the Mississippi Press Association as a top newspaper in its circulation category. It has recently increased its publication days from a weekly to biweekly basis. Additionally, in the beginning years of its second century of publication, the Columbian-Progress has expanded its offices, added staff members, and can boast of a circulation that is growing daily.

The Columbian-Progresss has made many important contributions to its community and to the field of journalism. I join many other Mississippians today in wishing the newspaper's editor and staff success in continuing to grow during its second century of publication.●

ABANDONMENT OF THE ANTI-MERGER ENFORCEMENT ENDANGERS PUBLIC

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, the recent Government green light for mega-mergers in the oil industry illustrates the lengths to which this administration will go in its bigger-is-better philosophy.

In its consideration of the giant Texaco-Getty merger, the Federal Trade Commission acknowledged the deal's serious anticompetitive implications. However, rather than enforcing the law by stopping the merger, the FTC's majority strained to approve it. Having admitted the existence of competitive problems, they have attempted to finesse them by imposing a complex regulatory structure in one region of the country.

Elsewhere, the anticompetitive implications of the merger are supposedly going to be addressed by divestitures ordered by the FTC. The only trouble is that the merger has been allowed to proceed before anyone knows whether the assets to be divested will be purchased and run as viable competitive businesses. When my subcommittee held hearings on legislation to correct this roulette wheel approach to merger enforcement, the Justice Department stated that legislation was unnecessary since the enforcement agencies could correct the situation themselves. This the FTC has failed to do in its clearance of the Texaco-Getty deal.

These points are spelled out in detail in the dissenting opinion of FTC Commissioner Pertschuk which I am here inserting in the RECORD.

I would only add this question. What does the administration think it gains by a policy that threatens competition and consumers, puts further pressure on interest rates, and jeopardizes our future energy independence? Everything is sacrificed on the altar of favoritism for the few and in the name of a philosophy committed to ever greater concentrations of private power.

DISSENTING STATEMENT OF COMMISSIONER PERTSCHUK CONCERNING TEXACO-GETTY FILE No. 841 0077

Contrary to what appears to be prevailing Commission policy, Congress did not direct the antitrust agencies to strain the seams of the consent agreement-partial divestiture process to preserve massive mergers. We could have sued to enjoin this acquisition and we should have.

The final order as adopted by the majority has two major flaws. It fails to remedy a major competitive problem concerning independent refiners in California and instead creates a highly regulatory, incredibly complex and temporary crude supply program. Second, it fails to incorporate safeguards recently included in the Socal/Gulf agreement and, therefore, risks the ultimate unsuccessful divestiture and closing of assets which must be spun off under the order.

The staff's theory concerning the west coast crude oil market is that Getty has been the largest supplier of heavy crude oil to non-integrated refiners in California. Texaco does not have the same incentives as Getty to supply independent refiners, in large part because of the Windfall Profits Tax, and, therefore, is more likely to divert crude to its own refinery system. Such a diversion would endanger the long run viability of refiners there and provide a means and added incentive for Texaco to attempt to acquire them at distress prices.

The Commission accepts this theory but opts for the inadequate remedy of requiring Texaco to supply crude oil for five years to independent refiners. This crude allocation scheme has become more complex between the initial and final versions of the order because of new questions about how to calculate price, volume, and related terms such as transportation and credit. The staff has done a good job under the circumstances in constructing a complex system which attempts to be fair, but the resulting scheme is incredibly complex and uncertain, as indicated by the fact that its features were still being revised and new problems discovered even within the last few days. According to staff, Texaco itself argued in negotiations that it foresaw the possibility of large numbers of disputes and that the resolution of them "might take 100 years." As the Deputy Director of the Bureau of Economics argues, for the FTC to recreate the Petroleum Entitlements Program when the agency has consistently challenged the regulatory actions of other agencies is inappropriate.[1] Moreover, the majority's confident reliance on only a five year requirement is speculative and may well prove inadequate.[2]

The second problem is that the order does not include the safeguards that were built into the provisionally accepted Socal/Gulf order, in particular, holding the two companies separate until the proposed divestitures are approved and providing for additional assets, including crude oil, to be divested in order to insure spun off assets remain viable. The staff makes an argument that the concerns that necessitated the safeguards in Socal/Gulf are not applicable here. I disagree. The general proposition that was recognized in Socal/Gulf was that divestiture of oil company assets, particularly refineries, may not result in viable entities. One way to insure these divestitures are successful is to include additional assets, such as a crude oil supply, in the divestiture package, and to hold the merging companies separate—and in effect retain the option to challenge the underlying transaction—if the divestitures prove to be unworkable.

The Commission justifiably claimed that the Socal/Gulf agreement was a major improvement over prior partial divestiture orders. But now, without any real ground for treating this agreement differently, it refuses to adopt the Socal/Gulf approach. The risk of unsuccessful divestitures arose most clearly in the case of the two refineries—Eagle Point and El Dorado. In the case of the El Dorado refinery, the Commission purports to have solved the problem of preserving it by allowing Texaco to retain it, along with pipeline and other assets, and instead divest its interest in the Wyco pipeline. Originally, staff says, the inclusion of the El Dorado refinery in the divestiture package with the Chase pipeline was justified on the grounds that this pipeline divestiture would not be viable without a refinery. It is not entirely clear why now the Wyco pipeline interest can be divested alone, but no additional assets are needed to insure viability. As for Eagle Point, the Commission hopes for the best.

Given that the Commission has not included any special safeguards in this order, it is enlightening to review the administration's response to Congressional consideration of H.R. 5452, introduced by Congressman Florio, which would insure that an oil company merger did not become final until the divestitures were approved.[3] The Justice Department opposed this bill, arguing: "its basic goals . . . are fully protected by existing procedures. . . . If a hold separate order is required pending any given divestiture, it can be obtained through consent or litigation."[4] Thus, we have the spectacle of the FTC failing to include safeguards in one merger order that it said were necessary in a similar case weeks ago, while the Justice Department opposes additional legislation on the grounds that the antitrust agencies can obtain these safeguards through existing procedures.

CONCLUSION

The error of the majority in this case has been to accept too readily the presumption that, whatever we do, the basic transaction must be preserved. As a result, we have accepted an extremely complex and uncertain partial divestiture plan along with a temporary and highly regulatory crude oil entitlements program. I continue to believe the Commission would have been more faithful to the Congressional intent behind Section 7 of the Clayton Act by seeking to enjoin this merger.●

[1] It is frequent Commission practice for an individual Commissioner to state publicly the theories and findings of staff in explaining his or her decision on a Commission decision if no confidential commercial information is disclosed. Nevertheless, the General Counsel recently prepared a memorandum interpreting our confidentiality rules as forbidding any individual Commissioner from stating publicly any staff arguments or conclusions prepared to aid Commission deliberations unless a majority of the Commission agrees. Needless to say, this sweeping interpretation would mean that the majority could pick and choose which staff findings an individual Commissioner could disclose. Thus, it provides ample opportunity for suppression of dissenting views as well as making the process of Commissioners communicating with the public about what the agency is doing and thinking extremely cumbersome. The General Counsel's opinion has fortunately never been adopted by the Commission. It is impractical, contrary to past practice and highly inadvisable. I decline to follow it.

SIXTY YEARS OF LOVE AND DEVOTION

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, the celebration that marks 60 years of marriage is indeed a very special occasion. But the distinction that we observe this day is not so much the many years that have passed as it is a recognition of the very special people who have shared their love and devotion throughout these 60 years, Chalmers and Lottie Sechrist.

The Sechrist's residing in Shrewsbury, PA, were married on August 7, 1924. Together, since that day, they have witnessed the worst of times and the best of times. Together, they have survived a Great Depression and have known a world war. Together, they have offered much to others and to their community while they have asked for little in return.

Throughout these years, Chalmers and Lottie Sechrist have been active participants in their community, ranging from their numerous business interests throughout southern York County, including automobile dealerships and repair shops in Shrewsbury and Glen Rock, a restaurant in Shrewsbury, and a number of movie theaters in the towns of Shrewsbury, Glen Rock, New Freedom, and Stewartstown.

Their strength in sustaining these numerous enterprises for many of these 60 years was surpassed only by the strength of their marital union, a shared strength that was conveyed to their three children, daughter Lorie, and sons Chalmers, Jr., and Frank. This model of strength has always served as a lesson for all who have known them and for those who have come to respect and admire them.

Chalmers Sechrist received little in the way of a formal education, but his knowledge of mechanical things and living plants would rival any engineer or professional gardener. His dedication to hard work comes out of desire, rather than sheer necessity. His wisdom of knowing what is right and proper has always been paramount. Above all else, his love of family and his unceasing devotion to his wife have always been first and foremost.

Lottie Sechrist never had the benefit of the level of schooling that she certainly deserved, but her knowledge of the world and her grasp of history would certainly place her in the ranks of commentators and historians. Her talents of cooking and skills of housekeeping are remarkable and unsurpassed. Her insight into the feelings and concerns of others is constant and unyielding. Most of all, her strong support of her husband has always been known while the wisdom of her guiding hand has gently but steadfastly directed the development of their children.

For Chalmers and Lottie Sechrist, the distinction of these 60 years is not so much what they have achieved or how well they are known, rather, the honor lies in the love they have constantly given to one another and the sharing of this love with their children, grandchildren, and their great-granddaughter.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that we, the Members of the U.S. House of Representatives, should take the time to recognize this special occasion for Chalmers and Lottie Sechrist. It is from their example that we can learn and appreciate their 60 years of love and devotion. May they have many, many more years to share and enjoy.●

FLAG RAISING CEREMONY IN LATHAM PARK

HON. STEWART B. McKINNEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, occassionally, those little moments come along to remind one of this very special Nation we call home. I'd like to tell you the story of one of those times I shared recently with two special people who live in my congressional district.

Sabina Borkoski spends many hours sitting on her apartment terrace watching activities in Latham Park, a small patch of green in the growing metropolis of Stamford, CT. The park was named for local World War I hero John C. Latham, and the American flag has flown there daily in his honor. However, just a year ago Mrs. Borkoski found her view changed. The flag was gone, apparently stolen. A deeply patriotic person, she said holidays did not seem right without the flag flying across from her home. Calls to city agencies brought no new flag, only explanations that the city didn't replace missing park flags because they merely get stolen again. Mrs. Borkoski finally called her Congressman's office.

So, on July 3, 1984, we had a small flag raising ceremony in Latham Park. A friend had posted notices in nearby apartment buildings and many neighbors surrounded us as Sabina Borkoski and I, together, hoisted a new flag over Latham Park. The neighbors cheered and saluted. Mrs. Borkoski said simply: "She's beautiful, thank you." But the tears running down her face told me much more. I could only think: "Thank you, too, for reminding me why I love serving in Congress."

I mentioned that there are two women in this story. The other is Dorothy Scofield, owner of the florist shop next to Latham Park. Hearing of Mrs. Borkoski's efforts, the florist volunteered to serve as keeper of the flag. Every morning, Mrs. Scofield starts the day by raising the flag over Latham Park. In the evening, she puts it safely away in the florist shop before going home.

Thus, on the Fourth of July, Sabina Borkoski's day started on her apartment terrace, as she proudly looked at our flag waving in the breeze. And our national symbol of freedom will greet her every morning hereafter, as it will the children who play in the park and those who drive past or stop for a few minutes of quiet. Both Mrs. Borkoski and Mrs. Scofield are to be commended for their unselfish efforts, for appreciating what these United States should mean to all of us.●

CUBA: WE SHOULD NEGOTIATE

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to include in today's RECORD an intriguing article from the New York Times magazine of July 29 by former Ambassador Wayne Smith.

Mr. Smith, whose experience with United States-Cuban relations spans more than two decades, argues correctly that the time has come for opening diplomatic channels again with Cuba. Fidel Castro has moderated his stand over the years, forced to deal with the complicated reality of international relations and not just the single-minded drive for social revolution. We have nothing to lose and everything to gain by exploring the bounds of Mr. Castro's new moderation. Last July, Castro suggested that he would be willing to withdraw all Cuban military personnel from Nicaragua and cut off arms supplies if the United States were willing to consider a reciprocal arrangement. The withdrawal of foreign troops has been a longstanding request of the United States in the region; why have we not taken this opportunity to explore it?

This article indicates a hopefulness that an effort toward Cuba at this point could create a new and productive relationship between our two countries. I commend the article to the attention of my colleagues:

CUBA: TIME FOR A THAW?

(By Wayne S. Smith)

To return to Havana was to evoke memories of other arrivals, other times.

I went back last May to complete research for a book on United States-Cuban relations. There were places I wanted to see again, old friends I wanted to look up. From Cuban officials in Washington I had a half-promise of an interview with Fidel Castro. I wondered if it would be different talking to him as a private citizen than it had been as a diplomat.

As the plane dipped low over the city, I remembered my first arrival, in the summer of 1958, when I was a brand-new Foreign Service officer with a wife of only two weeks on my arm. We sailed in at dusk to a honeymoon in the midst of a revolution. We stayed on for two-and-a-half years of upheaval, as Castro overthrew the Batista regime and began to lead Cuba into the Soviet camp.

The whole American Embassy staff sailed out of Havana harbor on Jan. 4, 1961, following the severance of diplomatic relations. I remember standing at the rail with my wife, watching the city slip behind us. As we went past Morro Castle and cleared the harbor mouth, we could see the lights of the embassy building, which stands on a headland, blinking rapidly on and off. It was a final farewell from the Cuban employees we had left behind, and it continued until we were out of sight, as though to maintain some bond until the last possible moment.

My second arrival was 16 years later. During most of that interval, the only relationship between the two countries was almost literally through the barrel of a gun. The United States tried invasion at the Bay of Pigs and assassination plots against Castro, then turned to efforts to isolate Cuba. Castro advocated armed uprising throughout Latin America and insisted that the only way to deal with "imperialism" was over its corpse. It was not until Castro began to soften his approach in the early 1970's that some possibility of accommodation began to emerge.

In April 1977, after participating in exploratory discussions between American and Cuban officials in New York, I found myself on the way back to Cuba as one of a group of American diplomats charged with pursuing matters of mutual interest in a second round of talks. I recall my excitement as our plane came within view of the Havana skyline and my surprise at the city's unchanged face.

But that was only from a distance. Once on the ground, I could see that the city was shabby and rundown. Even along the main streets, most buildings had not been painted in years. With the exception of the unbiquitous Soviet jeeps and a few Ford Falcons of Argentine manufacture, virtually the only cars on the street were dilapidated old American models left over from the 1950's. The people, for the most part, were poorly dressed and looked tired and demoralized.

During our discussions with the Cubans, the idea was raised of opening "interests sections" in each other's capitals. This would be a device for resuming direct diplomatic communications without re-establishing formal relations. We went to look at our embassy building. For me, it was like walking into a haunted house. President Eisenhower's portrait was still hanging in the main entrance. In the offices, pictures of coworkers I had not seen in years hung on the walls.

Lined up at the door to receive us were several of the Cuban employees who had worked for the embassy before the break in relations—perhaps the same ones who had blinked the lights that evening in 1961. Yes, they said, they were well. There had been some difficult years, but things were improving. It would lift the spirits of the Cuban people, they said, to have some contact with the United States again.

Our visit lasted only four days. But the interests sections were opened in September 1977, and in 1979, accompanied by my wife and children, I came back to take over from Lyle Franklin Lane, the first chief of our section in Havana. Theoretically, it was part of the Swiss Embassy, just as the Cuban section in Washington was part of the Czechoslovak Embassy. To all intents and purposes, however, we had a diplomatic mission in Havana—in our own embassy building—and I was the new de facto ambassador.

By this time, the Cuban Government's early policy of diverting resources from Havana to the countryside had been abandoned, and the city was undergoing a face lift. Potholes has been filled, many buildings given a coat of paint. Havana was becoming Havana again. But the people still had a drab, worn look about them. The Cuban revolution had succeeded in fulfilling basic needs for all—education, medical care, sufficient food, just enough clothing, barely enough housing—but there were certainly no frills.

During the three years of our new life in Havana, we noticed some improvements in the supply of food and clothing, and even a few more consumer goods began to appear. But no one could claim any improvement in United States-Cuban relations. The initiative of 1977 had run afoul of conflicting objectives in Africa and Central America and of unrealistic expectations, misunderstandings and mistakes on both sides. The mistakes culminated in the Mariel sea lift in the summer of 1980, during which some 125,000 Cubans, including some criminals and mentally ill, arrived in the United States in small boats, without visas.

I hoped at the time that out of the extreme tensions of this episode some good might come; that both sides might finally realize that, despite their very real political differences, a greater commitment to problem-solving through diplomacy was in their mutual interest. That, however, was not to be. The Reagan Administration from its first months in office swung back to the pre-1977 policy, refusing to discuss anything with the Cubans. In the summer in 1982, concluding that I could accomplish nothing, and feeling that I had been through this before, I left both Havana and the Foreign Service.

On the seaside drive from the center of Havana stands a reminder of the love-hate relationship between Cuba and the United States. It is the monument to the battleship Maine—only a stone column now, with twisted bolts that used to hold a large cast-iron American eagle with outspread wings. On the evening of May 1, 1961, after the failure of the American-sponsored Bay of Pigs invasion, a rally was held at the monument, and a wrecking ball sent the eagle crashing to the ground below. The body, with its crumpled wings, is on display at the city museum, among other "relics of the imperialist past."

On the night of the rally, however, four Cubans, at great risk to themselves, appeared at the door of the American Embassy building with the eagle's head. They had rescued it, they told the Swiss officials who were there representing the United States in the absence of direct diplomatic relations with Washington. Here it is, they said; take care of it.

The eagle's head was in the basement when I assumed charge of the interests section in 1979. I had it brought up and mounted on the wall of our reception room. I also had several talks with the director of the city museum, Dr. Eusebio Leal Spengler, who agreed that the eagle's head and body should be rejoined. We both knew this could not be done without some modus vivendi between our two countries.

The eagle's head, I noted upon my latest return to Havana, was still on the wall of our interests section. But the accord that could put the eagle back together again seemed farther away than ever.

The hallways were full of memories—of sleeping there, back in 1960, to defend the building from mobs that never materialized; of the bloody day in May 1980, when there was a pitched battle in front of the building between Government supporters and some 800 former political prisoners and their families, 400 of whom took refuge inside the building and lived with us for almost five months, eventually leaving for the United States.

After paying my respects to the new chief of our interests section, John Ferch, I drove around Havana. The city looked even better than two years before. More buildings had been repaired and given a fresh coat of paint. There was a new vitality in the streets. The old cars had all but disappeared, replaced by new Soviet and Eastern European models. The people were better dressed, and seemed to have regained some of their old bounce and vibrancy.

They also looked better fed. The "free markets," established in 1980 to enable farmers to sell their surplus products directly to the consumer for whatever price they could get, were crowded and doing a thriving trade. Chicken, meat, fruit and vegetables were all readily available, though at relatively high prices. Even the state outlets, where foodstuffs were rationed at low, subsidized prices, were stocked less meagerly than in 1982.

"Yes," said an old acquaintance from the diplomatic corps at dinner that night, "things have improved. Not only are there more goods but the atmosphere is more relaxed."

That surprised me. Given heightened tensions between Havana and Washington, I had come expecting something of a siege mentality.

"No," the diplomat said, "it is quite the opposite. There are doubtless some concerns about a U.S. attack, but by now the Cuban people take that in stride, and, like most people, their main concern is with their daily lives, which are improving."

Some of the diplomats' wives attributed the greater availability of goods not only to increased production but to the expansion of the Government's parallel market system. This consists of special state stores that offer a wide variety of products at higher prices than at the ordinary state stores, where goods are rationed. Even stylish dresses are now available at these "parallel" stores, the women told me, and, in keeping with this new mood, the Government organized an international fashion show with the participation of fashion houses and magazines in France, Italy, the United States and other countries. There has been nothing like that since 1959.

Why is the Government paying more attention to consumer desires? One Western diplomat thought the authorities were startled by the number of Cubans who wanted to take advantage of the Mariel sea lift and by the depth of their disgruntlement. Another diplomat said that Cuba's leaders were determined to avert the kind of trouble that took place in Poland—an outcome, in their view, of the Polish Government's loss of contact with the people and lack of concern for their welfare.

Whatever the reason, Havana does show signs of a comeback. It is not the throbbing city of lights it once was. But it may be better off without some of the former "lights"—the rampant corruption, gambling and prostitution of the old days—and the degree to which it has recovered part of its style and beauty is encouraging. When I first returned in 1977, I thought the old incomparable Cuban spirit was dead, replaced by regimentation and/or sheer dedication to a cause. On this trip, I detected a strong pulse.

My lunch companion at the Bodeguita del Medio was Eugenio Balari, president of the Institute of Internal Demand. The small, bohemian bar-restaurant just off Cathedral Square was one of Ernest Hemingway's favorite haunts. My wife and I used to go there often. Errol Flynn, who had a corner table almost every evening in late 1958, bought a drink for us one night—and for everyone else in the place.

The Bodeguita is enduring, almost immutable. From the ceiling still hangs a chair that has been kept there for a favorite client killed long ago, according to legend, in a plane crash—just in case he ever comes back for a drink. I saw one change, however, as Balari and I were seated. The guitarists were now turned out in beautiful new white linen outfits.

I asked Balari if the costumes were part of a new program to be nice to the consumer and the tourist. He laughed and said they probably were. Cuba needs tourist dollars, he said, and has to provide color and good accommodations to attract them. The Government wants to make life as comfortable as it can for its citizens, he went on, so it guarantees basic necessities to all at very low prices through the ration book, but then provides amenties at more realistic prices through the parallel stores.

Yet, I observed, a supermarket in, say Mexico City or Lima offered its customers more than either the free markets or the parallel stores in Cuba. Balari acknowledged this, but pointed out that those cities were surrounded by slums populated by hundreds of thousands of people who could not afford anything offered in those supermarkets. The pie may be smaller in Cuba, he argued, but it is equitably distributed. The trick now is to make the pie bigger.

In that regard, the Government's hopes assume continued modest growth of the Cuban economy—at a time, it was pointed out to me, when many other third-world economies are in desperate straits. This expectation, however, is linked at least in part to the continuation of almost $4 billion in subsidies that Cuba receives each year from the Soviet Union.

After lunch, I walked around the old section of Havana and visited some of the big hotels. The place was aswarm with tourist, more Canadians and Western Europeans than I remember seeing before—though, of course, no Americans, because of the Reagan Administration's 1982 ban on any expenditures of funds for tourist travel to Cuba, a ban recently upheld by the Supreme Court. When I had a chance to chat that evening with the president of the Cuban Tourism Institute, José Luis Padrón, he confirmed that tourism was booming. Within a year or two, he said, it may surpass sugar as a hard-currency earner.

I made a point of having coffee one morning with an old Cuban friend, a writer with whom I had discussed Cuba's international positions many times in the past. (He wishes to remain anonymous.) Over thick black espresso, he pointed to significant shifts in Cuba's foreign policy that he believed had been missed or ignored by the United States.

Compare, he said, the Second Declaration of Havana, a fiery statement by Castro on Feb. 4, 1962, with the Government's present attitude. "Then, Castro called for revolution throughout the hemisphere. It was a virtual declaration of war on the other governments, and he meant every word of it. Our approach then was to support guerrillas anywhere and everywhere."

Today, my friend continued, Cuba has normal diplomatic relations with eight governments of the Organization of American States, most of which it had once sworn to overthrow, and is seeking to establish relations with a number of others. "Our theoreticians, moreover, now speak of only two countries where conditions exist for revolution. Those countries are El Salvador and Guatemala."

"Our approach today, when compared with that of the 1960's, is obviously far more selective," the writer said. "We are willing to coexist with those governments willing to coexist with us—through there are certain tyrannical governments, such as Pinochet's in Chile, with which we wish to have nothing to do. Sooner or later, the popular forces in those countries will win out, but that does not depend on us."

He also pointed to the change in Castro's speeches. In a speech on March 13, 1965, Castro said peaceful coexistence between East and West was impossible. At the 1973 meeting of nonaligned nations in Algiers, he pushed the idea of a natural alliance between Moscow and the third world. But by the time of the 1983 nonaligned summit in New Delhi, it was a different story. He urged the need for détente, did not push the idea of a natural alliance with Moscow and did not even mention the Soviet Union.

"No," concluded my Cuban interlocutor, "this is not the same Cuba, or the same Castro you had to deal with 20 years ago. Both have matured and become more pragmatic. We hold to our revolutionary principles, but interpret and implement them in a different way. We will not sever our ties with the Soviet Union. At the same time, however, we certainly understand that our interests and Moscow's don't always coincide—perhaps not even usually."

It was my last evening in Havana, and I was prepared to leave without seeing Castro, when I received a phone call informing me that he would receive me late that night. Late-night calls are the norm with Castro, whose schedule seems to run around the clock; I remember calling on him once at 2 A.M.

This time Castro greeted me at the door of his spacious office in the Central Committee building. There were a few more gray hairs in his beard, but he had the look of a man in robust health who had every intention of being around another few decades.

Settling myself on the sofa with notebook in hand, I opened the conversation by reminding him that he once rejected the concept of peaceful coexistence. Now, however, he often seemed to be one of the foremost advocates of détente. Was this now a key tenet of Cuba's foreign policy?

Castro replied that circumstances change, and political leaders, one hopes, grow wiser. Without arguing what Cuba's attitude may have been in the past, he said, its conviction today, without question, is that détente is crucial.

"It is not simply that the two superpowers have the capability of destroying each other many times over and that the higher the tensions, the greater the chance of a tragic accident or miscalculation," he said. "Even if the two never come to the nuclear exchange that would mean the end of the world, East-West tensions divert attention from other pressing problems, and the arms race leads the world toward economic disaster.

"Rather than joining forces to tackle the real challenges faced by mankind—food supply, disease, energy and protection of the environment—East and West are locked in sterile political conflict. While the poor nations become poorer and the imbalance between North and South grows ever more dangerous, the superpowers continue to squander resources on the construction of still more nuclear weapons, as if there weren't already enough of them."

I commented that there were those who would say that Cuba's involvement in Central America hardly contributes to an atmosphere of peaceful coexistence.

"That is a totally one-sided view," Castro replied. "Cuba is not responsible for the upheaval in Central America. It was not Cuba that saddled Nicaragua with the tyrannical Somoza dictatorship. It was not Cuba that imposed bloody repressive military dictatorships and grinding social injustice on the Salvadoran people. The peoples of those countries have reacted against these injustices.

"Nicaragua is now a free and sovereign country. Cuba has every right to assist her. It also sympathizes with the struggle of the Salvadoran people. But it is not Cuba that is fueling tensions in Central America. Quite the contrary—it has tried to reduce them. It has made it clear that it would favor political solutions in the area.

"It is natural," Castro continued, "that Cuba and the United States have different views as to how the problem of social injustice in these countries ought to be addressed. But that is not important, for it should be the Central American people themselves who decide what remedies are best suited to their needs. With that in mind, Cuba has on several occasions indicated its support for arrangements aimed at the removal from the area of all foreign military presence. The United States has shown no real interest in those overtures."

Castro recalled that last July he publicly expressed his willingness to consider, in consultation with the Nicaraguan Government, the removal of all Cuban military personnel from Nicaragua and an arms embargo applied to the entire region—provided the United States would also withdraw its military personnel from the area and respect such an embargo. That proposal still stands, he said; some such reciprocal arrangement could be worked out if the United States were willing to begin serious negotiations.

"The grounds for an accommodation acceptable to all are there," he said. "Negotiations, however, can only succeed if the will exists on both sides to make them work. And, frankly, our experience with the present United States Administration has been such as to make us very skeptical. Its few gestures in the direction of negotiations have always seemed to be aimed more at assuaging public concerns in the United States, or at some other domestic political calculation, than at initiating a serious diplomatic process. Still, if there is ever any seriousness of purpose on the other side, Cuba is prepared to cooperate in the search for peaceful solutions in Central America.

"Cuba also hopes that at some point there can be a more sensible relationship with the United States. But we have no illusions that the present Administration is really interested in that. We can wait. Someday our two countries will live peace."

We had been together for almost two hours. As he showed me to the door, Castro spoke with enthusiasm of some of the projects to return Havana to its former glory. El Pacifico, the famous old Chinese restaurant, is being reopened, as are many of the other pre-1959 restaurants. Whole blocks of the old colonial city are being restored. "Havana," Castro said, "is going to be better than ever."

I hope Castro is right, for Havana is not just his city. Some small part of it, surely, belongs to the memory of Hemingway and to the thousands of other Americans who lived there over the years and came to love it. However, even if the material improvements that are so obvious today continue at the same promising rate, this is not a society of which I, as a Jeffersonian democrat, would wish to be a citizen. There is no free press and very little freedom of expression. The Rev. Jesse Jackson succeeded in freeing 26 political prisoners, but various human-rights organizations estimate that there may be upward of 1,000 still in prison.

Yet in this area, too, Cuba gives evidence of evolving. While one political prisoner is one too many, the number of such prisoners today is far smaller than the 60,000 to 80,000 estimated at one point in the 1960's. The atmosphere is unquestionably more relaxed. There has been some liberalization in the literary arts. Writers who earlier suffered expulsion from the Writers Union—and a consequent ban on their works—have been readmitted, and most of them are publishing again.

In terms of United States-Cuban relations, I doubt very much that it would have been possible to reach any accommodation with the Castro of 1960, even with a more intelligent American policy at the time. That Castro, in the way of inexperienced and headstrong young men, was simply too determined to breathe fire in all directions. The Castro of 1984 remains a formidable adversary. His views and objectives will often conflict sharply with ours, as they do in Central America and as they did in Grenada. Cuba continues to station troops in Angola and Ethiopia at the request of the Marxist regimes of those countries. Clearly, we are not destined to be friends.

But Castro is now a leader who has dealt with the world as it is—and with the Russians as they are—for a quarter of a century. Nothing could be more calculated to produce a sense of realism. Not surprisingly, then, Castro gives evidence of a patience and a disposition toward accommodation that were uncharacteristic of him during his early years in power.

The Castro of 1984, unlike the Castro of 1960, is a man with whom we might deal. We would not trust him, nor he us. Nevertheless, many of the problems between us could be resolved through dialogue, compromise and negotiated agreements subject to verification. Such an approach could hardly be less productive than the one we are pursuing today.●

PRINCESS MELE SIUILIKUTAPU KALANIUVALU FOTOFILI OF THE KINGDOM OF TONGA

HON. FOFO I.F. SUNIA

OF AMERICAN SAMOA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. SUNIA. Mr. Speaker, I hope you will join me in welcoming to our Capital City a revered lady who has traveled even farther than I to experience our home away from home here in Washington. On Tuesday, August 7, I will have the honor of meeting Royal Highness, Princess Mele Siuilikutapu Kalaniuvalu Fotofili of the Kingdom of Tonga.

Princess Mele will come to us from a place that is located in the Central South Pacific about 400 miles east of Fiji and 400 miles south of my home, American Samoa. The Kingdom of Tonga is blessed with 171 beautiful islands, but only 36 of those islands are permanently inhabited. The Tongans, Samoans, and Hawaiians are brother Polynesians.

The Princess will bring with her an outstanding family history and personal record of achievement. She is the eldest daughter of the Prime Minister of Tonga, Prince Fatafehi Tu'Ipelehake, and she is the granddaughter of the late Queen of Tonga, who held the throne from 1918 until she passed away in 1965. Princess Mele is the niece of the present King of Tonga, His Majesty, Tafa'Ahau Tupou IV.

Tongas has a legislative assembly which was able to boast the membership of the Princess as a representative of the commoners. She has the distinction of being the first member of the royal family of Tonga whom the commoners had ever elected to represent them in the legislative assembly.

A significant percentage of American Samoa's population today are Tongans. They are engaged in a variety of occupations which are in need of their skills. Some have started businesses of their own.

Many Tongans are residents of our country, primarily on the west coast and in the State of Hawaii. There is a large active and growing community in the area of San Bruno, CA. Congressman TOM LANTOS and I were honored at ceremonies there a year ago. Many have become U.S. citizens.

Our Chamber is honored today by her presence, and we hope that upon her return to the alluring Kingdom of Tonga that she will speak well of her sister in the South Pacific, American Samoa, U.S.A. We welcome you to the United States, Princess Mele.●

MARC ALAN BRONSTEIN AWARDED NATIONAL MEDAL OF MERIT

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to take this opportunity to acknowledge the outstanding efforts and dedication of a distinguished gentleman whose years of participation with the Boy Scouts of America serve as an inspiration to the many youths with whom he has been so actively involved. Marc Alan Bronstein whose exceptional courage and character, resulted in his being awarded the National Medal of Merit for saving the life of an injured Scout is an example that Scouting brings out the best in all who aspire to achieve.

Marc has continously demonstrated his unflagging commitment toward improving the quality of life for all of our citizens, particularly children and teenagers who otherwise would not have been able to participate in the Boy Scouts. During his many years as scoutmaster of Troop 113 he has never missed a meeting or a troop campout. He has enthusiastically led his troops on various expeditions through the Grand Canyon, to Philmont Scout Ranch in New Mexico, and to the World Jamboree in Calgary, Canada. Marc has given most selflessly of his time, energy and expense to insure that his Scouts experienced the very best that Scouting has to offer.

The Scouts of America have benefited tremendously from the talents and devotion of Marc Alan Bronstein. In addition to his Scouting responsibilities Marc also managed to work his way through college, earning degrees in both law and accounting. He is also a certified public accountant.

On behalf of the Boy Scouts of America and the community which he has served so diligently, I salute Marc for his outstanding contributions to the youths of Los Angeles. While the Scouts may be losing a great friend, I am sure that they all join with me today in wishing him and his fiancee happiness and fulfillment in all their future endeavors.●

ADMINISTRATION'S ASSAULT ON ORGANIZED AMERICAN LABOR CONTINUES

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I place today two articles in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. One article is from the Washington Post of August 1, 1984, and describes the unprecedented role which the President has assumed in the upcoming talks between the United Auto Workers Union and the automobile industry. The other article, taken from the Star Ledger, of New Jersey, July 30, 1984, refers to charges of the New Jersey State Industrial Union Council that the recent unilateral imposition of the "two-tiered" pay plan upon the employees of the U.S. Postal Service is part of the administration's effort to "lower wages and cause dissension" in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, these articles reflect an attitude which has been slowly emerging from organized labor which spells great frustration and anger on the part of union leadership. A sense of betrayal has crept into the speeches of our Nation's union leaders and the focus of it has been centered upon the self-proclaimed only President who has ever held a union card. The union leaders and members who have both visited and contacted me all ask the same question, "Is it true that the President is trying to get us to make more sacrifices and abandon our concept of collective bargaining?"

Mr. Speaker, I would submit that the Postal Workers, as reflected in the Star Ledger article, have already answered that question to themselves. The negotiations between the postal unions and the Government have been a case of the union's good faith bargaining being rewarded by the unilateral imposition of onerous measures upon the postal employees. It seems that the administration is now urging private industry, specifically the auto industry, to follow the bargaining tactics of the Government.

If that is in fact the case, Mr. Speaker, then I suspect that the United Auto Workers will soon be able to answer the question of the depth of the President's commitment to the collective-bargaining process. I hope, for the sake of the entire Nation, that both responses will change.

Mr. Speaker, the articles follow:

REAGAN URGES CONTRACT RESTRAINT BY AUTO UNION

(By Kathy Sawyer)

President Reagan, in a Detroit television interview broadcast yesterday, said that if the United Auto Workers union fails to exercise "some restraint" in its contract demands on the auto industry, it could "turn off the recovery, the expansion that we're having."

The president's words, in an interview with station WDIV, brought instant criticism from organized labor.

"For the president to enter into a collective-bargaining dialogue at this point is an interference clearly on the side of management," said Murray Seeger, spokesman for the AFL-CIO.

"He has never spoken out for workers when they were being asked to take lower pay and benefits. It is unseemly for him to put his nose into the tent when the two sides are only beginning to negotiate."

Labor costs have moderated markedly in the last two years. The administration would like to keep them moderate, since they are perhaps the main ingredient in the economy's inflation rate. However, the administration has previously stood aloof from private-sector negotiations in its public pronouncements.

"I do think that we have to keep in mind—yes, the workers did make some concession" in 1982, the president said in the broadcast. "On the other hand, while the automobile companies now are back in a profit position, there were several years there in which they were running tremendous losses.

"And I hope that there will be not only fairness, as there should be, but some restraint, also, in the negotiations, that we don't do anything right now at this point to turn off the recovery, the expansion that we're having," Reagan said in the interview taped last Friday.

The UAW last week opened negotiations covering 465,000 workers at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. Contracts at both companies will expire Sept. 14.

Meanwhile, in negotiations between the U.S. Postal Service and its major unions, whose contract expired July 20, the unions, which represent 600,000 workers, yesterday filed suit to prohibit the postal service from imposing a 23 percent pay cut and reduction in benefits for all new workers.

The two-tier wage scale, in which new employes will be paid an average of $5,300 a year less than veteran workers, was a major stumbling block in the deadlock negotiations, which now face binding arbitration.

In another major negotiation, talks between the United Mine Workers and the bituminous coal operators, covering 160,000 workers, are at an early stage, with the contact to expire Sept. 30.

The auto workers union has said it is ready to strike to win certain goals, but so far it has described the talks as harmonious.

The union's members gave up billions of dollars in wages and benefits in 1982, during the worst industry slide since the Depression.

But the big auto makers are headed back toward record profits this year.

The auto workers have joined the AFL-CIO in its endorsement of Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic nominee for president, and its denunciation of "Reaganomics" as devastating for many of the nation's workers.

Last week, UAW vice president Donald Ephlin described as a "lesson in Reaganomics" a $422 million tax break given GM as a "lesson in Reaganomics."

UAW spokesman David Mitchell, in New York last night with union president Owen Bieber for a meeting, said of the president's remarks: "I think it has to do with politics, not collective bargaining."

He added that "both sides in the talks are very experienced and do not take advice from third parties."

JERSEY UNIONS CHARGE "CONSPIRACY" IN POSTAL SERVICE TWO-TIER PAY PLAN

(By Donald Warshaw)

The State Industrial Union Council (IUC) charged that imposition of a "two-tier" wage system on U.S. postal workers was part of a Reagan Administration "conspiracy with corporate America" to lower wages and cause dissension in the private sector.

The imposition of a two-tier system by the U.S. Postal Service, calling for a $3,000 average cut in wages for newly hired workers, "follows a pattern set by the Administration in the aerospace industry," a joint statement by IUC president Maurice Veneri, first vice president Archer Cole and secretary-treasurer Lorenzo Oakley said.

"There, at the insistence of the Defense Department, a lower scale for newly hired workers was enforced," they said.

"The Reagan Administration also has continued its persistent effort to impose a two-tier minimum wage on the youth of this country," the IUC leaders added.

IUC affiliates represent more than 200,000 blue-collar, white-collar and government employes in New Jersey.

The statement by the council's leadership charged the actions of the Reagan Administration follow the "same scenario" taking place in private sector negotiations, "where word has come down that this is the time to lower wage costs at the expense of both experienced and inexperienced workers, alike."

Experienced workers forced off the job through a rash of plant closings and cutbacks are being made to take lower wages as new hirees under the two-tier system, they said.

In the case of the postal workers, "it's especially outrageous that the Postal Service also sought to impose a three year freeze on wages, making it impossible for an agreement to be reached when the contract terminated," the statement added.

"Having created a situation where no contract exists, the Postal Service felt free to cut the wage scale through imposing a two-tier system without awaiting for the results of fact finding and arbitration procedures called for under the contract with more than 500,000 union postal workers," the IUC leadership said.

Cole, who also serves as president of District Three of the International Union of Electical and Electronics Workers (IUE) in New Jersey and New York, said pressure by corporations for a two-tier system in the electrical industry "is virtually universal."

Cole further predicted the two-tier system would create just as many problems for management as it has for labor.

The demand for two-tier "has been responsible for a number of long strikes in the electrical industry, as well as in others, and is at the heart of a 12-week lockout of Merck & Co. workers at plants in Rahway and Hawthorne," Cole said.

"It is high time that organized labor makes a unified response to the two-tier system which is a scheme, not only for wage cutting, but for setting newly hired workers against senior workers, causing untold potential grievances, lawsuits and dissension in the ranks.

"It also has proved and will continue to prove a headache for employers, since it destroys employe morale, lowers productivity and creates tension in the workplace," Cole said.●

ALBERT SHANKER OPPOSES DOOM-AND-GLOOM EDUCATION

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, the president of the American Federation of Teachers, Al Shanker, recently published one of the most hopeful columns on education I've seen. Dr. Shanker is concerned about the one-sided ideological attitudes being fostered among young students by educational books and materials intended to show that the world is on the verge of catastrophe.

Dr. Shanker correctly says that we have neglected to protect our environment and concern ourselves about chemical toxins, pollution, and wastes. But the irony of the limits to growth school is that it makes policy changes and reform futile. Doom-and-gloom thinking is not a prescription for action—it's a formula for paralysis.

I want to second Dr. Shanker's praise of a recent book by Herbert London called "Why Are They Lying to Our Children?" I too, have read Dean London's superb book which asks why our Nation's educators are frightening young students at the very time when freedom and progress are winning the world's historical struggle. I don't believe most people will allow themselves to be paralyzed by the negative age of austerity arguments of the intellectual elite; but I do think works like Dean London's make it easier for average Americans to plan and save for their family's future with a good conscience.

Dr. Shanker and Dean London speak to our hopes, not our fears. They give us reason to believe that we can make an intelligent and objective case for the moral decency of people's hopes for growth and for the material and nonmaterial prosperity of their families and their country. Ultimately, the greatest purpose served by books like Dean London's and publications like Dr. Shanker's column is to recapture the moral high ground in the global debate between freedom and despotism, between democracy and totalitarianism.

Dr. Shanker's article follows:

TOO MUCH GLOOM AND DOOM ON FUTURE

What people think makes a difference in how they act. The philosopher William James used the example of someone hanging onto the edge of a cliff. If the person is an optimist or has at least some faith, he may well hang on long enough for rescuers to come. If, on the other hand, he feels all is hopeless, that he is doomed no matter what, he may well let go too soon—just before someone comes to save him.

Our schools play a role in creating optimism or pessimism. In addition to teaching math, English and other basics, schools—in social studies, science and other classes—give children a vision of the future. If that vision is unrealistic in either direction—overly optimistic or overly pessimistic—students may well grow into adults who sit on their hands and do nothing. If it's overly optimistic, they may think there's nothing they have to do; if it's too pessimistic, they may think there's nothing they can do—and, like the hopeless cliffhanger, they may just give up. What have our schools been teaching children about the future?

Well, mostly they've been reflecting the larger society. During the last few decades the American public has been given a very pessimistic view of what the future holds. There have been best sellers devoted to the rapid destruction of our environment. There have been books, magazine articles and television shows devoted to the depletion of vital energy and mineral resources and predictions of massive starvation resulting from world population growth. For the most part, only one side of the argument has been made, that side. Sure, there's usually someone who disagrees, but that someone is portrayed as representing a special interest whose goal is to exploit nature to make a fast buck now. All of this has had an enormous impact on the curricula of the schools. Nothing is more "relevant," interesting or exciting than for teachers to gather these exposés and make this generally accepted wisdom the basis for teaching the daily lesson in science or social studies.

Of course, there's no doubt that we did neglect to take care of our environment, and much of the emphasis on the effects of pollution, of chemicals in food, of problems with waste disposal has resulted in necessary corrective steps. But, one of the results of this recent teaching has been to create a pessimistic bias in many textbooks and courses. The late Herman Kahn, founder of the Hudson Institute, one of America's most important think tanks, was shocked by what he called the "cloud of pessimism" hanging over our high school students and the nation.

The institute examined 63 basic high school textbooks published since 1962 to see how they dealt with questions of population growth, environment, natural resources and economic development. (The study formed the basis of "Why Are They Lying to Our Children?" by Herbert I. London, director of the Hudson Institute's Visions of the Future program, which seeks to present students and teachers with a more balanced view of the world's problems and America's role. It's just been published by Stein & Day, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y.) The study found "an astonishing amount of misinformation and sloppy writing," contradictions, a "lack of objectivity" in textbooks—and that they were clearly aimed at changing student attitudes and behavior in one direction. One text, published in 1981, presented this apocalyptic vision: "You may have heard about the 'four giant horsemen' galloping across the face of the earth. One stands for Famine, the second for Disease, the third for War, and the fourth for Death. Today, these four giant horsemen are galloping more swiftly than ever before. But many, many others still do not see the danger."

According to Jane Newitt, director of demographic studies at the Hudson Institute, writing in the January 1984 issue of Social Education, "A reasonable desire—to impress students with the magnitude of the world's problems—has been pushed to the point of substituting indoctrination for substantive instruction." Newitt says the doom and gloom books are so intent upon making their points that they fail to mention the vast increases in per capita income since 1960 in the countries with 94 percent of the world's population, or the huge increases in life expectancy. The population is said to be growing faster and faster, but few books mention the fact that the population growth rate peaked nearly 20 years ago and has been declining ever since. The books predict massive famines—but fail to report that world food production has outpaced population growth for three decades. Of course, there are people starving, but not because there's not enough food. The reason is the political problem of how to get the food to those who need it. If we don't tell that to students, their efforts are going to be focused in the wrong direction.

Newitt demonstrates that there's a clear political and moral message in these books. "We" are responsible because we are eating, wasting and consuming too much. That's why "they," the have-nots, are deprived. "Thirty-one textbooks allude to looming ecological catastrophes of global proportions. Invariably, it is 'especially affluent human beings like the Americans' whose profligate and irresponsible consumption threatens 'to make the earth unlivable' and accounts for the plight of the Third World's starving masses. What is relatively new," she writes, "is the intrusion of this moral mission into the traditionally dry matter of textbooks." It is "ideology," she says, "and rigid. By placing students on the morally reprehensible side of the 'gap,' it denies legitimacy to their competitive spirit and their desire for the life-enriching experiences money can buy."

More important, the global pessimism of these textbooks sends students the wrong message about their own country. Newitt says there is no reason to believe American students would become complacent about the world's problems "if they were encouraged to view themselves as part of the spectrum of nations—and as a part that makes many contributions to the betterment of the whole."●

JAMES BOURIE, VETERANS' ADVOCATE

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to share the story of a fine young man from Woodbury, CT, Mr. James Bourie, who is the director of the National Economic Commission for the American Legion here in Washington, DC, and who has done so much to help veterans find employment and training, small business opportunities, and other financial assistance.

BIOGRAPHY OF JAMES G. BOURIE

Before James G. Bourie assumed the duties as Director of Economics for the American Legion in 1980, he was a lawyer with the Solicitors' Office, U.S. Department of Labor in Washington.

As Director of Economics, Mr. Bourie is responsible for American Legion activity in the areas of employment and training, veterans preference, special veterans federal hiring programs, small business, housing, handicapped and older workers. He regularly represents the Legion's concerns in these areas before various Congressional committees and subcommittees.

Mr. Bourie also serves on the Secretary of Labor's Committee on Veterans Employment, Veterans Task Force for the Small Business Administration and the Office of Personnel Management and the VA's Advisory Committee on Readjustment Problems. He also is a member of the Executive Committee, President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped and has served as Vice Chairman and Chairman of its Committee on Disabled Veterans. Mr. Bourie is also Chairman, National Voluntary Organizations for the U.S. Savings Bond program.

He was named an Outstanding Young Man of America in 1981, and was chosen as a co-winner of the Small Business Administration's "Small Business Veteran Advocate of the Year" for 1984, and has received other commendations for his work.

Mr. Bourie is a decorated four year veteran of the U.S. Army serving two combat tours in Vietnam as a staff sergeant with the 101st Airborne Division and completed his military service with the 82nd Airborne Division.

VETERAN ADVOCATE OF THE YEAR

In 1983, a "banner year" for Federal assistance to veterans in small business. SBA loans to veterans totaled $641 million, nearly double the amount of three years earlier. About half of the loans went to Vietnam-era veterans. In the same year, 61,000 veterans received technical business training at SBA-sponsored workshops, and 15,000 were counseled by representatives of the Service Corps of Retired Executives and the Active Corps of Executives. Thirty major conferences for veterans in business were scheduled for November 1983 through May 1984. Attendance was expected to reach 10,000. Some $1 million has been awarded for research contracts to collect information that will help the Small Business Administration expand its programs to aid veterans.

That success story is one in which James Bourie, Director of Economics of the American Legion, takes special pride.

A four-year veteran of the war in Vietnam, Bourie came to the American Legion in 1980 after serving as staff lawyer in the Office of the Solicitor, U.S. Department of Labor. As Director for Economics, he became particularly involved in the economic welfare concerns of veterans—their employment and training, assistance to those entering small business, and Federal legislation relating to other economic concerns.

Testifying in 1981 before the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight of the House Committee on Veterans Affairs, he recommended that "a small 90-day committee" be established by the SBA to find ways to improve its record in carrying out the 1974 Small Business Act mandate to give "special consideration" to veterans.

Bourie served on the National Task Force on Special Consideration for Veterans. The task force report called for priority processing and funding for veterans, establishment of Veterans in Business offices, regional and district Veterans Affairs Officers, emphasis on veterans in policy directives, veteran research grants, special veterans workshops, and plans to target veterans for SBA programs.

On May 14, 1982, SBA Administrator James C. Sanders signed into effect the task force's 29 recommendations. James Bourie continues to serve as an active advisor on small business assistance to veterans.●

FAMILY RESPITE CENTER TO OPEN IN FAIRFAX

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the establishment of a new organization in northern Virginia whose work with Alzheimer's disease victims and their families closely follows the intent of both H.R. 4272 and H.R. 5887, bills currently pending in Congress which would provide benefits to the victims of Alzheimer's disease and their families.

As you know, H.R. 5887 would establish a national network of support groups for the victims of Alzheimer's disease and their families. These support groups, which would be located in appropriate health care facilities, would provide educational, emotional, and practical support to the victims of Alzheimer's disease and their families. The other bill, H.R. 4272 would provide for a tax deduction for expenses other than medical, related to the home care of an Alzheimer's disease victim, including home health services, custodial, and respite care.

As a cosponsor of these, and several other bills concerning Alzheimer's disease, I am well aware of the need for the services which will be provided by the Family Respite Center, Inc.

With Alzheimer's disease as the fourth leading cause of death in older adults and with estimates that 1.5 million adults in the United States including 8,000 in northern Virginia are victims of Alzheimer's type diseases, I believe the services of the new Family Respite Center can be an important program for residents of the 10th district, as well as an example to the rest of the Nation's health care providers. The center has two specific purposes: to give family caregivers a break or respite in their care giving role, and to provide a therapeutic group environment for people in advanced stages of Alzheimer's type illnesses.

The Family Respite Center began as a dream of care giving families of the northern Virginia chapter of the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association. Through the efforts of this concerned group of volunteers and the donations of local community organizations and individuals, the dream has become a reality. This is the first center of its type in Virginia and one of the very few in the United States. Especially worthy of commendation is the fact that this group receives no Federal, State or local funding to provide their valuable services.

This unique day care facility is a fine example of the type of voluntarism and initiative which have made America strong today. I want to extend my thanks and compliments to the volunteers and donors who have made this dream a reality.

For further information about the Family Respite Center, Inc., in northern Virginia, those interested may contact the director, Lin Noyers, at 703-560-7908.●

RECENT SURVEY OF STATES SUGGESTS THE NEED FOR CHANGES IN SUPERFUND

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw my colleagues attention to a recent survey of State Superfund programs by the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition. The 17 States participating in that survey recommended expeditious reauthorization of Superfund at funding levels four to six times the current $1.6 billion level, correction of administrative delays by EPA which hinder State cleanup efforts, and addition of a waste-end tax to supplement the current feedstock tax. The survey also endorsed the following provisions for inclusion in the Superfund reauthorization legislation: victim compensation, 90 percent Federal/10 percent State matching share requirement, and clarification of the how clean is clean standard.

I urge all Members who are concerned with the efficient operation of the Superfund program to join me in voting for H.R. 5640, the comprehensive bill I have introduced to extend and expand that program. H.R. 5640 addresses all the State concerns outlined above and is therefore a responsive and responsible piece of legislation.

A summary of the findings of the Northeast-Midwest Superfund Survey follows:

NORTHEAST-MIDWEST SUPERFUND SURVEY
EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Seventeen states in the Northeast-Midwest region (Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Wisconsin) responded to a survey of the federal Environmental Protection Agency's Superfund program conducted by the Northeast-Midwest Institute in the spring of 1984. The survey questionnaire, sent to state environmental/natural resource/hazardous waste directors, examined state Superfund programs, non-federal hazardous waste programs, relations with EPA, and Superfund reauthorization. Conclusions fell into four categories, discussed below.

REAUTHORIZE LARGER SUPERFUND

States surveyed in the Northeast and Midwest unanimously suport an increase in the size of the Superfund.

More than half of the responding states project the need for a four- to six-fold increase in the fund; responses ranged from a two- to twenty-five-fold increase. Indiana reported, "Based on our projection of a $15 million 'serious' cleanup, we estimate that Superfund should increase six (6) times."

Eleven of 15 responding states endorse the concept of a federal waste-end tax to supplement the feedstock tax. Three of these states condition their support on the removal of the federal preemption of state hazardous waste taxing authority.

Illinois echoes other states in writing that the waste-end tax "would help discourage landfiling and would promote recycling, treatment and perhaps new technology research and development." Maryland adds that it is "acceptable only in addition to evaluated feedstock tax without state program preemption."

Two-thirds of responding states support the inclusion of victim's compensation as a component of Superfund.

However, only 4 of the 11 states would support victims' compensation if it meant delaying reauthorization of CERCLA until 1985. Ohio and three other states suggest that, alternatively, victims' compensation "should be handled separately with separate legislation and a separate funding source." Indiana adds that "a provision of 'no-fault' compensation, an insurance policy, if you will, funded by feedstock or waste-end taxes, would go a long way toward easing community fears."

States overwhelmingly support changes in several CERCLA provisions that affect state governments:

Deleting the preemption of state tax authority.

Permitting states a credit for expenditures on sites made prior to the EPA expenditures.

Shifting operations and maintenance to a 90-10 percent federal-state match.

Allowing a state's 10 percent share to be fulfilled in part by administrative costs.

Applying the 50-50 matching share requirement only to sites both owned and operated by the state.

MAGNITUDE OF THE REGIONAL PROBLEM

There are at least 6,831 hazardous-waste sites in the Northeast and Midwest. At least 1,617 of these sites will require some type of cleanup effort, according to respondents.

Seven states in the region report at least 500 sites each—Connecticut, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York and Ohio.

The contamination of groundwater by hazardous wastes represents a significant concern of uncertain magnitude.

About 45 percent of the region's population relies on groundwater.

In the seven states reporting data, 18 percent of the population relies on contaminated or threatened groundwater.

Only three states have explicitly analyzed the impact of toxic waste on groundwater quality.

Contaminants posing the greatest threat to groundwater include trichloroethylene (TCE), volatile organic compounds, metals, and petroleum.

Only 2 of the 17 respondents believe that the Superfund program is structured to permit adequate federal financing for groundwater cleanup.

Maryland plaintively asserts that the "entire state has potential for groundwater contamination." In reference to groundwater cleanup, Indiana concludes that, "In essence, the structure may be adequate, but the amount of financing available has not been commensurate with the needs."

STATE COMMITMENTS TO CLEANUP ACTIVITIES

State governments have made varying, but significant, commitments to hazardous-waste cleanup.

Sixteen states have enacted hazardous-waste legislation.

Eight have developed their own rankings of sites in their states.

Six have in place or are currently developing a statewide, comprehensive plan for hazardous-waste site cleanup. More are planning or considering development of comprehensive plans.

States indicate varying degrees of financial resources available for hazardous-waste cleanup.

Fifteen states have a fund earmarked for cleanup activities, including seven that rely on waste-end taxes for some or all of their funds.

Nine of 16 states report adequate financial resources for the state share of Superfund matching requirements, but only 2 of the 16 indicate adequate financial resources for their own, non-Superfund, non-EPA supported, cleanup activities.

Delaware warns that "the full impact of financial liability for state cost share has not been realized yet." Michigan adds that while there is adequate current funding for the state share of Superfund, but "as cleanup proceeds it may be dependent on substantial Legislative appropriations.

Additional federal funds would be used by the states according to the following priorities.

1. Site identification and investigation,
2. Site cleanup,
3. Administrative and technical staffing,
4. Enforcement, and
5. Cost recovery.

Only one state maintains a state disposal facility or wastes removed from abandoned sites. The other 16 states utilize a combination of:

Shipment and disposal out of state (13),
Disposal in legal sites (10),
Storage in holding facilities (6), and Recycling (5).

STRAINED STATE-EPA RELATIONS

States generally are frustrated with the structure of the Superfund program and its administration by EPA headquarters.

States cite numerous sources of delay and bureaucratic snags in the EPA, particularly with regard to: feasibility study completion, approval of state-EPA cooperative agreements, and contracting out cleanup and other work.

New York's experience indicates that "the federal bureaucratic process produces most delays, especially the length of time it takes to make decisions, and mid-stride changes in policy. . . . Quit changing the rules." "None," was Ohio's response to the question of which stage is handled most expeditiously: "Hopefully, Mr. Ruckelshaus will make a difference." Wisconsin reports that "EPA has made dramatic strides in improving the effectiveness of Superfund during the last 14 months."

States infrequently cite expeditious work by EPA, with the notable exception of emergency/remedial responses that several states believe are handled efficiently.

A Wisconsin official finds "the absence of support for state programs is baffling. . . . I am convinced that the states can do a better job, more efficiently, if EPA drops its insistence that state program support cannot be provided."

State governments unanimously agree that the efficiency of the EPA Superfund program would be improved if more authority were delegated by the federal government to the EPA regional offices.

Additionally, states strongly believe that the cleanup process would improve if the regional offices or the states had more power to provide financing and initiate cleanups.

Michigan's response is a common one: ". . . headquarters is trying to administer CERCLA in the same way throughout the country. . . [A]ll decisions [are] made at too high a level in the agency." Minnesota suggest "Mandat[ing] more decision making in EPA regional offices."

State suggestions for federal actions to speed up the cleanup process include:

Mandatory timelines for EPA actions.

Clarifying regulations, including "how clean is clean."

Providing Superfund grants to the states for administrative purposes.

Delegating more authority to regional offices and/or state governments.

Increasing the level of funding of the Superfund.

Two-thirds of respondents believe that cleanup techniques and plans chosen are appropriate for specific sites. However, over two-thirds indicated that EPA would make cleanup decisions differently if funding for operations and maintenance were shifted from a 100 percent state responsibility to a 90-10 percent federal-state division of responsibility.

Missouri and other states believe that "long-term maintenance costs should be more important in determining the most cost-effective solutions." Maryland suggests that "EPA would become more cognizant of the burden of operations and maintenance if required to fund it."

NATIONAL HISPANIC HERITAGE WEEK IN DAYTON, OH, SEPTEMBER 10-17, 1984

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of my colleagues National Hispanic Heritage Week in Dayton, OH, to be observed on September 10-17, 1984.

This is part of a national observance, established by Congress in 1968, to recognize the many significant contributions Hispanic Americans have made to our Nation and our local communities. National Hispanic Heritage Week provides an opportunity for all Americans to reflect on the important contributions of Hispanic-Americans in the development of our country over the years. It also helps motivate our Hispanic-American youth to strive for higher education and professional careers in our communities.

An awards banquet, several educational activities, and the publication of the second edition of Dayton Hispanic Heritage magazine will highlight Dayton's observance of National Hispanic Heritage Week. Important to the success of this observance was the recent merger of five Hispanic organizations representing Mexico, Puerto Rico, Cuba, Peru, and Panama under the Dayton Hispanic Organization, Inc.

I share in the pride that Dayton has for its Hispanic community. We are grateful for their many contributions in the fields of government service, medicine, engineering, education, and private business. The many accomplishments of Dayton's Hispanic community serve as a great inspiration for Hispanic-American youth.●

IDAHO WILDERNESS BILL

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday my colleague JIM MOODY and I introduced legislation to protect some of this Nation's most outstanding wilderness areas in Idaho.

In the past several months, Representative MOODY and I have been contacted by many of our constituents who believe it highly important to protect remaining wild lands in the northern Rockies. Recently, we accompanied Public Lands Subcommittee Chairman JOHN SEIBERLING and our colleague Representative LARRY CRAIG on portions of the subcommittee's recent inspection trip to Idaho.

These public lands are truly magnificent. The people of Idaho are fortunate to still have the opportunity to see that some of these areas can be available as they are today to future generations.

These are our Nation's public lands. Just as the money to manage the national forests and to develop our natural resources comes from all Americans, so too should all Americans share in decisions over preservation of the best of America's wilderness. We believe this can be done without damaging the important economic interests that depend on forest lands and with the highest consideration for those individuals who live closest to the land.

The House Interior Committee will soon have to determine the best balance between wilderness and development for Idaho's remaining 8 million acres of wild land. There is substantial disagreement as to where that balance lies. The Idaho congressional delegation introduced a proposal which would protect 0.5 million acres. Governor Evans suggests 1.2 million acres. Conservation groups have suggested 3 to 4.5 million acres. While I appreciate and respect the reasoning which has led to each of the proposals, I believe that our proposal for 3.4 million acres of wilderness is a fair, balanced, and defensible position. We wish to continue to study these areas and discuss important issues or conflicts. We wish to work with the committee to resolve this problem fairly.

My bill to establish a Pennsylvania wilderness, which passed the House in May, demonstrates that careful, bipartisan negotiations between Republicans and Democrats, and between conservationists and development groups, can produce effective compromise legislation. I hope my experience in the negotiations over the Pennsylvania wilderness, which lasted several years, will play a useful role in working out an agreement on the Idaho wilderness issue.

The Idaho wilderness debate is not a numbers game. It is a decision on specific wilderness tracts and should be deliberately and fully debated. We hope that our proposal, which we believe is in the interests of a great many Americans, can be useful to the committee and the House in the days ahead.●

RULE ON SUPERFUND BILL

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to inform my colleagues that the Committee on Ways and Means today ordered favorably reported an amendment in the nature of a substitute to title V of H.R. 5640, to amend the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

I wish to serve notice, pursuant to the rules of the Democratic Caucus, that I have been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to seek less than an open rule for the consideration of the provisions of this bill within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means by the House of Representatives.●

GEORGE WILL'S TRIBUTE TO ANDY IRELAND

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, George Will is recognized as one of the best columnists writing today. Witty, incisive and learned, Will's comments are read by all those interested in the political and social life of our time.

He recently applied his formidable intelligence to a task that deserves it. He wrote of the decision by our colleague, ANDY IRELAND, to become a member of the Republican Party. Will sees this move not only in human terms, but as symbolic of a problem within the Democratic Party. The fact is that the Democratic leadership is in the process of not only writing off the South, but of reading out of the party anyone who shares the moderate-conservative views that used to be such a strong part of the Democratic coalition.

As a Republican, I am naturally glad that more Democrats are turning to our party. But as a student of politics, I have to admit there is something fascinating about the gradual but irrevocable disintegration of the once great Democratic coalition. It is as if we are witnesses to the decline and fall of something which only a few short years ago seemed incapable of falling.

At this point, I wish to insert in the Record, "A Democrat Quietly Departs The Party," by George Will, in the Washington Post, Thursday, August 2, 1984.

A DEMOCRAT QUIETLY DEPARTS THE PARTY

(By George F. Will)

Democrats specialize in stormy emotions, so it is fitting that Andy Ireland, who seems about as emotional as an electric typewriter—smooth, quiet, precise—departed the Democratic Party with no act of passion. He went so quietly, in fact, that few noticed, which was fine with him.

With a name like that he should be a Democratic congressman from the Bronx. By a whim of the universe he was, until a month ago, a Democratic congressman from central Florida. He is as southern as . . . well, in his reception room thare is a citrus-juice machine, and his administrative assistant, Kathy Calhoun, is a descendant of the great senator, vice president, philosopher and troublemaker from South Carolina. Now Ireland is a Republican congressman.

Although 30 years of southern living have given Ireland, 53, a pronounced southern accent, he was raised in Cincinnati and educated at Andover, Yale and Columbia business school before becoming a Florida banker. In the 1950s, if a young businessman wanted to become politically involved—say, participating in a campaign for mayor or county commissioner—he registered Democratic, as Ireland did. Ireland ran successfully for Congress in 1976, when a 13-term Democratic incumbent retired.

In 1978 he was unopposed for re-election. In 1980 he had only token opposition, as his district gave him—and Ronald Reagan—69 percent of the vote. His area has not voted for a Democratic presidential candidate since the 1940s, and until now has never had a Republican congressman.

In the "Reagan summer" of 1981, when the tax and spending cuts were passed, Ireland was one of the nine "boll weevil Democrats" with a record of complete support for Reagan's program. His constituents were content: in 1982 he again was unopposed. On July 5 of this year he made official what he had announced, almost inaudibly, in March: he reregistered as a Republican.

"The South," he says startlingly, "has the same problem Jesse Jackson has." Say what?

He means that southern Democrats are used, as blacks are, to maintain the Democratic Party's national leadership, but have little leverage over the direction of the party. His decision is one kind of resolution of a long-standing tension. It is tension between the way many southerners register to vote in local primaries and the way they vote in presidential contests. His task, he says, is to convince constituents "that, for reasons of local-election participation, they have been voting for a party that simply does not represent their interests, nor their views on national policy."

A party cannot be built by defections of officeholders from the other party. But the political incongruities that led to Ireland's decision are among the factors that have made some Republicans hopeful about overtaking the Democrats in the House of Representatives—if not this year, at least soon.

In 1982, at the depth of the worst recession since the Depression, Republicans lost only 26 seats—"only," because about half were lost to the cunning of Democratic state legislatures, which aggressively gerrymandered after the 1980 census. Furthermore, in 1982, 41 Democrats and 41 Republicans won with 55 percent or less of the vote. Those Republicans who survived the economic slump must be considered relatively secure; some of those Democrats who did not do better than that during the slump must be considered relatively vulnerable.

Horace Busby is a Texan and a keen student of "Tory Democrats" down south. He notes that since 1860, when American politics became defined by the rivalry of the Republican and Democratic parties, Republicans have won 20 of 31 presidential elections, and by the end of this year will have held the White House 61 percent of the time. But Democrats have controlled the House of Representatives 61 percent of the time. So we have, Busby says, two "60-40" political systems: one in Congress, one involving the presidency.

For many years, he says, the nation's 40 most populous counties have had at least 100 members of the House—slightly more today—and Republicans have not had more than five of the 100. Busby believes the Democrats' domination of the House is based less on liberalism than ethnicity. There are, he says, just too few Republican ethnic candidates.

Sun Belt counties should be more hospitable to "Republican ethnics," a phrase that is not quite a contradiction in terms. It denotes, among others, people such as Ireland, refugees from their political "old country," the Democratic Party. Okay, the path of the normal "ethnic" does not usually run through Andover, Yale and Columbia. But if America is still the land of opportunity, it must be a place where any boy or girl can grow up to be an ethnic.●

OLYMPIC GOLD FOR ANN ARBOR, MI, WRESTLER

HON. CARL D. PURSELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to announce on the House floor today, that Steve Fraser, from Michigan's Second District, is the first American ever to win an Olympic Gold Medal in Greco-Roman wrestling. Steve walked off with the top honor yesterday in the Olympic 90-kilo—199 pound—event. Steve, defeated five other wrestlers, including Frank Andersson of Sweden, a three-time world champion and George Pozidis of Greece, rated No. 4 in the world in this weight class, before being awarded the gold. Prior to Steve's victory, America had only been placed fourth in Greco-Roman wrestling in Olympic competition.

I know I speak for Steve Fraser's friends and family in Ann Arbor, MI, as well as for all his countrymen in saluting him. After years of sacrifice, practice, and determination, he has reached the pinnacle of success in this event. And it is even more thrilling knowing that he was the first American to ever achieve this honor. I congratulate him on his victory and thank him for instilling in us a deep sense of national pride.●

THE ADMINISTRATION PROPOSAL REGARDING THE RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE SYSTEM

HON. BARBER B. CONABLE, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced by request the administration's legislative proposal to cover railroad workers under the Federal-State unemployment insurance system.

Since 1938 railroad workers have been excluded from coverage under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA). Railroad workers have been covered by a separate railroad unemployment insurance program. Historically, the separate program for railroad workers was based in part on the unique situation of railroad workers' often having no fixed work-location and crossing many State lines in the course of their work. Today, this situation is a much less compelling reason for maintaining a separate system than it was in 1938.

The administration's bill effectively would merge railroad workers into the regular Federal-State unemployment insurance system. Thus, unemployed workers would be eligible for the full array of unemployment benefits available under the Federal-State system. These benefits typically would be 26 weeks of regular unemployment benefits and possibly 13 additional weeks under the extended benefits program. Railroad employers would make FUTA contributions with respect to their workers.

In order to smooth the transition of this merger, the bill provides for the reimbursement to the States of benefits which they are required to pay which are based on service and wages attributable to the period before the merger. The bill also assists with the administrative costs to the States resulting from the merger.

Mr. Speaker, there are different opinions on the future direction of the railroad unemployment insurance system. The administration has proposed merging the systems. My understanding is that railroad employers generally favor some type of merger arrangement but not necessarily the current proposal by the administration. Railroad labor spokesmen generally prefer to maintain a separate railroad unemployment program. I hope this proposal will help in stimulating further examination and successful resolution of such an important issue.●

TRIBUTE TO ALLISON KAY MYERS

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, our Nation's future rests in the hands of the young. When the youth of this country display their intelligence and ability, we all share the pride of excellence. Today, I would like to bring to your attention a young lady who has achieved such a level of excellence. A fellow Missourian, Allison Kay Myers, a seventh-grader at Nevada Middle School, won third place in the junior division of the 1984 National History Day Competition. Miss Myers' paper entitled, "Microscope on the Past," won in the historical paper category. Her winning essay followed this year's history day theme, "Family and Community in History." It is my pleasure to take this time to applaud Allison's efforts. May all the youth of our Nation strive to achieve the excellence Allison has displayed.●

INCREASING AMERICA'S FOREIGN TRADE

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, I have conducted a series of international trade workshops throughout Ohio's 19th Congressional District during the last several months. In cooperation with the Department of Commerce and the Small Business Administration, the workshops were designed to give small- and medium-sized businesses in the Greater Cleveland area the tools to engage in international trade. Our objective was to provide those businesses with the practical information needed to begin or expand existing plans to enter foreign markets.

The response to our workshops from area business men and women was immediate and enthusiastic. Because of the importance of our trading condition, I would recommend that other Members consider taking advantage of our experience and offering a similar program to interested businesses in your own areas.

International trade is of vital importance to thousands of firms in the Greater Cleveland area and throughout the State of Ohio. Currently, Ohio ranks third among the 50 States in the value of its exports—and we rank second in export-related jobs. In fact, it has been estimated that close to 200,000 jobs in Ohio are a product of foreign trade. One in every six jobs in Ohio depends on exports.

Foreign trade is also important to the country at large; 70 percent of all the goods produced in the United States are in competition with products from other countries—both in our own markets, and in markets overseas. Yet, the United States has no effective national strategy for increasing our share in the overseas markets. As a result, we have a growing imbalance between exports and imports. The situation is so serious that we have had deficits in our merchandising trade in all but 3 of the last 13 years. Those deficits have grown from $46.4 billion in 1980, to $42.7 billion in 1982, to $69.5 billion in 1983.

Clearly, if the trend continues, it will threaten our ability to prosper in a fast-changing world economy.

This does not have to be the case.

Our country has had a proud record in international trade. We have shown the world we can effectively compete. In 1960, the United States exported 8.8 percent of our manufacturing goods. By 1980, that figure rose to over 24 percent. Even during the recession year of 1982, exports accounted for over 5 million American jobs, 1 of every 8 manufacturing jobs in the country.

The problem is not that we haven't been working hard. We have been. The problem is that our competitors have been working harder—and smarter—and with greater assistance from their governments.

As a result, our share of the world machine tool market has decreased from 23 percent in the sixties, to less than 7 percent in the eighties. Auto imports from Japan and Western Europe have jumped from 6 percent to over 27 percent; and as we all know, Japan has made enormous inroads into electronics and high technology.

But it is not simply a case of our competitors doing more. A more serious problem is what we are doing to hurt ourselves in international markets. Massive budget deficits raise interest rates to outrageous levels, reducing the ability of firms to borrow and grossly overvaluing the dollar in overseas markets. It is conservatively estimated that the dollar is currently 20 percent above its proper value.

To stabilize international currency values, the United States should take a leading role in convening serious discussions with other economic powers on ways to reduce the rigidity of fixed exchange rates—without causing dangerous volatility in world money markets. Just as importantly, we must make greater efforts to reduce the Federal deficit. Frankly, the most urgent business before Congress is the Federal budget deficit. Unless we make needed reductions in the deficit, our businesses will not be able to effectively compete for overseas markets.

In addition, however, we need to ensure that our businesses know of the opportunities that are available to them in international trade. That is where workshops such as those conducted in the 19th district can make a contribution. The more we share needed information on market opportunities, the more we can take advantage of growing possibilities in international trade.●

A TRIBUTE THE THE 509TH PARACHUTE INFANTRY BATTALION

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring recognition to the 509th Parachute Infantry Battalion, the first American parachute outfit overseas in combat in World War II. This remarkable group of men fought courageously, risking their lives for freedom. Their many airborne invasions were often under enemy fire, yet in campaign after campaign the parachute company met with success leading the troops to victory.

As a vital new component of the U.S. military, the 509th Parachute Battalion made many firsts which I feel should not go unrecognized nor be forgotten. In their 2½-year history overseas, the company earned battle honors for their contribution in Algeria, French Morocco, Tunisia, Naples-Foggio, Rome-Arno, southern France, Rhineland, and Ardennes. The battalion also was the first to join forces and fight alongside the French in Tunisia and were awarded the Regimental Insignia of the Third French Regiment for their outstanding efforts.

The men of the 509th Parachute Infantry Battalion exhibited extraordinary heroism, many giving their lives for their country. They set the standard of excellence for every airborne parachute company to follow, and I commend them for their outstanding service to our Nation.●

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S CRITICISMS ARE HOLLOW

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, the approach of the Presidential election has brought upon this Congress an onslaught of criticism from the President of the United States. President Reagan has repeatedly accused this Congress of blocking important measures to "reduce deficits, reward work and increase personal liberties throughout our land." And, naturally, Mr. Reagan has directed the bulk of his complaints toward the Democrats in Congress.

However, it is that House of the 98th Congress controlled by the President's own party which defeated such administration efforts as a bill allowing tuition tax credits for parents who send their children to parochial schools; a constitutional amendment to prohibit a woman from having an abortion; and a constitutional amendment to allow vocal prayer in public schools.

While the President blames Congress time and time again for not passing a constitutional amendment to require a balanced Federal budget, it is the Reagan administration which has incurred a deficit which approaches $200 billion, by far the largest in the history of this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, in order that we may show as hollow Mr. Reagan's criticisms of this most successful Congress, I commend my colleagues' attention to the following news analysis from the Newark Star Ledger:

[From the Star-Ledger, Aug. 1, 1984]

REAGAN'S CRITICISMS OF CONGRESS RING HOLLOW

(By Miles Benson)

WASHINGTON.—Like other presidents, Ronald Reagan is using Congress as a whipping boy in his campaign for re-election.

The last president to campaign against Congress with any measurable degree of success was a Democrat—Harry S. Truman.

In 1948 Truman prowled the hustings lambasting the "do nothing" 80th Congress in which Republicans controlled both the Senate and the House of Representatives. Truman not only won the election, the voters also swept out the Republican majorities on Capitol Hill and handed control of the Senate and the House to the Democrats.

Reagan is attempting to match Truman's performance but the strategy has at least two flaws.

The first is that one house of Congress—the Senate—is controlled by Reagan's own party.

The second flaw is that Congress has given Reagan almost everything he has asked for, particularly during his first year in the White House. And Congress is still falling over itself to respond to some presidential wishes.

Last week, for example, Reagan said he wanted to give retirees living on Social Security a cost-of-living increase even if inflation failed to trigger one automatically.

Legislation to accomplish that whisked through the Senate 48 hours later, under the sponsorship of a Democrat, Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan of New York. The House is expected to rubber-stamp the proposal.

In fact, Robert Thomson, who is Walter F. Mondale's legislative liaison man, says the idea for the Social Security boost was being discussed among House Democrats before Reagan beat them to the punch.

Nevertheless, in a televised news conference and in paid political advertising, Reagan has sought to turn the spotlight on the alleged failing of Congress particularly the Democrat-controlled House.

Reagan accused the Democratic leadership of bottling up six key measures to "reduce deficits, reward work and increase personal liberties throughout our land."

But Reagan failed to mention the fact that it was the Republican-controlled Senate that killed one of those measures, a bill allowing tuition tax credits for low- and middle-income parents who pay to send their children to parochial schools. The bill lost, 58 to 39, in a Senate vote Nov. 16.

In attacking the House Democrats for keeping his six items bottled up "for months, even years," Reagan included a vote in the House late in 1982 that failed to win the two-thirds majority needed for approval.

Another item on Reagan's list was legislation permitting students to hold religious meetings in public high schools during non-school hours.

The House passed that bill last week.

Another of the pet bills Reagan mentioned is a comprehensive anticrime package including tougher sentencing and stricter enforcement of drug-trafficking laws.

The House was scheduled to take up elements of that package this week, and Democratic leaders pointed out that substantial portions were contained in a 1982 bill that Reagan himself pocket-vetoed.

Moreover, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill (D-Mass.), who has been a tempting target for Reagan and congressional Republicans, has begun to shoot back. O'Neill called Reagan's political ad "a cynical attempt at a snow job on the American people."

Twirling his eyeglasses in his freckled right hand, O'Neill yesterday brushed aside Reagan's demand for another House vote on a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget and issued a challenge of his own:

"Any day the President wants to send up a balanced budget, I'll get it on the floor in 48 hours," O'Neill said.

"I would like the President to know that the country, Middle America, has its own agenda—and this Administration is trying to sabotage that agenda," O'Neill said.

That agenda, as described by O'Neill, includes ending the nuclear arms race, preventing war in Central America, and reducing federal deficits and high interest rates.●

POSTAL NEGOTIATIONS

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the collective bargaining provisions of the Postal Reorganization Act which is the only vehicle for the orderly process of peaceful negotiations between the postal unions and the U.S. Postal Service. In its wisdom, Congress recognized the need to keep a vital and essential public service functioning and, in the act, substituted factfinding and arbitration as the only viable alternatives to strikes, lockouts, and unilateral action by management.

On July 20, the existing contracts between the postal unions and the U.S. Postal Service expired without the reaching of a new agreement. Immediately thereafter, U.S. Postal Service management announced the unilateral implementation of the "two-tier" pay structure which reduces the pay scale and benefits of new hirees by 23 percent.

I am dismayed at the U.S. Postal Service's ill-timed actions. The issue of pay comparability, as with all issues relating to postal employees, is best determined at the bargaining table. Collective bargaining is a dynamic process. Bargaining is the place for the parties to work out an agreement as to the terms and conditions of employment including the issue of what level of pay is comparable. The wage comparability issue cannot be determined unilaterally. It is the collective bargaining process that has been developed to allow for negotiations on such issues.

I question the purpose to be served by the unilateral actions of the U.S. Postal Service. It appears to me that their tactics only demonstrate their cavalier attitude toward the collective bargaining process. I urge U.S. Postal Service management to reverse its decision and to honor the collective bargaining procedures set forth in the Postal Reorganization Act.●

THIRD WORLD'S PROBLEM IS NOT PEOPLE, IT'S AUSTERITY

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, for too long developing countries have been told that a principal cause of their poverty is rapid population growth. International and U.S. agencies have used this view to push sterilization and population control programs, undermining the strength and stability of the family in these countries.

Population control proponents ignore the fact that people are a country's greatest natural resource. People are not only consumers, they are also producers. They provide jobs, create wealth, and spur economic development. The principal cause of poverty is not too many people, but governmental planning policies that destroy individual initiatives and distort the allocation of productive resources.

Wage and price controls devaluation of currencies, punishingly high tax rates, and trade barriers have all worked to crush local incentives to work, save, produce, and invest. A farmer will not grow more crops when paid less than the market price; an entrepreneur will not establish a business when the tax system threatens to confiscate any profit. The result is an impoverished people and an impoverished nation.

The best development policy is one that unleashes peoples' productive abilities and ends the vicious cycle of poverty. We must reject the philosophy that people are an impediment to economic growth, rather than a vital resource.

I would like to commend to my colleagues an incisive article by Dr. Paul Craig Roberts, professor of political economics at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, and a noted political economist, in which he refutes the argument that population control is the key to economic growth.

OVERPOPULATION IS NOT THE THIRD WORLD'S WORST THREAT

(By Paul Craig Roberts)

The World Bank's 1984 World Development Report has generated a spate of gloomy media stories that emphasize rapid population growth as the principal cause of poverty in poor countries. The World Bank itself speculates on whether it is not already too late to prevent fragile social and political institutions from being overwhelmed by uncontrolled human reproduction.

This grim picture portrays human beings as engines of poverty and obstacles to material progress and leads to the deceptive conclusion that population control is the key to economic growth. Such a negative view does little to enhance the reputation of development economists, and it does much to present the Chinese practice of female infanticide as a respectable antipoverty program.

Moreover, this vew of life has little evidence to support it. Based on ample historical experience and empirical analysis, the alternative case can be made that human beings are creators of wealth and that rapid population growth stimulates economic development. Whether population growth results in poverty or progress depends on other factors. In some sections of its 1984 report, the World Bank misidentifies the factors, but in other sections it puts its finger on them.

The determining factors are not investable funds and physical resources per capita. They are incentives and property rights. If red tape preempts initiative, if private property is subject to confiscation by price controls, taxation, or government decree, if capital markets are replaced by government investment decisions, then people are denied their role as producers and confined to their role as consumers. Whenever government crowds out individual initiative, an increase in population can make a country poorer instead of richer.

BUILT-IN 'RIGIDITIES'

The Third World's problem is not the birthrate but the development planning that has produced growth-destroying price distortions and investment misallocations, as well as actual theft by policymakers. These distortions and misallocations take their toll in economic inefficiency. Empirical studies indicate that price distortions from trade curbs alone are costing some countries from 4% to 10% of their gross national product. When enormous income gains could be achieved just by changing government economic policy, the heavy stress on reducing the average population growth of developing countries by a few tenths of one percentage point seems to ignore the real problem.

The World Bank knows this, as a careful reader of its report can discern. The roots of the crisis, the report admits, go "back farther, to the rigidities that were steadily being built into economies from the mid-1960s onward. The rising trends in unemployment and inflation were the manifestation of increasingly inflexible arrangements for setting wages and prices and for managing public finances." These "inflexible arrangements" were justified formerly as proper government interventions to plan and to manage the economy, but no longer. Good sense has been creeping into the World Bank for the past four years, and it has just about taken over.

The rigidities, in fact, go back further than the mid-1960s. In the 1950s, the dominant theory of economic development ignored the importance of market pricing and allocation. Markets, private investment, and profit were synonymous with exploitation, and Western development economists were determined to protect the emerging Third World countries from being spoiled by greed. Consequently, government intervention crowded out markets, and individual initiative went to the back of the bus.

ACADEMIC FANTASIES.

This attitude, masquerading as theory, prevailed for several decades. I was taught it in the 1960s, and I fought it in the 1970s. It was eventually called into question by the work of Peter Bauer, a professor at the London School of Economics, the very institution responsible for unleashing the pestilence of development planning in the first place.

Today the World Bank is playing a role in restoring hope to the Third World, which has paid in poverty for the fantasies of Western professors. In this regard, the 1983 World Development Report was a watershed. The World Bank collected the facts on price distortions for 31 developing nations and in a striking statistical analysis showed that price distortions account for the difference between countries that average 3% annual real economic growth and those that average 7%. The astonishing difference in economic growth rates makes it clear that market pricing is a far more important factor in per capita income growth than population-control programs can be.

Recently the Reagan White House attempted to adjust U.S. development policy to the facts so clearly presented by the World Bank, but the White House is opposed by bureaucrats at the Agency for International Development and the State Dept. who would rather control births than free up markets. Antimarket ideology remains a powerful force and, unless combated successfully, may yet impoverish the world.●

TRIBUTE TO A GREAT AMERICAN

HON. ANDY IRELAND

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments of our time to honor the late Joe K. Blanton, president of Publix Markets. Joe died May 30, 1984, at the age of 71 after many years of service to his community.

Joe was a driving force behind Publix's climb to the second largest grocery chain in Florida. His leadership was universally admired by bagboys and managers alike. They were his family, his life.

As Publix's flags were lowered to half staff on July 30, people everywhere remembered Joe Blanton and the countless contributions he made to their lives during his struggle to build a dream.

A native of Georgia, Joe moved to Polk County, FL, in 1939 and began his career as a meat salesman for Georgia Packing Co. Several years later, he joined All American Food Stores as a meatcutter and was working there when the 19-store chain was purchased by Publix founder, George Jenkins. Joe was named vice president and was elected to the board of directors of Publix in 1953 and rose to the presidency in 1974.

Although he was president of the 11th largest grocery chain in the Nation, Joe Blanton never forgot that he started with the Publix organization as a meatcutter three decades earlier.

Joe Blanton served his church, his company, and his community with enthusiasm and distinction. He was an American success story—from meatcutter to company President. His absence will be felt, both inside and outside the Publix family.●

FOREST SERVICE LONG-RANGE RESOURCE PLANNING

HON. JAMES F. McNULTY, JR.

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the concern expressed by the western Governors about the Forest Service's long-range resource planning.

There is no doubt that this Nation must assess its demand for natural resources and plan for future consumption. Under the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, the Forest Service is directed to prepare programmatic projections. Currently, the Forest Service is preparing a document that will provide direction for Forest Service activities for at least the next four decades. With this in mind, it is imperative that this document reflect the needs and goals of our Nation.

A great deal of the public lands are concentrated in the West. Therefore, it is important that we pay particular attention to the views of those that represent that region. The following article from the Arizona Daily Star suggests that the current planning agenda of the Forest Service has not been well received. The Western States agree that in the Forest Service recommendations too great a priority is placed on timber production to the detriment of other market and nonmarket values.

While the alternatives were supposed to reflect all policy options, the document clearly does not emphasize true multiple-use management. According to the States and even the Forest Service's own calculations, all nine alternatives presented in the document would have a destructive impact on fish and wildlife. Furthermore, the alternative that is supposed to emphasize wildlife and recreation calls for a 20-percent increase in logging. I fail to see how this could be considered a balanced and equitable alternative.

I commend this article to the attention of my colleagues and suggest that they consider it fully when passing final judgment on this proposal.

[From the Arizona Daily Star (Tucson), May 27, 1984]

FOREST-USE PLAN SPARKS FIRE FROM WESTERN CRITICS

U.S. FOREST SERVICE WOULD PLACE TIMBER ABOVE PUBLIC USAGE, STATE AGENCIES SAY

(By R.H. Ring)

Western states are stiffening their opposition to U.S. Forest Service plans to boost timber-cutting in the their national forests.

Agencies responsible for natural resources, fish and game, agricultural and forestry, and a couple of governors from Western states raked the Forest Service—and indirectly, the Reagan administration—in written comments last month.

The comments were made independently, based on research and observations from Arizona to Washington state, but they contain one unifying criticism: that the Forest Service's emerging national plan is blatantly biased against wildlife and recreation.

The states charge that complex, computerized calculations—which outline use and development of the national forests for the next 45 years—reflect these basic biases:

The importance of recreation, wildlife, scenery and clean water to the American public is greatly undervalued by the federal agency.

The value of timber products is inflated to justify logging.

Logging increases are being dictated "from above"—by Forest Service bureaucrats and the Reagan administration—without consideration for the capacity of forests.

The Forest Service is masking severe impacts on wildlife and recreation that will result from increased logging and forest development.

Close Western scrutiny is not surprising. Nearly 90 percent of national forest lands are in or west of the Rocky Mountains, and the Forest Service administers one-seventh of the region's total area.

As reported in an Arizona Daily Star series in February, the Western states have grown critical of how the Forest Service is carrying out laws passed in the mid-1970s, which require long-range forest planning.

"We have not yet reviewed a (Forest Service) plan that satisfactorily treated protection of fish and wildlife habitat or populations," said the California Department of Fish and Game last month.

The federal planning effort, the most intensive ever by a natural-resource agency, harnesses some of the most complex computer formulas ever devised.

The complexity allows ample opportunity for manipulation, say critics and Forest Service observers.

John Crowell, the Reagan appointee who is directing the Forest Service, has admitted he emphasizes development of forest "commodities"—timber and minerals—over forest "amenities"—wildlife, recreation and scenery.

In memos to the chief of the Forest Service, Crowell repeatedly had ordered changes in how the agency conducts its computer analyses and evaluates its resources.

Western states, relying on their own computer and planning experts, find many signs of Crowell's priorities in the draft national plan—the 1985 Resources Planning Act Program, a 400-page distillation of computer runs made over the past several years, released in January.

The draft presented nine "alternatives"—possible management directions and their effects. A final plan will be released by the end of the year, based on the alternatives and public comment.

Most Western states felt the range of alternatives was too concentrated on timber production.

All nine alternatives would have a destructive impact on fish and wildlife, according to the states and the Forest Service's own calculations.

"All favor timber or range to some degree. None of the alternatives clearly favors fish and wildlife—a resource desired by a significant number of the public at large and most forest visitors," commented the California Department of Fish and Game.

"The range of alternatives is insufficient. . . . At least one alternative should meet the established state goals for management of fish and wildlife," said the Washington Department of Game.

The alternatives were supposed to reflect a full range of priorities, from emphasizing wildlife and recreation to emphasizing timber.

Seven of the nine alternatives call for increases in logging of up to 100 percent.

"It appears throughout the document that the primary emphasis of management is timber production. We believe management should emphasize multiple use," said the New Mexico Department of Agriculture.

Of the remaining two alternatives, one would maintain current programs, and the other would reduce support for all forest resources—timber, wildlife and recreation.

The alternative that is suppposed to emphasize wildlife and recreation—titled the "non-market" alternative—called for a 20 percent hike in logging overall.

Most states doubted the validity of this alternative, which would double timbercutting in northern Idaho, with "a very negative impact on water quality for fish and security for elk," according to the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

It "could be very detrimental in northern Idaho forests in the long run," the Idaho department said.

The Forest Service's own calculations show that the "non-market" alternative would cause a decline in habitat for elk, deer and fish in the Pacific Northwest because of logging in remaining wild woods.

Across the West, the "non-market" alternative would hurt birds dependent on wild woods, according to the Forest Service. Habitat for the rare spotted owl, already declining, would be reduced by nearly half.

The "non-market" alternative also protects far less wilderness than some states' own congressional delegations are proposing.

No alternative comes near matching wilderness totals proposed by conservation groups. The Washington Department of Ecology felt that at least one alternative should. Only then, the department felt, would the public be able to comment on a full range of choices.

The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish was "less than satisfied" with the entire plan. The Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife rejected all the alternatives.

The Arizona Department of Game and Fish said it "cannot support any alternative or program which purports to produce adverse impacts on Arizona's fish and wildlife . . . regardless of the social, economic and political demands for commodities."

The three alternatives with the highest timber-cutting levels were formulated on the order of Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Crowell, a former attorney for the lumber company that is the largest buyer of national-forest timber.

Natural-resource agencies indicated that the public-comment period, which ended April 9, was a sham because of the lack of real choices.

The Oregon Division of Environmental Quality felt the alternatives were so alike that "a reviewer cannot clearly assess each as a distinct choice."

Tom Hamilton, director of national planning for the Forest Service, told the Star that the alternatives provided a full "range of possibility" for what the public wants from its national forests.

Crowell said the plan will "create some change in the wildlife community" by helping some species and hurting others.

He cited the "likely call by society" for timber from the national forests "in order to prevent wood prices from going skyhigh."

"All this concern" for wildlife, Crowell said, "boils down to an unstated effort to just leave the national forests alone."

Most Western states also felt the foundation of the planning process was slanted to support logging.

In its computer runs, the Forest Service figured on a steadily increasing value for timber taken from the national forests.

Yet the agency did not figure for any increase in the value of recreation, hunting or fishing, or enjoyment of wildlife, scenery or clean water.

No forest resource other than timber will inflate in worth over the next 45 years, according to the Forest Service computer runs.

This assumption contradicts numerous Forest-Service statements, made in local or national plans.

In the draft plan itself, the agency predicts "continued increases in demand for outdoor recreational opportunities on forest and range lands"—particularly in the West, where populations are booming.

The agency also has repeatedly cited the increasing need to provide wildlife habitat to offset degradations on all types of land.

Nevertheless, the computer runs, which shaped the alternatives, projected a flat demand and value for recreation, habitat and non-timber resources.

The Forest Service's own planners in some regions objected to inflating only the value of timber. They were overruled in a January memo from the agency's chief, R. Max Peterson.

The agency's position is that research has focused on timber products, while the value and demand for other resources has not been adequately quantified.

"We've been in the business of analyzing the timber resource for quite some time. For the other resources, we don't have" comparable information, explained Hamilton, head national-forest planner.

Crowell acknowledged that public demand for recreation and wildlife will be rising, as will the value of these resources.

But, he said, inflating only timber in the plan "is exactly right from an economic standpoint" because there is "better data for timber."

Crowell said it was "not a very significant issue."

Western states disagree. Officials feel the growing importance of recreation and wildlife is ignored.

"A greater emphasis should be placed" on recreation—"the nation's second-most important industry," said the Arizona Parks and Recreation Department. "This is particularly true in view of the drastic reduction in the land and water conservation program administered by the Department of Interior."

"Certainly the supply of recreational opportunities is not easily expanded, but the demand is growing inexorably," said the Colorado Department of Natural Resources.

The Oregon Office of State Forester said the federal projections "are subject to professional question."

The Washington Department of Game said they were "unrealistic" and would lead to "a bias toward timber, especially over time."

Additional bias was found in how the Forest Service set current values of non-timber resources.

Forest Service researchers had put together a 140-page report on the values of various recreation and wildlife use—a day of hunting, a hike in the woods, and so on.

These values—the building blocks of the planning process, representing the importance of each forest use—were in a preliminary draft plan presented to Crowell.

Last September, Crowell ordered that the recreation and wildlife values be reduced. They were cut by more than one-third, and the computer runs redone.

Western states felt the reduction was "arbitrary" and "inaccurate" and intended to downplay forest recreation and wildlife.

The new values "are not acceptable. These values are much lower than recent study information seems to indicate," said the Arizona Department of Game and Fish.

Montana Gov. Ted Schwinden said the reduction of the values "appears arbitrary" and may justify logging that will "conflict with quality recreation opportunities."

Wyoming Gov. Ed Herschler asked the Forest Service to take "a more accurate and realistic viewpoint" on the value of recreation and wildlife in his state's economy.

Idaho's Department of Game said the reduction was a "major concern"—"totally unacceptable" because it "distorts the relative values of the various resources."

Idaho asked that the Forest Service adopt values coming out of a joint study involving researchers from Idaho, the Forest Service, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Land Management and Corps of Engineers.

The values from that study are much higher than the ones used in the Forest Service national plan.

Forest Service planner Hamilton said the agency believes its "rationale is sound." He acknowledged "we really need to do some work" on "improved" information.

Crowell told the Star that even the reduced values "are questionably high" and they may be further reduced for final computer runs.

Many states said wildlife habitat and forest quality are already declining, and that no amount of increased funding would help as long as timber production kept rising.

"It is the professional judgment of the department's staff that suitable fish and wildlife habitat is declining under the current level of harvest and has been declining" for years, said the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife.

The states criticized cutbacks in funding for wildlife and recreation during the Reagan years.

The Forest Service "does not currently have a fish and wildlife program" in Montana and Idaho, Schwinden said.

The new plan's assurances that wildlife, watersheds and other resources would be protected—and even helped—by timber production were "misleading," "vague" and false, said many of the states.

For instance, the Forest Service assumed that logging will benefit the West by increasing water yields—the runoff from forest lands that are cleared.

The states replied that, actually, increased logging will bring a decline in overall water quality, faster runoff in flood periods, and reduced flows in dry spells.

"Why not acknowledge impacts and display the decrease in water quality that results from additional logging and roading?" Schwinden asked.

Many national forests originally were formed to protect the West's watersheds, and several states mentioned this irony of history.

Forest Service planner Hamilton said that when the computers evaluated water resources, "quality was a major consideration in the East; quantity was a major consideration in the West."

Several Western states said increased logging would violate their water-quality standards.

The draft plan was put together with inadequate local input, and the emerging national goals will be imposed without consideration of the impact, the states felt.

"What we don't need is more centralized planning or Washington, D.C.-based target assignments. The forest planning process must work from the bottom up and not from the top down if it is to be effective and accepted," said Wyoming's Herschler.

"The fickleness of political winds may seriously undermine the whole thrust" of forest planning, the Colorado State Forest Service said.

Local priorities were to take a front seat in the national plan, until Crowell ordered against it. The U.S. Forest Service had decided to have the national plan merely sum up the local forest plans being formulated across the country.

The Arizona Department of Game and Fish, and other agencies around the West, also supported summing up the local plans.

But Crowell opposed the proposal, and it was only presented as one of the nine alternatives.

National goals must rule over local goals, Crowell told the Star, while admitting that the dominance flawed the process "to a degree."

The Forest Service, Crowell said, "has always been extremely conservative" in cutting timber, and it's time for change.●

CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL FOR SOVIET JEWRY SUPPORT FOR THE ELBERT FAMILY

HON. MIKE LOWRY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jewry, I would like to take this opportunity to present an update on the status of my adopted refusenik family, the Elberts of Kiev. I would also like to express my thanks to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] for his work as chairman of this year's vigil, and to the National Conference on Soviet Jewry and the Union of Councils for Soviet Jews for their continuing devotion to this most important cause.

Earlier this year, Lev Elbert was released from prison and reunited with his family. He had refused to report for reserve military service because this service could have been used as an excuse for refusing to allow him to emigrate in the future. His wife Inna had gone on a hunger strike to protest drug charges against Lev, which were eventually dropped. Their son Carmi was injured in anti-Semitic attacks at his school.

A report from July 31 indicates that the Elberts are now in Moscow, although it appears they will soon return to Kiev. All are in improved health, but Inna is still suffering from aftereffects of her hunger strike. Lev visited the Defense Ministry and requested that no further efforts be made to call him up for reserve duty. He was treated courteously and promised a quick response in writing. Lev is also looking for work.

I hope that the promise of a speedy response from the Defense Ministry will be fulfilled, and that conditions will continue to improve for the Elberts. I know, however, that we will all gladly join in helping them whenever it may be necessary in the future.●

ASSOCIATION OF TRIAL LAWYERS OF AMERICA HONORS SCOTTY BALDWIN

HON. SAM B. HALL, JR.

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, the prestigious Association of Trial Lawyers of America recently installed my good friend and fellow lawyer, Scotty Baldwin, as its president for the 1984-85 term. The ATLA could not have made a better selection, because Scotty Baldwin is recognized throughout the United States as one of the preeminent trial lawyers. He is richly deserving of this honor and I am extremely proud of him.

Scotty Baldwin is a lifelong resident of Marshall, TX, and for a number of years we both practiced law in Marshall. Scotty has astounded the legal world by consistently winning major civil lawsuits that were truly national in scope, not as a big city lawyer, but with an office in a city of 25,000 people.

He takes on the giants in personal injury cases and his clients are often those who have no means to hire a lawyer. I can attest from personal knowledge that Scotty Baldwin is truly a great lawyer—one who nearly always walks away a winner. In short, he just has an incredibly keen legal mind.

Scotty Baldwin has achieved every honor that can be bestowed upon a person in the legal profession, and as a part of my remarks I am including two very interesting stories which appeared in the Marshall News Messenger about his successful life and career. I commend these articles to the attention of my colleagues and the Nation as follows:

The articles follow:

BALDWIN INSTALLED AS ATLA CHIEF

(By Frank Pieper)

Marshall attorney Scott Baldwin added still another credit to his illustrious career as one of the country's foremost trial lawyers this past week when he was installed as president of the largest trial bar in the world, the Association of Trial Lawyers of America.

Baldwin was installed as 1984-85 president Thursday at ATLA's 1984 annual convention in Seattle, Wash.

Headquartered in Washington, D.C., ATLA is the world's largest trial bar organization with more than 57,000 members throughout the United States, Canada, Puerto Rico and other countries.

Baldwin said ATLA differs from the American Bar Association in that ABA is made up of all types of lawyers, but is traditionally dominated by defense lawyers, while ATLA is an organization of trial lawyers whose major emphasis is on the continuing education of its members, rather than on political lobbying. "At least it will be under my administration," he noted.

Baldwin said ATLA is "keenly interested in preserving the right of trial by jury" and toward that end, sponsors an extensive, ongoing program of training seminars and trial demonstrations.

Having taught one such seminar himself while at Harvard last summer, Baldwin said ATLA's program "has been a great boon for building the qualifications of trial lawyers around the country."

Having served as ATLA president-elect during the past year and vice president the year before, Baldwin succeeds David S. Shrager of Philadelphia as ATLA president and will serve in that capacity through the 1985 ATLA convention in Chicago next July.

Baldwin has also served on ATLA's Board of Governors representing Texas trial attorneys from 1973 to 1976 and on several ATLA committees over the years.

As ATLA president for one year, Baldwin will be the chief executive officer of the association and will preside over all meetings of its board of governors. He will act as ATLA's official spokesman, direct ATLA affairs with the advice and consent of the board of directors and appoint all ATLA committees.

Baldwin is a frequent lecturer and speaker and claims to have toured as a guest speaker in more than 30 states. Although a severe heart attack last year has forced him at least to try to slow down, Baldwin said he still averages at least a couple of lectures a month, generally at my own expense . . . I look at it as I'm giving something back to my profession."

He has also authored or coauthored three law books: Art of Advocacy—Direct Exmination, The Preparation of a Product Liability Case, and Anatomy of the Personal Injury Lawsuit.

MILLION-DOLLAR LAWYER: BALDWIN DID IT AT HOME

(By Frank Pieper)

For an area dominated more by pine forests and swamp bottoms than humans, Marshall and Harrison Counties have produced more than their share of famous sons and daughters.

Familiar names abound: Football Hall-of-Famer Y.A. Tittle, TV journalist Bill Moyers, former First Lady and widow of the 36th President Lady Bird Johnson, blues singer/folk hero Huddie Ledbetter, actress Susan Howard, author Joseph Goulden, civil rights activist James Farmer and former heavyweight boxing champion George Foreman. They all originated hereabouts and went on to become nationally, even internationally recognized.

But in each case, the road to fame and fortune meant putting Harrison County in the rear-view mirrors and none achieved their success until they had . . . but for one notable exception.

Although his name may not be as recognized outside of legal circles as those of Tittle or Foreman, Marshall lawyer Scotty Baldwin ranks with the likes of Ralph Nader in promoting occupational and consumer safety.

Balwin's law office, which he shares with his partners Franklin Jones Jr., Doyle Curry and Carl Roth, deals exclusively in major civil lawsuits—specifically, personal injury cases.

In many cases, that has meant taking on the "big gun lawyers" from cities many times larger than Marshall, representing disabled, unemployed individuals with no means of hiring an attorney against major industrial corporations. More than a few times, he has tackled the government, itself.

Nevertheless, this "small town" lawyer and his partners have established not only a string of six- and seven-figure settlements for their clients, but also a winning record and almost legendary reputation for taking their cases to trial where many attorneys prefer to settle out of court.

"We probably try a greater percentage of our cases than most firms," he said.

That likelihood that Baldwin will take a suit to trial if he is not satisfied with the other side's offer, coupled with the fact that he wins far more of those cases than he loses, has a great deal to do with his success rate both inside the courtroom and out.

For example:

As lead counsel for 445 plaintiffs in the recent asbestos cases (of which about 250 were actually his clients,) Baldwin negotiated a phenomenal $20 million package-deal settlement. In addition to setting his own personal settlement record with that case, Baldwin said the settlement broke ground for more than 1,000 subsequent other cases involving injuries attributed to asbestos poisoning.

Baldwin said he may break his own package-settlement record soon, depending on the outcome of current litigation against the U.S. government in connection with the Army's postwar nuclear test program in the Marshall Islands.

Baldwin and his associates represent nearly 6,000 natives of the Marshall Islands where the American government detonated some 40 atomic bombs between 1948 and the 1963 signing of the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty.

According to Baldwin's partner Doyle Curry, a wind shift during the 1954 Bravo test near Bikini Atoll caused the islands downwind of the test to be "saturated" with radiation fallout. Unwarned and unsuspecting natives were contaminated, as were the land, crops and livestock. The cancer rate shot up to 10 times the normal rate.

Although the government has refused to acknowledge responsibility for what was officially classified as "a nuclear accident," Baldwin said it has already offered the plaintiffs $150 million to settle out of court. The case is pending in California.

Baldwin and his associates won what he called "supposedly the largest verdict in the state of Mississippi" with another asbestos-related case about four years ago. Representing a Gulf Port, Miss., shipyard worker whose health and livelihood had been damaged by his exposure to asbestos cargoes, Baldwin reaped a $1.1 million jury award—an amount previously unparalleled in the history of Mississippi jury decisions.

Much of Baldwin's reputation for winning big has been the result of his performance in handling personal injury cases.

That reputation is what has won Baldwin recognition in such publications as Who's Who in Texas and The Best Lawyers in America, and earned him an entire chapter in Joseph Goulden's book, The Million Dollar Lawyers.

It has also distinguished him among the elite in his field. He is a former governor and vice president of the American Trial Lawyers Association and past president and vice president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association and the Harrison County Bar Association. He has been honored with fellowships in the International Society of Barristers, the Inner Circle of Trial Advocates, and the prestigious American College of Trial Lawyers. Most telling, though, is his membership in the International Academy of Trial Lawyers, whose standards are strict that Baldwin said, "If you don't rate in the top 1 percent (of all the trial lawyers in the world,) you don't qualify."

The most recent feather in his cap was his installation Thursday as president of the world's largest trial bar organization, the American Trial Lawyers Association (see sidebar story.)

Yet, perhaps the truest sign of his success can not be measured in dollar signs, elected offices or honorary memberships, but by the fact that he makes his living doing what he enjoys most.

"I've finally gotten by hard work to the station in life where I can spend my time working on cases I enjoy . . . that is, personnal injury cases," he said. "My practice has become highly specialized."

However, personal injury cases are more than Baldwin's specialty; they're his first love.

That is significant to a lawyer of Baldwin's standing because attorneys who represent disabled, unemployed individuals in personal injury cases only get paid if they win.

Baldwin says he prefers that contingency arrangement (the standard attorney's fee is 25 percent or more of the award), because it provides him "an incentive to do well."

"It's good because the people that I usually see have been beset by tragedy," he said. "This way it lets the man of little means have the best attorney possible. I like to work under that arrangement."

Besides casting him in the role of defending the underdog, personal injury cases also enable Baldwin to do some good on a more far reaching, public level as a consumer advocate. Lawsuits filed by Baldwin and his associates, even some they have lost have often forced national or international manufacturers to upgrade equipment, methods or standards in order to avoid further litigation.

"The work I do is gratifying because I feel I'm doing something positive," he said. "I feel like I'm providing a service for society because you see products improve and safety measures taken as a direct result of the work I've done."

That attitude illustrates just how far Francis Scott Baldwin Sr. has come since the ex-Marshall Marverick quarterback and son of a pioneer Harrison County family defied his father's wishes that he be a doctor and stuck it out in law school—just to prove to his college buddies and himself that he could do it.

After playing alongside Y.A. Tittle for the district champion Mavericks in 1943, 1944 and 1945, 17-year old Scotty graduated from Marshall High School in 1946 and enrolled in the pre-med program at North Texas State University in Denton . . . mostly because that's the way his father, the late Dr. J.B. Baldwin wanted it.

"I was going to be a doctor. My father was a doctor and that's what he wanted for me," he said.

After graduating with "fairly good grades" and a bachelor of science degree in 1949, Baldwin began a year of graduate study at the University of Texas in Austin while looking around for a medical school that would take him.

"At that time, they had three (medical schools) in Texas, taking a total of 80 new students out of 10,000 applicants each year," he said. "I had fairly good grades, but I didn't have a straight-A average."

It was then that Baldwin's college roommate, Bob Monagham (now a West Texas corporation lawyer), took the direction of Baldwin's life and his education in to his own hands.

"While I was gone one weekend, my roommate enrolled me in law school," Baldwin said. "He told me I had too good a mind not to be a lawyer.

"Anyway, when I got back in September, I found out my classes had been going on for a year. I decided to try to meet the challenge and stick it out the first year . . . They were betting around the fraternity house that I wouldn't make it."

He said his determination to prove his friends wrong may have given him the drive he needed to do the job. Nevertheless, he recalls, "I was in law school a year before I told my daddy. I was afraid to tell him."

Baldwin married in December 1952 and graduated from law school in 1953. He passed his bar exam and was admitted to the Texas Bar in the same year. He opened a law office in Marshall and has practiced here ever since.

He and his wife, Coralee Fain Baldwin, have three children: a daughter, Lee, who teaches high school home economics in Fort Worth; and two lawyer sons, Scott Jr. and Jack.

Now approaching his 56th birthday, Baldwin has been forced to ease back "at least a little" from his full schedule of legal work and speaking engagements following a major heart attack in February of last year. However, he said he is not considering retirement and plans to keep trying personal injury cases "as long as it's fun. When it stops being fun, I'll start looking around for something else to do." ●

SOMETHING IS ROTTEN AT FEMA

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate our colleague from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] for his work in exposing the fraud and waste among several high-ranking Federal Emergency Management Agency personnel.

I would just like to add that FEMA's waste extends beyond engrandizement of its personnel and staff.

In California, there is a lake called Tulare. Most years it is dry. But when there is a lot of snow in the mountains, it floods. This happens every few years and is a normal, expected occurrence.

Some very large, very wealthy, very good friends of the administration own the lakebed and plant millions of dollars worth of crops there.

In 1983, these agribusinesses were paid millions of dollars not to grow crops in the lakebed.

But the lakebed was under 9 feet of water.

To rub salt into this taxpayer's wound, FEMA decided to give them $5.5 million in aid to drain the lakebed that they were being paid millions not to plant.

Dumb? Yes.

Corrupt? Perhaps.

A lot of things are fishy at FEMA.●

FEDERAL FUNDING FOR THE LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, the Reagan administration has consistently sought to eliminate Federal funding for the Legal Services Corporation [LSC]. I have supported the administration's efforts in this area due to my deep concern that as the size and expense of the LSC grew prior to President Reagan assuming office—LSC funding having increased by 350 percent between 1975 and 1981—so too did the abuses and excesses justified in the name of helping the poor.

Simply stated, I continue to be concerned that the LSC, its staff, and its grantees have, under the guise of providing needed legal assistance, consistently made use of Federal funds to pursue broad social and political objectives, often in direct violation of law and congressional intent.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that my opposition to the Legal Services Corporation in no way implies that I do not believe that all Americans—irrespective of their economic status—must enjoy equal access to justice. I question, however, the use of taxpayer's money for lobbying efforts initiated, in many instances, not in behalf of the poor, but for the larger purpose of social reform.

I, therefore, have consistently advocated that alternatives for the provision of legal services to the poor which exist be vigorously pursued. Private attorneys, for example, represent an underutilized resource for civil legal assistance; interest on lawyer trust accounts [IOLTA] programs, whereby revenues from pooled small escrow accounts placed in interest-bearing accounts are used to help the poor, represent another example of private sector initiatives which must be encouraged. Moreover, to supplement these private efforts, I support efforts by the administration to make funding available to States through the social services block grant to support legal aid programs for the poor.

In my view, these approaches warrant serious attention as a means of meeting the legal needs of the poor. However, as long as the Congress continues to appropriate Federal funding for the Legal Services Corporation, there will be little incentive to utilize the resources that are available in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues an article which appeared in the July 29, 1984, edition of the Los Angeles Times which highlights the type of private efforts which are effectively being utilized, without benefit of Federal funding, to provide needed legal services for the poor.

The article follows:

PRIVATE BAR OFFERING LEGAL AID TO POOR, FILLING GAP LEFT BY U.S. CUTBACKS

(By Philip Hager)

WASHINGTON.—An overflow crowd of 270 lawyers turned up at a forum here to offer to do free legal work for the poor. Another 50 were turned away for lack of room.

In Florida, more than $2 million was raised in a novel program—now being copied by California and 25 other states—in which legal aid groups were given funds from interest earned on pooled trust accounts held temporarily by attorneys for their clients.

And in Minnesota, 17 lawyers for the 3M Co., joined by their assistants and secretaries, volunteered to help a local legal services organization represent low-income persons in Social Security, consumer fraud, divorce and other cases.

OVER 350 PROGRAMS

In the wake of sharp cutbacks in federal legal services programs, more and more private attorneys are finding a wide variety of ways to help provide legal assistance to the poor. But critics contend that the response has fallen short of filling the void left by the federal government's retreat.

According to the American Bar Assn., lawyers are participating in more than 350 programs in the country that help indigents for free, compared to just 50 two years ago. The ABA says that more than 11 percent of the nation's 622,000 lawyers donate some time to work pro bono—short for the Latin term pro bono publico, which means for the good of the public.

The new trend is seen as "very positive" by Donald P. Bogard, president and chief executive officer of the Legal Services Corp., the federal agency that oversees the distribution of government funds to the more than 300 local legal services groups nationwide that offer free legal aid to the poor.

"There had been some degree of private involvement prior to the time (1965) when the federal government got into legal services," Bogard said. "But, once the federal government started pouring money into it, private bar initiative declined somewhat. . . . Now, since Congress cut the budget 25 percent, there's been a rebirth of desire by the private bar and a recognition of the necessity for its participation."

But Bogard, bar leaders and other lawyers involved in the programs are quick to emphasize that the renewed private effort can only help the federal government in meeting the legal needs of the poor, not replace the federal effort.

"We're just barely beginning to represent those people who haven't had a fair shake in life," said Gerald A. Regnier, a senior attorney for 3M, whose corporate legal department is one of a growing number participating in a pro bono program. "It would be horrible if anything happened to government legal services."

The Reagan Administration took office with the aim of abolishing the Legal Services Corp. Its position, as stated most recently by President Reagan in his fiscal 1985 budget message, is that the private bar, supported by federal aid delivered through the state-administered social services block-grant program, can meet the legal needs of the poor.

Congress has refused to abolish the program, but it trimmed the corporation's annual budget by one-fourth in 1981, from $321 million to $241 million. It has held the budget to that level ever since, forcing sharp cutbacks in staffs, facilities and caseloads.

Paul M. Igasaki, staff director of and ABA legal services project, says he doubts that the private bar, even with its new effort, is filling the gap left by federal aid cuts.

"Before the cutbacks, nobody was suggesting we met a majority of the needs," he said. "With a reduction, we dropped further behind. Now the question is whether we can make up for the cutbacks, much less meet increasing needs."

Last year, in a sample survey of 61 legal services programs, the Washington Council of Lawyers, a 13-year-old "public interest" bar association, concluded that the private bar's response to the federal aid cuts was inadequate to the need.

ONLY 44 PERCENT GET HELP

By the estimate of the local program directors, only 44 percent of the clients they referred to private attorneys actually got help. Private lawyers too often were unwilling or unable to take on sometimes complex and time-consuming cases involving food stamps, Medicare and other problems of the poor, the directors in the survey said.

However, council officials say that there have been recent signs of growing interest in pro bono work. The 270 lawyers who last month attended a council forum in Washington, where they were matched with available public service cases and projects, were more than double the number who attended a similar gathering in 1982.

"Pro bono work was out of vogue for awhile—not the thing to do," the council's Marsha T. Tucker said. "That trend seems to have been reversed."

Expanded efforts are reported elsewhere as well. In New York, for example, 30 major law firms and 20 of the city's largest corporate legal departments—employing more than 5,000 attorneys in all—announced last spring that each lawyer would provide 30 hours a year for public-service legal assistance. Similarly, in Los Angeles, 50 law firms are participating in a volunteer legal services project sponsored by the Los Angeles and Beverly Hills bar associations.

On another front, some legal services groups are beginning to benefit financially from a new fund-raising concept employed by a growing number of state bar groups. Twenty-seven states have adopted a program called Interest on Lawyer Trust Accounts—or IOLTA—and another 19 states are preparing to implement programs or studying them. The programs are modeled after similar plans that have been long employed in Canada and other countries.

Under this approach, lawyers take otherwise idle funds collected from their clients and pool them into interest-bearing accounts whose earnings support legal aid programs and, in some states, law school student loans and other programs as well.

Lawyers commonly hold such funds temporarily for eventual use to pay court filing fees, real estate closing costs and similar expenses. Individually, these funds are in nominal amounts and do not generate any interest, but, collectively, they can produce millions of dollars in income—and a new source of funds for legal programs.

Florida, the first state to adopt an IOLTA program, raised $2.7 million last year—an average of $603 for each participating lawyer. In California, an IOLTA program adopted last year is expected to produce up to $5 million annually, but implementation has been held up by a challenge, now before California's 4th District Court of Appeal in San Diego, to the mandatory nature of the plan.

"This program comes at a good time, with the federal commitment to legal services being substantially cut back," said Randall Berg, a director of the Florida Justice Institute, which monitors IOLTA programs nationwide. "These funds can allow a lot of programs to maintain current staffs or to keep open offices that otherwise would be closed. . . . It's also good public relations for lawyers; they get credit for doing something good."

A growing number of large corporations—3M, Boise Cascade Corp. and Aetna Life & Casualty, among others—are establishing their own pro bono programs in cooperation with the American Corporate Counsel Assn. The corporate effort recently drew a congratulatory letter from Reagan, who called such programs an example of the way the private sector can make a "significant contribution to making our world a better place."

Under the programs, volunteer lawyers from the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York (MONY) are providing legal services to the Fort Apache Youth Center in the South Bronx; Aetna's lawyers are advising the elderly in Hartford, Conn., and Boise Cascade attorneys are helping establish pro bono services in Idaho.

Under the 3M program, which was inaugurated shortly after federal legal service cutbacks were enacted, 17 lawyers are working with Southern Minnesota Regional Legal Services, whose $4-million annual budget was reduced to $3 million because of the federal budget cuts.

The corporate lawyers, each spending up to 20 hours in a six-month period, work on a wide range of cases—involving unemployment claims, landlord-tenant disputes or Social Security payments—and consult with attorneys in the regional legal services office who specialize in particular areas.

Attorney Regnier says the personal satisfaction gained in providing service, rather than "just writing a check," has been important to 3M employees participating in the program.

"Twenty-five percent of our legal staff signed up for it right away," he said. "Then our legal assistants joined in and our secretaries joined in, taking legal education courses so they could handle the new forms and other processing they would have to do. . . . The whole thing's voluntary—no quotas or anything like that. It's a way of making a contribution."

Thus far, the private bar has shown every indication its new efforts will remain largely voluntary. Lawyers have resisted proposals for mandatory pro bono programs in several states, including California, on the grounds no one should be forced to work without compensation.

A rare mandatory pro bono program is operating in El Paso, where lawyers are under a court order, obtained at the request of local bar members, to do free legal work in domestic relations cases.

MANDATORY IN FOUR STATES

Of the new programs in which interest earnings support legal aid services, only four states have made them mandatory. In one of those states, California, an Escondido lawyer and his client won a ruling from a trial court that the program must be voluntary—and that ruling is at issue in the case before the state 4th District Court of Appeal. The lawyer contended that the mandatory collection of interest from client trust fund accounts represented an unlawful taking of client property without due process.

"We've seen a higher level of interest in voluntary (pro bono) programs," said Lynn R. Sterman, assistant director of the ABA's Legal Services Division. "Most people seem more confortable with the voluntary concept."

The Legal Services Corp.'s Bogard notes that, although many private lawyers might have difficulty representing indigents in cases involving complex federal benefit programs, they could still take on divorce, custody, eviction, bankruptcy and other comparatively routine matters that make up nearly one-third of the 1.4 million cases handled by legal services offices annually.

"Philosophically, I think it's better if lawyers accept the responsibility on their own without making it mandatory," he said. "But if the need goes unabated—and Congress remains unwilling to quadruple our budget to meet the need—perhaps eventually we'll have to take a look at mandatory programs."●

THE MAKING OF A SELL-OUT

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues an excellent article which appeared in the Wall Street Journal on June 29 entitled "Industry's Efforts, Accord with Dole Led Rostenkowski to Relent on Capital Gains." The article focuses upon Chairman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI's historic opposition to an issue, the decrease of the capital gains holding period from 1 year to 6 months, which he suddenly allowed to be included in the Deficit Reduction Act recently signed by the President.

Representative ROSTENKOWSKI vehemently opposed the capital gains clause for many years. His ultimate consent was only after much research by the securities industry in order to prove the need for such legislation. One only wonders how the securities industry could become so convincing as to change the chairman's mind so completely. The securities industry's influence is just another example of the inclusion of special interest language in this bill. Indeed, this industry has contributed substantially to many political campaigns.

This bill is specifically tailored to benefit stockbrokers and the wealthy who heavily invest in the stockmarket. In fact, it has been estimated that 43 percent of the net tax cut would go to the taxpayer whose income exceeds $100,000. Those adversely effected are those whose income is under $50,000. According to a report by the Joint Committee on Taxation, if the shortening of the holding period is made effective for assets purchased after November 1, 1983, the revenue loss from the 6 month holding period is estimated at $140 million in 1985 and $251 million in 1986. Thus, it would contribute to the deficit rather than reduce it.

I urge my fellow colleagues to read the following insert. New support for the legislation has allowed it to become law, thereby furthering the maldistribution of the Tax Code.

INDUSTRY'S EFFORTS, ACCORD WITH DOLE LED ROSTENKOWSKI TO RELENT ON CAPITAL GAINS

(By Jeffrey H. Birnbaum)

WASHINGTON.—Rep. Beryl Anthony Jr. uncorked the champagne last weekend to celebrate an event most experts doubted would happen: the inclusion in Congress's tax bill of a measure that cuts the capital-gains holding period to six months from a year.

The Arkansas Democrat, who is a member of the Ways and Means Committee, had pushed hard for the proposal. But during the last three years, such efforts have routinely failed.

This year, like clockwork, the Republican-controlled Senate passed the measure. And, the expectation was that, as usual, Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D., Ill.) of the Ways and Means panel would refuse to accept it. But this year something different happened. In the wee hours of Saturday morning, as congressional negotiators made their final compromises on the bill's contents, Rep. Rostenkowski relented.

Why did Rep. Rostenkowski change his mind? The reason involves the persistent attentiveness of the securities industry, the laying aside of old grudges and a secret plege between the chairmen of the two tax-writing committees, Mr. Rostenkowski and Sen. Robert Dole (R., Kan.).

Rep. Rostenkowski had his first opportunity to smash the capital-gains proposal in 1981, and he took it with a vengeance. In that year, the proposal to reduce the holding period, which refers to the length of time an asset must be held before the gain from its sale is taxed at a special lower rate, was contained in a tax bill passed by the House in place of Mr. Rostenkowski's own bill. The measure was inspired by a Republican-backed tax-cut plan, but was supported by many Democrats, notably Rep. Kent Hance of Texas, a junior member of the Ways and Means committee.

"That irritated me a little bit," the chairman recalls about Mr. Hance's effort. And from his vantage point as head of the House negotiators reconciling the bill with the Senate version, Mr. Rostenkowski helped engineer the provision's defeat.

In 1982, the memory of the year-earlier defeat lingered. But an insult was added to the old injury, according to securities industry officials. During the conference that year, rumors reached the chairman that Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, a former chairman of the brokerage firm of Merrill Lynch & Co., had boasted that he was about to defeat Rep. Rostenkowski on the holding-period issue. The willful Mr. Rostenkowski isn't the kind of fellow who takes being beaten lightly. He adamantly refused to accept the provision and again it failed. A spokesman for Mr. Regan said the secretary "remembers no such thing."

INDUSTRY PERSISTENCE

For the past two years, the securities industry has worked overtime trying to make the chairman happy. Egged on by a skeptical Ways and Means staff, Rep. Rostenkowski wanted proof that reducing the period wasn't just a boon for brokers and a drain on U.S. tax coffers. He also wanted assurances that the liberals in his own party would support the change.

The Securities Industry Association, a trade group, showered the chairman with study after study purporting to show that cutting the holding period would stimulate investment and that the extra trading that would be caused by the provision would increase tax revenue. According to Rep. Anthony, in exchange for the promise that he wouldn't try to attach the measure to a House tax bill last year, Rep. Rostenkowski agreed to hold hearings to get more information on capital gains.

Rep. Anthony spearheaded the drive to prove to the chairman that support for the measure extended beyond the Republican party. Before introducing a bill to reduce the holding period, he was careful to have 75 Democratic co-sponsors. The number of House members who added their names to the bill eventually rose to more than 200.

The industry also contributed to Rep. Rostenkowski's campaign. Securities political action committees and individuals associated with the industry contributed at least $16,500 to Rep. Rostenkowski's campaign committees in 1983 and the first quarter of 1984. Edward O'Brien, president of the Securities Industry Association, said such contributions are "normal and proper" in Washington politics.

PRIVATE MEETING

The effort paid off. At a private meeting during tax negotiations last year, Rep. Rostenkowski gave Chairman Dole of the Senate Finance Committee a commitment that he would try to work something out on capital gains the next time around. Sen. Dole has been pushing for the provisions since 1982.

But Mr. Rostenkowski didn't leave the table this year without getting something in return. He insisted that the provision expire after three years just in case the predictions about revenue gains were wrong. He also made sure that the bill contained a number of measures that tighten up on securities taxation.

On top of that, he traded the investment period change for a tax break for people who don't have money to invest. The chairman made sure that the earned income credit, a refundable $500 credit for low-income families, would be raised to $550 a year.

"All parties walked away," Rep. Rostenkowski said, "with something they wanted.●

DEFERRED PAYMENT FOR PURCHASES BY EL SALVADOR

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, the Presidential determination of June 18, 1984, on the deferred payment for purchases by El Salvador under section 21(d) of the Arms Export Control Act is worthy of note by this House. The June 18 determination was not published until July 17, 1984, a time when many Members were away and the House was out of session.

The deferred payment mechanism permits the release of military services and materiel worth up to $32 million before Congress has authorized and appropriated the funds for the military assistance program for the Government of El Salvador. Presumptively, the President expects an ex post facto authorization and appropriation from Congress.

The situation in El Salvador is difficult. There are good reasons for questioning whether or not additional military services and materiel wil improve the situation there. However, even as we will consider this issue, I ask my colleagues to remember that the civilian death toll continues to mount in El Salvador and Mr. Duarte, who now heads the Government, had a similar role in 1980 through 1982 when 25,000 civilians were killed by the military and the death squads combined. This reality should give us all pause when we consider sending military materiel to the Government of Mr. Duarte.

The implications of the administration circumventing Congress when it comes to military aid and intervention should also give us pause. Any aid to El Salvador should be fully explored and considered by this House. That is our responsibility to our country.●

REMEMBERING THE LODZ GHETTO

HON. TOM LANTOS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, even in the darkness of the Holocaust the nightmare of the Lodz Ghetto stand out as an incomprehensible outrage against humanity.

At a time when strident voices of anti-Semitism are being more frequently heard on the American political landscape, it is critical that my colleagues in the Congress and the American people everywhere be reminded where unopposed anti-Semitism leads.

In 1939 more than 200,000 Polish Jews lived in the area that became the Lodz Ghetto, but at the end of World War II only some 10,000 had survived. On August 12, survivors of the Lodz Ghetto will gather in New York to remember. Many will see each other for the first time since they were resettled from the ghetto to other Nazi death camps.

Remembering will be made easier for the survivors of Lodz because of a remarkable collection of documents known as the Chronicle of the Lodz Ghetto, a daily record of life kept between 1941 and 1944 by the Jewish administration of the Ghetto. The Chronical is one of the most significant records of the Holocaust. The records were not a clandestine activity, as were the diaries that have survived the Warsaw Ghetto, but part of the official records. Since they were subject to German examination at any time, the references to the Germans are extremely guarded. Nevertheless, the wealth of detail and the accuracy of its reports is unparalleled.

The manuscripts were buried and recoverd after the war. Dr. Lucjan Dobroszycki prepared them for publication in Polish, and two of a projected five volumes appeared. After the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, Polish authorities discontinued further publication. An abridged version in English "The Chronicle of the Lodz Ghetto, 1941-1944," will be published by Yale University Press this fall. It is edited by Dr. Dobroszycki, who is now a historian at the YIVO Institute for Jewish Research in New York. Excerpts of the book were published in the New York Times Magazine on July 29.

Mr. Speaker, I place in the RECORD excerpts of the chronicle. May it ever serve as a reminder to us of the consequences of unopposed anti-Semitism.

The excerpts follow:

[From the New York Times Magazine, July 29, 1984]

EXCERPTS FROM THE CHRONICLE OF THE LODZ GHETTO

March 1, 1941: A review of the most important events in the ghetto in February. The number of people in the ghetto on the first day of February, 1941, totaled 153,995, and the number of rooms fit for human habitation was 49,964, that is, on the average, a room for every three people. The number of deaths in the month of February came to 1,069. Births totaled 52. The increase in criminal offenses has been so great that, in the month of February, 243 persons were arrested for theft, 13 for resisting orders, and 486 for various other offenses.

The most lurid incident in the area of criminology, one bespeaking a complete return to savagery, was the case disclosed on Feb. 23 by Precinct I of the Order Service. The remains of a child in a state of total decay were uncovered in the building at 42 Franciszkanska Street. The remains had been covered with rags. The doctor summoned to the scene could not determine the date of death precisely, but he did state that it had occurred at least two weeks ago. The child's father, Hersz Aragier, a batkhn [wedding entertainer] by profession, did not initially wish to disclose his reason for not burying his only son, a 7-year-old boy, but later confessed that he had done so in order to use his only son's bread and food coupons. The father was arrested. He is now in prison awaiting the sentence of the court.

By the second half of January, there was a noticeable improvement in the ghetto's coal supply, which, in the earlier parts of the winter, had constituted a calamity of the first order. The number of marriages performed by the rabbis since December has been decreasing—301 in December, 223 in January.

Monday, April 21, 1941: At 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Cwajga Blum, 41, a resident of 21 Limanowski Street, was shot to death next to the barbed wire at the end of Brzezinska Street. The victim was suffering from mental illness and had recently been released from the mental institution on Wesola Street. According to witnesses, the unfortunate woman had walked up to the barbed wire several times and requested that the sentries shoot her. The Order Service had already pulled her safely away from the barbed wire a couple of times. On the fateful day, the sentry had asked the mentally ill woman to dance in front of the barbed wire. After she had performed a little dance, the sentry shot her dead at nearly point-blank range.

Sunday, April 27, 1941: In view of the growing need for, and increasing shortage of lumber and fuel, all wooden market stalls and booths on squares and markets have been ordered demolished. Beginning today, street peddlers will place their goods directly on the ground or on chairs or tables brought from their homes. Only the stalls belonging to invalids escaped demolition.

Monday, August 4, 1941: "Men's collars taken in at the barber shop at 13 Lutomierska Street." A timely advertisement since it is now a common occurrence for collars to have become one or two sizes too large. Women with pleasant spherical shapes beyond the help of any [spa such as] Marienbad or Morszyn now have slender, girlish figures. Weight losses of 44 to 66 pounds, and sometimes even more, are now frequent.

Monday, December 1, 1941: Ghetto Population 163,623 on Dec. 1. This is the highest the ghetto's population has ever been.

January 1-5, 1942: In connection with the significant increase in the mortality rate, macabre lines of corpses awaiting burial have accumulated in the mortuary at the cemetery, as was the case at the beginning of last year. The number of the unburied now exceeds 100. With a view to eliminating this macabre backlog, the Burial Department has ordered the gravediggers to bury at least 80 corpses on the sixth of this month, keeping only the bodies brought in on that day in the mortuary. On that day, the gravediggers' sole concern will be burying bodies, and they will cease digging fresh graves. At present there are 80 gravediggers employed at the cemetery, a number that will be increased to 200. The workers' poor physical condition caused by the conditions of life in the ghetto, constitutes the most substantial impediment to intensive work in their sad trade.

The month of February, 1942: The resettlement action, begun last month and renewed in the last 10 days of February, is one of the most important events recorded in the Chronicle in February. In that period, the authorities demanded 10,000 people for resettlement from the ghetto. The deportation took place from the 22d to the 28th of February. Ten thousand people were deported from the ghetto in seven transports. A special commission was in charge of evaluating candidates for deportation. The list of deportees included prisoners serving sentences who were still in the ghetto. In February, people on relief also began to be deported.

Many widely varied stories appeared in the ghetto concerning the fate of the deportees. It was said, for example, that the deportees were set free in Koluszki; those who spread this unverified information claimed that this news had come from many deportees in Warsaw. Another rumor had it that the deportees were in Kola county and also in the vicinity of Brzesc Kujawski. We mention these stories only for the sake of accuracy in chronicling events, for in reality the ghetto has not received any precise information on which to base an idea as to the fate or even the whereabouts of the deportees. This mystery is depriving all the ghetto dwellers of sleep. The resettlement in February was significantly more severe than the one in January; most of the guards ordered the deportees to throw away their knapsacks and often even the bundles they were carrying by hand, including the food supplies they had taken with them for their journey into the unknown. [All of the deportees were taken to the camp of Chelmno (Kulmhof), where they were put to death.]

Friday, July 31, 1942: Elimination of the last vestiges of teaching. The day before yesterday, the Chairman ordered the suspension (until further notice) of all the lectures, talks, and readings still being given at the reading room for young people in Marysin [a section of the ghetto]. Thus was all continuing education in the ghetto eliminated. This order was initiated from without. B[ernard] O[strowski]

September 14, 1942: The period of Sept. 5-12, 1942 will leave indelible memories among that portion of the ghetto's population on whom fate smiles and who survive the war.

One week, eight days that seem an eternity!

Even now it is difficult to grasp what has occurred. An elemental force has passed through the ghetto and swept away some 15,000 (no one knows the exact number yet) and life appears to have resumed to its former course.

In his speech of Sept. 4, 1942 (at 4 P.M.), the Chairman announced that, by order of the authorities, about 25,000 Jews under the age of 10 and over 65 must be resettled out of the ghetto.

In accordance with the Chairman's proclamation on the fourth of this month, pedestrian traffic after 5 P.M. has been suspended until further notice since the fifth of this month, and it was then that the Jewish police's action to round up all persons subject to resettlement began. It was said that had this action encountered any difficulties or resistance, the German authorities would have stepped in.

In point of fact, the operation proceeded as follows: Block after block was surrounded by the Jewish police and then each building surrounded by a host of police and Jewish firemen and entered by a representative of the authorities (the Gestapo). A shot was fired as a signal to assemble, and then all the residents of a given building were assembled in the courtyard, arranged in two rows, and subjected to inspection by representatives of the authorities. In the meantime, the Jewish police were searching the apartments and bringing out anyone who had been hiding or people who were ill. In the smaller buildings, this operation often took only a few minutes. The deportees and those who were to remain were separated into two groups. Those selected for resettlement were sent by wagon to the assembly points.

To encourage the Jewish police and the firemen to conduct the operation conscientiously, promises that their closest relations would be spared had been made. Thus, their children were placed in a hospital and isolated from the rest of the population, and an isolation ward was set up in Marysin for those relations who were elderly or under special protection.

Escape attempts came to a bloody end. Anyone who attempted to save himself by fleeing and was spotted by the authorities had to pay for that attempt with his life. Because the operation proceeded so rapidly, the authorities gave no thought to the motives or causes for any particular act. At 38 Zgierska Street, an elderly woman from Sieradz did not understand if she had been ordered to go to the left or right and, instead of going to a wagon, she walked over to a group of "remainers." This the authorities interpreted as an escape attempt. This woman was shot to death on the spot.

Incidentally, the populace's strange reaction to the recent events is noteworthy. There is not the slightest doubt that this was a profound and terrible shock, and yet one must wonder at the indifference shown by those—apart from the ones who were not directly affected and who returned to normal life at once—from whom loved ones had been taken. It would seem that the events of recent days would have immersed the entire population of the ghetto in mourning for a long time to come, and yet, right after the incidents, and even during the resettlement action, the populace was obsessed with everyday concerns—getting bread, rations and so forth—and often went from immediate personal tragedy right back into daily life. Is this some sort of numbing of the nerves, an indifference, or a symptom of an illness that manifests itself in atrophied emotional reactions? After losing those nearest to them, people talk constantly about rations, potatoes, soup, etc.! It is beyond comprehension! Why this lack of warmth toward those they loved? Naturally, here and there, there are some mothers weeping in a corner for a child or children shipped from the ghetto, but, as a whole, the mood of the ghetto does not reflect last week's terrible ordeal.

Sad but true! [Jozef Zelkowicz]

Friday, July 2, 1943: Just beyond the outer limit of the ghetto, on Urzednicza Street at the barbed-wire fence, an amusement park has been set up, as it was last year. The main attraction, the only one visible, is a suspension-type merry-go-round. Every day the children of the ghetto make a pilgrimage to this corner and gaze longingly at the activities on the other side of the fence. It is mostly children too on the other side, who are romping about and climbing into the small hanging boats of the merry-go-round.

A radio amplifier broadcasts phonograph music. The ghetto children have never seen a carrousel and have seldom heard music. They listen and peer at a curious, alien world, where children live in a sort of never-never land. A merry-go-round, almost within reach; only the barbed wire keeps them away. Children are children on either side of the barbed wire—and yet they are not the same.

Monday, October 11, 1943: The Yom Kippur Sabbath was marked by dignity and solemnity. People walked silently through the streets in their Sunday best. Anyone able to do so at all wore his better clothing. This was particularly obvious with the children. No treppkis [clogs] were to be seen on the street, and no barefoot youths. The boys wore ironed shirts, the girls wore ironed dresses. And the adults too made a point of presenting a well-groomed appearance.

Once again, families could get together, as they had not been able to do in a long time. Parents took their children by the hand and went strolling; on this day, the work in the various workshops did not keep husband, wife and child apart. Now and then, one could even see a Jew openly carrying a seyfer toyre [Scroll of the Torah], without the slightest inhibition, through the streets of the ghetto to some house where divine service was being held.

Summing up the mood in homes and on the streets, one can say: On Yom Kippur in the year 1943, the ghetto has literally become a shtetl [village].

Tuesday, February 1, 1944: The pail of soup is carried up the two flights to the Loan Fund Office at 17 Zgierska Street. The women carrying it jostle against the edge of a step, and a bit of soup with diced potato is spilled on the staircase. The carriers ignore this minor accident and continue on their way. Behind them, a man is dragging himself up the stairs. He is here to pick up a loan at the office. His tired bones can scarcely support him, he trudges from one step to the next. And then he notices the spilled soup. His eyes fill with tears: soup on the stairs!

The man doesn't even stop to think. He pulls out his spoon—the essential tool that every ghetto dweller always has with him—he sits down on a step and spoons the soup off the filthy stone staircase. The serendipitous "additional soup" is more important to him at this moment than the measly few ghetto marks he is calling for at the office. The few drops of soup won't satisfy his hunger, but he can't help himself. Nor does he care to think that the stairs are filthy and that he might become ill. It's not a problem; he's already immune to typhoid fever.

Wednesday, June 7, 1944: The ghetto suffered a severe shock toward 6 o'clock this evening. The news spread like wildfire that a number of people had been arrested for possessing radios and for distributing transcripts of radio reports.

No one had known whether there were actual radio sets in the ghetto or whether information came in through the barbed-wire fence; but one thing is certain: The ghetto has always been filled with all sorts of rumors. Now it turns out that a few persons were daring enough to listen to the news right in the ghetto and to pass on what they had heard. [June 6 was D-day.]

Sunday, July 30, 1944: [The Daily Chronicle Bulletin, which is given in its entirety here, is the last entry to have been preserved and was most likely, in fact, the final entry. The next day, Monday, preparations were begun for deporting the inhabitants to Auschwitz-Birkenau, with the exception of about 700 people whom the Gettoverwaltung (the German Ghetto Administration) selected to clean the ghetto after the deportations and some 200 who successfully avoided the deportation action by hiding, as well as about 500 men and women sent to Sachsenhausen-Oranienburg and Ravensbriick. The Jewish community of Lodz was brought to an end.]

Weather: Temperature range: 72-100 degrees Fahrenheit; sunny, hot.

Deaths: One.

Births: None.

Arrests: Miscellaneous, two.

Brought to the Ghetto: One (man from outside the ghetto).

Total population: 68,561.

NEWS OF THE DAY

Lagiewnicka Street now has a different look. Traffic [outside the ghetto] is extraordinarily lively. One can see the war gradually approaching Litzmannstadt. The ghetto dweller peers curiously at the motor vehicles of various service branches as they speed through; for him, though, the crucial question remains: "What is there to eat?"

FOOD SUPPLY

If no flour arrives tomorrow, Monday, then the situation will be extremely critical. It is claimed that flour supplies in the ghetto will suffice for barely two or three more days.

THE WORLD-FAMOUS PECOS CANTALOUPE

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, different regions of the country have become renowned for their agricultural products: Florida oranges, California avocados, and Maine lobsters are but a few examples. And in west Texas, Mr. Speaker, you cannot go anywhere without hearing about the world-famous Pecos cantaloupe.

Melon cultivation began in Pecos, TX, in the 1880's, and it was Mr. Madison L. Todd and his wife Julia who first realized the potential of the Pecos cantaloupe. Noting that the combination of sun and soil imparted a distinctive flavor and texture, they soon began commercial production. In 1917, Mr. Todd and partner D.L. McKee grew 8 acres of melons, and sold the crop to the railroad dining cars of Texas and Pacific Railway. As a result, people from all over the country clamored for this magnificent melon, which enjoyed immense popularity and wide demand.

Pecos cantaloupes have been featured in the White House by Presidents Eisenhower and Johnson, and exclusive clubs in New York, Chicago, and Europe are regular clients of Pecos growers. Pecos cantaloupes begin to ripen in July and continue on the market until late October, and over 1,500 acres are now planted annually.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I take this opportunity to honor the Pecos cantaloupe and to announce to my colleagues that I will send each and every congressional office a box of this world-famous melon from the 16th Congressional District of Texas so that the Congress can enjoy them and share in our pride.

Thank you very much.●

STUDENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS: A COMMITMENT TO THE FUTURE

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, for years we have seen Congress and the various administrations pour billions upon billions of dollars into public education, often without any thought as to the benefits to be gained from this tremendous infusion of public funds.

Today, we have an administration that clearly is aiming to hold the line on this constant flow of Federal dollars into the public school systems of this country.

This appropriations bill for the Departments of Labor, HHS, and Education for the 1985 fiscal year, reflects not only this Congress' concerns about excessive spending, but also helps to focus our attention on an area of education that has been virtually ignored in this Nation's rush to educational excellence, the post-secondary segment of the educational system.

During the past 2 years, particularly, we have seen great movement in America's quest for educational excellence. Since the publication of the report, "Nation at Risk," by the National Commission on Excellence in Education, State after State has either initiated or is planning major reforms to upgrade the quality of its learning programs, its teacher preparation system, and its standards of acceptance for both students and teachers.

The result has been a major infusion of State and local dollars—not an outpouring of Federal funds—and a revitalization of America's public schools.

Just the other day, in fact, USA Today printed a State-by-State list of educational reforms in our kindergarten through 12th grade public school system.

I think it is worth noting some of these reforms. For example, in the past 14 months to 3 years, 43 States have initiated professional development programs for administrators and five State plans are pending.

Thrity-seven States have begun reforms of curricular and instructional materials or have action pending; 38 States have or will soon set higher standards for students as a requirement for graduation and for receiving diplomas; and 44 States have developed or have pending, wide-ranging plans for overall improvement of education in grades K through 12.

But, when it comes to improvements in the sphere of higher education, and that includes colleges and universities, as well as junior and community colleges, there has been less visible activity.

This appropriations bill reflects the Congress' concern for higher education. The major increases over both the 1984 fiscal year and the administration's budget request are in the area of postsecondary education.

I am especially pleased that this appropriations bill focuses on increasing funds for student financial aid programs and guaranteed student loans because the programs within these categories have enabled many thousands of young people to extend their educations and to make important contributions to this country.

Alfred North Whitehead, in his address to the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business in 1927, said that the task of the university was to join together the imagination of youth with the experience of the teaching staff.

> The way in which a university should function in the preparation for an intellectual career, such as modern business or one of the older professions, is by promoting the imaginative considerations of the various general principles underlying that career. . .
> Thus the proper function of a university is the imaginative acquisition of knowledge, apart from this importance of imagination, there is no reason why businessmen and other professional men, should not pick up their facts bit by bit as they want them for particular occasions.

And, if we accept Whitehead's premise, there is one thing our colleges and universities must have: students.

We all know how rapidly tuition at so many of this country's institutions of higher education is rising. We also know that while some students are eligible for grants-in-aid and scholarships from individual universities, there are many who fail to qualify for such aid—too many who never get the opportunity to extend their education or who have to drop out because, quite simply, they cannot afford the expense.

Just look at the numbers of young people who have been helped by the various assistance programs we are addressing in this appropriations measure: 810,000 students aided through the college work study program during the 1983–84 academic year; an estimated 880,000 loans through the direct loan program; average grants of $550 to 650,000 students during the just completed academic year in supplemental educational opportunity grants.

And, we should note, these figures do not include users of Pell grants and State student incentive grants—a matching fund program.

Then, of course, there is the guaranteed Student Loan Program. It started in 1966, when $73 million was borrowed through 89,000 loans. For fiscal year 1983, $6.7 billion was made available through 2.9 million loans.

The numbers themselves speak to the tremendous impact these programs have had on this country and its college-bound youth . . . and we cannot stop now.

We are all concerned about the future of our basic industries, our smokestack industries, if you will. In recent years, the companies in these industries have found it increasingly more difficult to attract and hold the best and the brightest of our graduates in science and mathematics. Just at the time when these industries, such as the steel industry, need the skilled and imaginative people to restructure their plants and modernize their operations so they can compete faborably in today's marketplace, those companies don't have enough of the talent.

At a time when employment in those basic industries is dwindling—such as the nearly 50-percent drop in steel industry employment over the past 10 years, we must provide assistance to those former workers so they can go to school to get the training and skills necessary for future employment.

The investment we, as a country, will make today for those who seek retraining, as well as for those just coming out of our high schools, will be repaid in the form of less unemployment benefits and more taxes when those men and women are back in America's work force.

If we say nothing else about this appropriations bill for the Departments of Labor, HHS and Education for fiscal year 1985, the students assistance programs for higher education stress the importance of the measure and its value to this country and to its youth.

A poem by R.L. Sharpe, a "Bag of Tools" shows us the way:

Isn't it strange
That princes and kings,
And clowns that caper
In sawdust rings,
And common people
Like you and me
Are builders for eternity?

Each is given a bag of tools,
A shapeless mass,
A book of rules;
And each must make—
Ere life is flown—
A stumbling block
Or a stepping stone.

This appropriations measure gives us a chance to help a lot of Americans achieve the education that will make them stepping stones instead of stumbling blocks.

Remember, the students we help today will be the ones who lead this country tomorrow.●

POSTAL SERVICE CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my serious concern with the actions of the U.S. Postal Service regarding its present negotiations with the postal unions. Prior to the conclusion of the current negotiations, the Postal Service has unilaterally implemented a reduction in pay and benefits for new hires.

It was the intent of the 1970 Postal Reorganization Act to require that no changes in wages and working conditions should be established before the Postal Service and the unions either reach agreement on a new contract or the impasse procedure has been fully exhausted. Unlike the private sector, their counterpart, the postal workers do not have the right to strike. Since postal employees have been forbidden from striking by the Postal Reorganization Act, I believe the same law precludes the postal management from unilaterally changing any working conditions until these negotiations have been completed.

It is my hope that the bargaining sessions will be carried out in good faith and all parties will follow the intent of the 1970 Postal Reorganization Act.●

TAX INCOME ESTIMATES

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, the Bureau of the Census released its report, "After Tax Money Income Estimates of Households: 1982," on July 12, 1984. The good news is that after-tax income rose by 1.7 percent in 1982. The rest of the report may be viewed as the bad news, or the bad news for the poor, minorities, senior citizens, and female headed families.

Elderly households lost 5.2 percent of their income.

The income of families headed by women declined by 3.8 percent. No wonder more children live in poverty.

Although the average income increase for white families was 1.7 percent, there was no significant increase for black or Hispanic families.

Families earning under $10,000 paid more in taxes after the Reagan tax cuts than before. This is not the case with people in higher brackets.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the facts speak for themselves. Those who had more, got more. Those who had less, are worse off.●

A SALUTE TO THE CHINESE OLYMPIC DELEGATION

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I extend to the Chinese Olympic Delegation a most hearty welcome to the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

This is truly an historic event, as this is the first time in 32 years that the Chinese Olympic Delegation is participating competitively in the Olympics. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the 225 Chinese athletes competing in the games and submit to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following resolution:

Whereas the Chinese Olympic Delegation to the XXIIIrd Olympiad in Los Angeles represents the first time in 32 years that they are participating in the Olympics competitively; and

Whereas the Chinese Olympic Delegation to the Los Angeles Olympic games totals 353 in number, including 225 athletes competing in 13 sports events; and

Whereas the 225 athletes in the Chinese Olympic Delegation are comprised of 138 males and 87 females who come from numerous provinces and cities thoughout the Peoples Republic of China; and

Whereas the Chinese Olympic Delegation was organized under the leadership of Li Meng Hua, Minister of State Commission of Physical Culture & Sports; Rong Gao Tang, Adviser of State Commission of Physical Culture & Sports; Lu Jin Dong, Vice Minister of State Commission of Physical Culture & Sports and Vice President of Chinese Olympic Committee; Chen Xian, Vice Minister of State Commission of Physical Culture & Sports, Vice President of Olympic Council of Asia, and Vice President of Chinese Olympic Committee; Huang Zhong, Adviser of State Commission of Physical Culture & Sports; Zhong Shi Tong, President of Chinese Olympic Committee; Li Fu Rong, Vice President of State Youth Federation; He Zhen Liang, International Olympic Committee Member; and

Whereas the 1984 Olympics' first gold medal winner—and his country's first-ever medal winner at the Summer Games—Xu Hai Feng, is a member of the Chinese Olympic Delegation; and

Whereas in recognition of their historical participation and the distinguished membership of the Chinese Olympic Delegation, a celebration banquet in their honor will be held in Los Angeles, California, on Wednesday, August 8, 1984, hosted by Mr. and Mrs. Winston Ko: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Nation's citizens extends its warmest congratulations to the Chinese Olympic Delegation.●

TRIBUTE TO TED PIEKARZ, SR.

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I call attention to a respected citizen from Illinois' Fifth Congressional District, which I am privileged to represent, and he is Ted Piekarz, Sr. Ted has consistently shown a deep concern for the betterment of life in the Southwest Side of Chicago, whether it be through his business or community participation.

Ted Piekarz is a longtime resident of the Southwest Side and his efforts to provide a helping hand to various organizations are to be complimented. Numerous civic, volunteer and charitable organizations have benefited from his participation.

I join with the residents of the Fifth Congressional District in paying tribute to Ted Piekarz, Sr. for his work in our behalf, and I would like to introduce into today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a newspaper article honoring Ted Piekarz, Sr. upon his receipt of the Ray McDonald Community Achievement Award.

PIEKARZ RECEIVES MCDONALD AWARD

(By Raymond G. Drish)

The Midway Sentinel proudly salutes Ted Piekarz, Sr., President of Steven's Finer Foods, as our monthly recipient of the Ray McDonald Community Achievement Award. This recognition is given to Ted for his dedication and service as a businessman to the community.

Piekarz was born on the North Side of Chicago, began his career in the supermarket business in 1931 working with his father Stanley who founded the pioneer business at 5738 S. Archer Ave. To keep up with a growing community, the store moved to 5734, then to 5750 and finally 5775 S. Archer Ave., the site of the current store, Steven's Finer Foods.

On a community level, Ted Piekarz has been actively involved in organizations and is dedicated to the betterment of the Southwest Side, notably, the Garfield Ridge Chamber of Commerce, Rhine Post V.F.W. #2729, American Legion, and the American Cancer Society. Over the years he has provided a helping hand to the various organizations in the 23rd Ward. Boy and girl scout troops, churches, schools, Little Leagues and Civic Associations have all benefited from his generosity.

Recently, Piekarz was named as a District Delegate to the Small Business Conference by State Representative Robert M. Terzich. The conference will allow small businessmen to directly present recommendations for strengthening the Illinois Economic Base to Governor Thompson and the General Assembly. Representative Terzich, in a recent article, praised Piekarz, stating, "I've known Ted since the late 1960's and have always found him to be an informed businessman, and concerned member of the community. He brings almost 50 years of small business experience to the conference and as I've learned in our discussions over the years, he has a keen insight into small business needs."

As a businessman, he has directed his attention to providing products and service of the highest quality, so that a feeling of pride is included in every transaction. The stability and future of the 23rd Ward is a prime consideration in determining the policy of his food store.

Residents of Burbank, Ted Piekarz and his wife Patricia, have five children and are members of St. Albert the Great Parish.

The staff of the Midway Sentinel wishes to thank Ted for his support throughout the years and honors him for his dedication and unselfishness towards the community of the 24rd Ward and the Southwest Side.●

TRIBUTE TO RICHARD GINSBURG

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform my colleagues that Richard Ginsburg, a lawyer and resident of Hillsboro, OR, has been awarded a very high honor in my State, the Oregon Human Development Corporation's Golden Aztec Award.

Anyone familiar with the work of American author John Steinbeck is aware of the migrant worker's plight in America. Though the Depression and the Dust Bowl are gone, numerous problems remain. Many of these laborers are Hispanics and are, hence, at a linguistic, cultural, and economic disadvantage. With the help of leaders like Richard Ginsburg, they are overcoming those obstacles.

His long commitment to the rights of migrant farm workers, both in Oregon and Colorado, exemplifies the kind of dedicated service to a minority group that the Golden Aztec Award recognizes each year in an individual.

Among his many achievements as chairman of the board of directors of the Housing Development Corp. of Washington County is Mr. Ginsburg's work on a 50-unit apartment building for migrant workers. I recall the long process he went through, amid red tape, to not only procure funds for the housing projects from the Farmer's Home Administration, but also the struggle to build support in the community for this critical housing development.

A former Peace Corps member, Mr. Ginsberg served in Paraguay from 1968 to 1972, an experience which had a tremendous influence on his life. After returning to the United States, he obtained a law degree from George Washington University National Law Center and joined the Colorado Rural Legal Services' farm worker program in La Junta, CO. He came to Oregon in 1978 to direct Oregon Legal Services' farm worker program. Last year, he opened a private legal practice focusing on immigration law.

Mr. Ginsburg's commitment to farm workers' needs, and his successes on their behalf, is a lesson to all of us, demonstrating what we can accomplish in our jobs and lives. I am delighted to salute the remarkable achievements of my friend, Richard Ginsburg, to congratulate him on winning the Golden Aztec Award, and to extend to him my best wishes for continued success.

Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues some vignettes from my home State, where despite economic hardship, the entrepreneurial spirit and volunteer action are alive and well.

During the Independence Day work period, I visited a number of communities in my congressional district along the Oregon coast. For these communities, tourism, timber, and fishing are the economic mainstays. Only one of the three—tourism—can be said to be in healthy condition. Rising interest rates have taken a sharp toll on timber production and mill employment is a time when the Nation is supposed to be enjoying a robust recovery. And Oregon's commercial fishing industry is reeling from the effects of a natural disaster known as El Nino. But adversity has not sapped the energy or the spirit of the communities I visited.

In hard-hit Tillamook, where unemployment is measured in double digits, people are excited over an invention called the CycloCrane. It is an experimental helium-filled airship with a rigid frame designed for applications in aerial logging and transportation. Last year, severe winds destroyed the first prototype of the CycloCrane at its moorings, before flight testing could begin. Since then, inventors Art Crimmins and Don Doolittle have built another airship from scratch. Their determination has been an inspiration to the community. It was a delight for me to share in the enthusiasm of the inventors and more than 200 townspeople as the second prototype of the CycloCrane was ceremoniously rolled out from its hangar for public viewing.

In Nahalem and Wheeler, two communities a few miles north of Tillamook on the Nehalem River estuary, I joined local officials in dedicating a new four-lane bridge over Nehalem Bay. The new bridge replaces a narrow two-lane span constructed in 1922 and eliminates one of the most dangerous highway bottlenecks on the Oregon coast. Its opening is a lasting testament to the determination of community leaders in Nehalem, Wheeler, and Manzanita, who were on hand to celebrate the product of 6 years of planning and 2 years of construction work.

In Depoe Bay, one of the most picturesque of Oregon's coastal fishing towns, volunteers led by restaurant owner Vaughn Taunton have restored a natural salmon run with assistance from the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife. In helping to rebuild Oregon's declining salmon stocks, Vaughn Taunton and his friends—city council member Ray Osuna, Fire Chief Jay Williams, the employees of the Depoe Bay water treatment plant, and others—deserve much praise, and I was pleased to commend them, on behalf of all of the Oregonians I represent, for their grassroots project. Their greatest reward, however, is yet to come. That's when they'll see the smolts they released from their homemade hatchery return to Depoe Bay as fully grown salmon and go up the fish ladder to spawn.

In Lincoln City, voluntarism is being practiced with intelligence, human understanding, and efficiency by Jimmie Noxon and Phyllis Sumner, who operate a tiny emergency food operation. Their food bank helped over 1,000 people last year, and so far this year they've distributed food to 880 people. Lincoln City merchants contribute to the food bank. I can testify that their donations are being put to optimum use. Thanks Jimmie and Phyllis, in feeding the bodies and spirits of those in real need.

Along the Yaquina Bay waterfront in Newport, where dwindling catches of salmon, shrimp, and practically everything else have made it a buyer's market for commercial fishing boats, I met Derek Lamson, an ex-fisherman. Though he couldn't survive in the fishing business, neither could he stand to leave the coast. So he's gone into the coffee business—by the cup and by the pound—on the city's bay front. I was much impressed by his enterprising spirit and his wit. He shared with me a poem he'd written, published in the June edition of the North Coast Times Eagle, and I ask that it be reprinted here.

A Goof

(By Derek Lamson)

For Tom McCall

I have heard tell of melons
In foreign parts dragged to ruin, hot-house
Vines gone crazy with ambition,
Fertilizer, sun-stroke; the dust and smoke
Of their passage, the numbed
Villagers in their ruined homes
The inevitable, sickening, fruity Explosions
Far out on the desert.

But Oregon is mild:
Here many plants live
Entirely outdoors, un-clothed, without shoes
Even in winter. We trust them
With the kids (even around water);
And they traipse the hills companionably
With our great statesmen,
Visionaries, and poets.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. ROBERT E. WISE, JR.

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, this morning, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Economic Development, Ms. Bonnie Newman, visited my congressional district. In specific, she visited Jackson County, WV, with a look at adjoining Mason County as well. I have been working with her and the Department of Commerce to improve the business climate in these two counties in West Virginia's Third Congressional District, and considered her gracious offer to visit us as an opportunity to improve the economic conditions in my district and State. For this reason, I felt it my responsibility to accompany her.

Due to this fact, I missed the first six rollcall votes today. I was not present during rollcalls No. 343, final passage of H.R. 5399/intelligence authorization; No. 344, a motion to limit debate on amendments to H.R. 5973/Department of the Interior appropriations; No. 345, an amendment by Mr. RATCHFORD to the amendment by Mr. CONTE to H.R. 5973; No. 346, an amendment by Mr. CONTE to H.R. 5973; No. 347, an amendment by Mr. MCDADE to H.R. 5973; and No. 348, final passage of H.R. 5973/Department of the Interior appropriations.

Had I been present and voting, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall 343, "aye" on rollcall 344, "aye" on rollcall 345, "yes" on rollcall 346, "aye" on rollcall 347, and "aye" on rollcall 348.●

TAX INEQUITIES

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, today we see a pattern of taxation in our country which benefits those who have, while penalizing those who have not. People in my district are angry about this inequity.

Today, I am introducing legislation which addresses the fact that 90,000 of our corporations paid no taxes at all. The way in which this happened was by the use of consolidated returns. A company that had a tax liability would merge with, or buy, a company with credits and deductions to offset the liability. My bill would end this practice for the largest companies, for example, those with over $250 million in gross annual receipts which also control a large (10 percent or more) share of any product market.

It is my hope that my colleagues who believe in tax equity will support this measure to eliminate inappropriate tax breaks to large oligopolistic corporations.●

SOVIETS SLANDER REPRESENTATIVE GILMAN

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention another example of the Soviet Union's disinformation in their blatant disregard for human rights.

Last week, at the Universal Postal Union [UPI] Congress in Hamburg, Germany, the Soviet Union's delegation denied the fact that has been so well documented by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee that they have been interfering with mail coming into their country.

In their denial, the Soviets twisted the facts, contending that it was the United States that has been interfering with the mail between our two countries.

I would have ignored these ridiculous assertions if it had not been that they also attacked my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] who has been conducting an extensive investigation of the interruption of Soviet mail in which I have participated.

The Soviet statement is a rash attempt to deflect the real issue; the House Post Office Committee having accumulated over 2,500 exhibits showing a regular pattern of interception of the international mails. This mail interruption has not just affected dissidents, but also nonpolitical communications between family members and friends. It was recently disclosed by a U.S. witness that she had not known for 7 years that her father had died in Russia * * * her mail having been intercepted by the KGB.

This is indeed a broader and much more extensive problem than just a United States-Soviet issue. Those 2,500 exhibts came not just from the United States, but from 17 other free world countries as well. It is indeed a worldwide issue.

The Soviets are not just violating the UPU regulations but are violating their own constitution and several other international treaties, including:

1. The International Declaration of Human Rights;

2. The Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (Helsinki accords); and

3. The articles of the construction of the Universal Postal Union.

I consider it an outrage that the Soviet delegation in defense of these violations would attack someone as fine and highly regarded as our distinguished representative from New York, and I am pleased that our U.S. delegation to the UPU responded to these charges in a firm and prompt manner, stating:

Such false and slanderous statements must be viewed as an attempt to avoid providing specific answers to the problems cited by several delegations in their mail relations with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker, in order to provide my colleagues with a better perspective of this entire issue, I request that the following papers be inserted at this point in the RECORD: The Postmaster General's "Statement to the UPU," dated July 2, 1984; Representative GILMAN'S "Statement to the UPU," dated July 2, 1984; the "Soviet's Reply," dated July 18, 1984; the "Response by the U.S. Delegation," dated July 26, 1984; and the "UPU Resolutions" adopted at the Universal Postal Union Congress designed to make it more difficult for the Soviet Union to interfere with the international mails:

REMARKS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL WILLIAM F. BOLGER TO THE XIX CONGRESS OF THE UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION HAMBURG, PRG, JULY 2, 1984

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me this opportunity to address this distinguished assembly.

First, I would like to express my deep appreciation to the Deutsche Bundespost for the dedication and skill that has gone into organizing this Congress. The delegates in this hall represent a multitude of different cultures. But in the warm and friendly welcome we have received in Hamburg, we have all been made to feel very much at home. Further, in its attention to detail, the Bundespost has created an atmosphere highly conducive to the efficient conduct of our business, making the difficult work of the Congress that much easier.

As the delegates have been informed, the United States has offered to host the 20th UPU Congress, in 1989. I hope the delegates to this Congress will see fit to bestow that honor upon us, and if they do, it is my hope that my administration will be able to meet its responsibilities as well as our German hosts have at this Congress.

I also wish, Mr. Ascandoni, to applaud you for your fair, efficient and informed chairmanship of Committee 3. The work of the General Committee is extremely important, and under your leadership, I am certain it will produce good results.

As has been noted already, this is the first time a UPU Congress has taken place in the native land of the brilliant German postal reformer, Heinrich von Stephan, whose accomplishments survive in all the work we perform today.

The principle to which Von Stephan dedicated this life a century ago remains firmly established in the Preamble of the Constitution of the UPU, which speaks of "developing communications between peoples." The phrase is simple, but its meaning is profound. To our users everywhere, the mails represent access to freely available, unrestricted, and affordable communication with family, friends, and correspondents of one's choosing across national boundaries. Maintaining and expanding this freedom of postal communication is thus our major responsibility, and to the extent that our work contributes to understanding between peoples, it also adds to peaceful relations between nations and global progress. We members of UPU thus have a heavy and important responsibility.

On the whole, we have met our responsibility well, and in general, the level of confidence that international mail users have in our service is high.

As was noted at the 2-day colloquium last week, however, our ability to retain this confidence requires that we continue to provide reliable, reasonably priced service that gets international mail to its destinations in reasonable time.

I applaud the holding of that colloquium and the spirit of the discussions that took place. I understand great unity of purpose and great desire to make service improvements were expressed.

Indeed, we can take pride in the progress we have made since the Rio de Janiero Congress. Since 1979, a number of postal services, including my own have initiated or assimilated some startling new technological advances into their operating systems—advances such as optical-character readers and sorters and automated retail systems.

In addition, we have witnessed good growth in the number of administrations involved in INTELPOST, the international facsimile mail service, and a positive boom in international high-speed mail, which we in the United states call Express Mail International.

I think we can also be gratified in the growth and effectiveness of postal technical assistance, both that conducted through UPU and through bilateral or other multilateral mechanisms. I believe we have all come to appreciate fully how important it is, therefore, for the larger administrations to share their expertise with those that have less experience. In this, too, I was pleased with the attention this subject received at last week's colloquium.

On several fronts—with the aid of new technology . . . practical technical cooperation programs . . . and new and innovative services—we have continued our advance toward our common goal—a truly universal, single postal territory, the dream of Heinrich von Stephan and the other founders of UPU.

But our progress is far from complete, and I regret to say some highly negative developments urgently call out for our mutual attention. These developments go to the very essence of the UPU.

As I mentioned earlier, the strength of the worldwide postal system derives from the confidence people have in their ability to communicate across national boundaries without interference. This confidence has not been easily or rapidly built. It has developed slowly over the decades, overcoming the resistance caused by international tensions and conflicts. When this precious resource of confidence is undermined by actions of any member, we all suffer. As a case in point, postal practices of the Soviet Union in recent years have raised questions in the minds of mailers from the United States and other western countries about the integrity of our universal system.

This is a matter that my colleagues and I have pursued bilaterally with the Soviet Union for at least a decade now—but without significant improvements. It is, therefore, a matter that deserves the attention of the world's postal experts.

The basis of the problem is a systematic failure of the Soviet authorities to deliver mail addressed to certain citizens within their country. The pattern that has developed over the years is so persistent that it cannot be explained away as resulting from ordinary mistakes innocently made by postal workers in the course of their work—the kind of mistakes that occasionally occur in every administration. In our administration, we have received thousands of complaints regarding letters and parcels not being delivered to their addresses in the Soviet Union. Likewise, other administrations inform us that this pattern is common, too, with mail sent from their citizens.

Often, this mail is returned as undeliverable when, in fact, it is deliverable. Often, mail is reported on advice-of-delivery forms or through other inquiries as having been delivered when independent information has established that it has not been. And there have been innumerable seizures of letters and parcels that appear not to violate any internal, published prohibitions.

We have suffered these violations of the spirit of UPU in silence in this body for years in hopes that improvements would occur. We see no evidence, however, that they have.

I, therefore, urge the members of this body to investigate for yourselves the problems your citizens may have had with mail to the Soviet Union.

Further, we would support any impartial effort by the Universal Postal Union to look into this question. Such an effort would be justified by the extraordinary and serious nature of this matter.

For years, this form of interference and disruption of the mails has been occurring. We cannot ignore it any longer, for if continued it could undo the good reputation this organiztion has developed over the last 110 years.

For its part, the U.S. Postal Service remains willing to try to get at solutions to this problem by working bilaterally. But since this is a problem that does not affect only my administration, I would hope that all who are concerned with the future of UPU will also address this problem at its origin.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

STATEMENT BY HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN, MEMBER OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (22D DISTRICT, NEW YORK) AT THE UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION CONGRESS, HAMBURG, GERMANY, JULY 2, 1984

Distinguished delegates to the XIXth Congress of the Universal Postal Union:

I welcome and appreciate the opportunity for distributing my remarks to the delegates of the member nations gathered here at the 19th Congress of the Universal Postal Union.

I thank you for your warm and generous reception. As a senior member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Post Office Committee of the U.S. Congress, I want to assure you that we will do all that we can to cooperate with the U.P.U. member nations in maintaining a high level of efficiency in the swift and unhampered conveyance of the international mails.

As part of my congressional duties on the Post Office Subcommittee on Investigations, over the past year, I have been looking into complaints from more than 100 ethnic, religious, professional and cultural groups in the United States, many of whom are former residents of the Soviet Union and Eastern Bloc countries, who have filed complaints with our committee with regard to the interference of their mail by the Soviet Government. They complained of mail being missing, looted, returned without just cause and a myriad of other recorded complaints.

Our Postal Subcommittee has gathered over 2,400 exhibits from hundreds of sources throughout the United States and from citizens of 23 other countries who have complained about the interference by the Soviets with their international mail.

Our Congressional Subcommittee on Post Operations conducted formal hearings during the past year in three major metropolitan areas—in Chicago, New York and Washington—taking testimony from dozens of witnesses and representatives of many groups.

This past month, the House of Representatives (by a substantial vote of 403 to 0) and the U.S. Senate, adopted our committee's resolution, calling upon the UPU to conduct a full investigation of mail interference by the Soviet Union and to consider, if warranted, appropriate sanctions.

Our committee has encountered hundreds of distressed mailers who have complained of the violation of their mail by the Soviet's mail authorities. On a number of occasions, U.S. Postmaster General William Bolger, and our U.S. diplomatic officials have brought these problems to the attention of the postal representatives of the Soviet Union, without any responsive corrective action by them. We have also pursued this problem through diplomatic channels.

It is the sense of the U.S. Congress, that it is now incumbent upon the Universal Postal Union to fulfill its responsibilities in assuring the free flow of international mail by fully investigating and promptly, resolving these mail interference problems. Our postal congressional committee stands ready to assist you in any way we can. The hopes and aspirations of thousands of our citizens, separated and cut off from their loved ones—from their families and friends—by these cruel mail restrictions, are with you.

We cannot overemphasize the frustration and anxiety that our countrymen experience as a result of the deprivation of their right to communicate.

If you believe, as we believe, that the UPU should assume responsible world leadership in improving the "development of communications between peoples," as set forth in the Preamble of the Universal Postal Union Constitution, then we urge you act expeditiously and effectively on this issue.

Thank you.

STATEMENT BY THE DELEGATIONS OF THE USSR, THE UKRAINE AND BYELORUSSIA

The delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic request the distribution of the following statement as a Congress document:

The delegations of the USSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the Byelorussian SSR to the 19th UPU Congress strongly protest against the distribution of the slanderous and anti-Soviet statement released by the U.S. delegation, which is neither a credit to that delegation nor to the country which it represents.

It is no secret that there has been an increasing tendency on the part of the present U.S. administration to spread false accusations against the USSR and its postal services. And this can only be described as interference in the internal affairs of the Soviet Union, an unworthy attempt to bring confrontation and political antagonism into UPU activities and an attempt to disrupt the normal deliberations of this Congress.

We condemn the hostile provocatory activities of Mr. B. GILMAN, Member of the United States House of Representatives, which for many years have been aimed at disrupting normal mail traffic between the United States and the USSR. Our delegations decisively reject the insinuations contained in his statement and in the United States Congress decision. Besides, the very appearance of this so-called representative, who is even not a member of the United States delegation, at meetings of the Universal Postal Congress is in itself completely irregular.

Member countries of the UPU are aware of many facts which bear evidence of obstruction by the United States Administration of normal postal exchanges with the Socialist countries, of systematic delaying of mails and Soviet printed matter and of refusal to handle, deliver, or allow free transit to such mails.

These actions of the United States representatives, including those at this UPU Congress, are not accidental.

The Declaration of the Summit Meeting of the CMEA member countries, signed in Moscow on June 14, 1984, states that international tension has grown considerably as the result of the aggressive course maintained by imperialism, above all by U.S. imperialism, aimed at confrontation, and of that country's attempts to interfere in the internal affairs of others and to suppress the national sovereignty of States. The U.S. ruling circles break agreements and resort to different types of pressure, embargos and "sanctions" with regard to those countries which refuse their demands and dictates.

Not only many countries, but also a certain number of international organizations of the UN system have themselves experienced such demands and dictates.

These days, the United States of America loudly proclaims its commitment to human rights, when it concerns other countries and the Soviet Union, in particular.

The general secretary of the central committee of the Communist Party and the chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, K Chernenko, recently stated with regard to this question: "Those who try to give us advice on human rights only make us smile ironically; we have won our right to solve our own problems in the greatest of all revolutions, fought invaders and aggressors hard to defend it and we will allow no one to interfere in our affairs."

In the United States of America itself, human rights are constantly grossly trampled upon, racial discrimination penetrates the whole of American society, and millions of Americans are deprived of the very means of existence. Everyone is aware of the widespread practice of suppressing dissidents by a comprehensive computerized supervision of the American population, by putting on file millions of citizens from the day of their birth to their death, by using false witnesses in fabricated court proceedings, etc.

The aggressive military policy of the United States of America is a serious threat to peace and a flagrant violation of the fundamental rights of peoples, including the right of each nation to determine its own destiny. An evident proof of this imperialistic policy is the U.S. policy in Central America, the Middle East, and Southern Africa, and its political and material support of reactionary regimes. Contrary to the wishes of many peoples, the United States of America is deploying in Europe Pershing-2 and cruise missiles providing rocket and nuclear support for an adventurous ideological concept—a crusade against the USSR.

The U.S. administration is attempting to carry its policy, which is a danger to the cause of peace and international cooperation, into the activities of the Universal Postal Union and this must be condemned by all those present here.

As regards the USSR, its postal administration fully supports the activities of the union and takes an active and constructive part in the work of the union and its bodies. As is well known, the USSR, greatly contributes to the improvement of international postal traffic and to implementation of the UPU Acts, thus contributing to the strengthening of international cooperation and peace.

U.S. RESPONSE

United States submitted following statement July 26 refuting Soviet allegations contained reftel. U.S. statement will be issued as a Congress document. Statement coordinated between USDEL and USIA BPAO in Hamburg.

Begin text:

STATEMENT OF U.S. DELEGATION

The U.S. delegation rejects the erroneous and rhetorical statement attacking the U.S. Government and a Member of the U.S. Congress by name in the statement issued by the delegations of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Ukraine, and Byelorussia in Congress document No. 99. Such false and slanderous statement must be viewed as an attempt to avoid providing specific answers to the problems cited by several delegations in their mail relations with the Soviet Union during the course of this Congress. The Soviet violations with the mails adversely affects the lives of many individuals in the Soviet Union, as well as those trying to communicate with them.

The statement contained in Document 99 injects irrelevant, political issues into the technical forum of the Universal Postal Union. We deeply regret the attempt by these delegations to use this forum to spread false accusations and propaganda against the United States and other countries.

The foreign policy of the United States is based on two basic goals: a safer world and a world in which individual rights can be respected and precious values may flourish. The American concept of peace is more than an absence of war. We favor economic growth and individual liberty in a world of peace.

Access to a free flow of communications is a basic right embodied in a number of internationally-accepted agreements. The systematic exclusion of specific persons from international mail service violates the constitution, general regulations, and protocols of the Universal Postal Union. Nondelivery of mail which is deliverable as addressed and which does not contain prohibited articles violates the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Helsinki Final Acts of the conference on security and cooperation in Europe. This congress has taken positive steps in requiring Members to clarify the nature of their internal prohibitions on mail delivery and designating the person authorized to sign the advice of delivery forms.

Our desire is that the Soviet Union honor its international obligations through deeds not words. Full compliance by the Soviet Union with the principles of the UPU acts and the Hamburg Declaration adopted by this congress will help strengthen confidence in the free flow of communication and build mutual understanding.

UPU ACTION ON U.S. RESOLUTIONS

1. Calls for all countries to publish lists of prohibited items in clear and concise language. 76-12-13 (abstentions), U.S. Resolution

2. Calls upon all countries to list reasons for seizure of any packages and to describe all offending items. 62-32-12 (abstentions), U.S. Resolution

3. Provides that priority be given to obtaining the actual signature of the addressee on the "Advice of Delivery Form" on all registered mail. 39-17, U.S. Resolution

4. Provides that the addressees signature be obtained by postal authorities in instances when an inquiry is filed regarding failure of delivery. 77-1, U.S. Resolution

5. Provides that when delivery of mail is specified to an individual, that individual's signature must be obtained 64-0, Sweden Resolution●

REAFFIRMING THE U.S. COMMITMENT TO INTERNATIONAL POPULATION AND FAMILY PLANNING ASSISTANCE

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, with 11 other Members of the House, a concurrent resolution to reaffirm the U.S. commitment to international population and family planning assistance.

In a few days the United Nation's Conference on Population will be held in Mexico City. Many of us in the Congress are deeply disturbed by the population statement which has been prepared for this Conference by the administration, without consulting with the Congress, that markedly rewrites U.S. population policy. For the past two decades the Congress has shown strong bipartisan leadership in supporting a balanced international voluntary population and family planning program. Previous Republican and Democratic administrations have strongly supported this commitment to family planning and have exercised important leadership in promoting this important issue in international forums.

The Congress has been generous in its provision of resources for multilateral and bilateral population programs, because it has long recognized that continued high rates of population growth significantly place burdens on economies unable to provide sufficient goods and services for the growing population. Recently the National Academy of Sciences released another study which showed that family planning programs have a significant independent effect over and above socio-economic factors on fertility decline in developing nations.

Existing U.S. law clearly prohibits the use of U.S. international population assistance directly supporting abortions or abortion-related activities. But the latest administration policy paper would now add a new restriction eliminating funds for family planning to nongovernmental organizations that provide abortion or abortion-related activities or promote abortion with their own funds.

The Agency for International Development has repeatedly reported to the Congress that current prohibitions on using U.S. funds to pay for abortions, biomedical research on abortion, or lobbying for abortion as a method of family planning have been carefully adhered to by those receiving U.S. population assistance. Thus no violations of U.S. law have provoked this new restriction on population assistance.

This threat, coupled with the paper's shift in philosophy that the relationship between population growth and economic development is not a negative one, has confused many of our allies and friends. Some fear that the United States, under this administration, will step away from its support for voluntary family planning and population research and may eventually deny assistance to developing countries who seek safe and effective methods of family planning for their citizens. The House Foreign Affairs Committee today held a hearing on this issue, but regrettably Ambassador Buckley, who is to head the delegation to Mexico, refused to participate or respond to questions from the committee.

That is why we are introducing this bipartisan resolution today to demonstrate that at least in the Congress there has been no change in our strong support for voluntary family planning programs—as can be seen by the passage just a few weeks ago of the 1984 International Security and Development Cooperation Act with its strong emphasis on population assistance through multilateral, bilateral, and private voluntary organizations.

The July 13, 1984, policy statement released by AID is a major departure from congressional intent, authorization, and current practice, and we regret its release and the confusion it has caused about existing U.S. law and policy.●

IT IS UP TO CONGRESS TO STOP THE ARMS RACE

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 2, 1984

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, 12 years ago today, the Senate agreed to ratification of the ABM Treaty.

This agreement, negotiated by President Nixon in the SALT I talks, was a giant leap forward in the effort for arms control.

It halted an arms race in antiballistic missiles before it started, and it saved America from a new danger and a tremendous expense.

In the best tradition of American foreign policy, the ABM Treaty received bipartisan support from a broad range of American statesmen.

But Ronald Reagan opposed the SALT I accords. Indeed, Ronald Reagan has opposed every arms control treaty since President Kennedy's administration.

Ronald Reagan has done more than any American to destroy the bipartisan consensus for arms control.

And since he became President, Ronald Reagan has not reached a single agreement with the Soviets on nuclear arms control.

Rather, President Reagan is moving backward on arms control. His Star Wars program is threatening to destroy the ABM Treaty.

And right now, we and the Soviets are bungling a perfect opportunity to stop an antisatellite arms race in outer space before it starts.

Mr. Speaker, President Reagan is allergic to arms control. It is up to Congress to stop the arms race before it is too late.●

SENATE—Friday, August 3, 1984

(Legislative day of Monday, July 30, 1984)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Sovereign God, Lord of history, we thank Thee for our Republic. It did not become great and strong in spite of its political system but because of it. More than 200 years of operation has proved there is no better way to run a country. Thank Thee for our democracy.

Forgive the criticism in the private sector which seems not to understand how democracy works, expecting it to be efficient like a dictatorship. We are amazed dear God, considering the thousands of agendas—international, national, regional, State, local, and personal which converge upon this body—that it works at all. Forgive the cynicism generated by failure to appreciate the genius of a system which attempts to respond to massive demands, many of which are conflicting.

As the usual pressure and tension build in the days approaching a long recess, help the Senators to be patient with each other and grant special grace and wisdom for productive final days. In the name of Him who never hurried despite relentless opposition and resistance. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

THE CHAPLAIN'S PRAYER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, once again my congratulations to the Chaplain on his timely prayer. Not infrequently, I wonder, at the end of the prayer, what the Chaplain has read and what article may have assigned to the private sector a misunderstanding of the democratic process. But I want to read that.

I have come to think of the Chaplain's prayers on occasion, which are all good, as God's op-ed page, and an opportunity to comment, in an appropriate, graceful, and attractive way, on matters of current interest to the Senate and to the country. I do not think I have ever heard a clergyman do that before and I am delighted. I thank the Chaplain for his timely words.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, today will probably not be a long day. After the special order and the time for morning business, we will be back on the motion to waive section 303 of the Budget Act. I do not know whether we can get some other things in or not, since we have a cloture motion set for Monday on that motion. If we can find some other matter that we can do, it might be a useful engagement of our time. One that comes to mind, offhand, is the women's pension equity bill. I will discuss that with the minority leader. I mentioned it on last evening. If we can clear that, I would like to take it up for a few moments and try to pass it.

There are one or two items on the Executive Calendar that I would particularly like to address today that I believe and I hope are noncontroversial. If we can do that, I would like to do that.

I would not anticipate that the Senate will be in session past midafternoon, unless there are reasons for us to do otherwise.

Mr. President, there is one other matter that I would call the attention of Senators to, and that is that unless we work out a different time, which I am willing to do, the cloture vote will occur 1 hour after we convene and after the establishment of a quorum on Monday. Since Mondays are sometimes difficult days for Senators to return from their States and other locations, I will discuss with the minority leader a convening time on Monday or perhaps also a mutually convenient time for the cloture vote.

Mr. President, that is all I have this morning. I see no other Senator seeking time. I yield the balance of my time to the minority leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURKOWSKI). The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader. I do not have any need for time at this point, either.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

Mr. BYRD. I yield back my time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to suggest the absence of a quorum without it charging against the time allocated to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], on a special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I make that suggestion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the minority leader has indicated to me that he feels it is possible to go to a nomination on the Executive Calendar today that is particularly important to me since I come from the Tennessee Valley area; that is, the nomination of John B. Waters, to be a Director of the TVA, Calendar Order No. 930.

Can I confirm that the minority leader is prepared for me to go into executive session for the purpose of considering that nomination?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the answer is yes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am most grateful to the minority leader, and I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering that nomination.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The bill clerk read the nomination of John B. Waters, of Tennessee, to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is a pleasant duty to which I now turn, the consideration of the President's nominee for the vacancy on the Tennessee Valley Authority Board of Directors,

Mr. John B. Waters of Sevierville, TN. I say that not only out of interest and concern for the future of TVA, but also due to the fact that Mr. Waters is a close friend of long standing.

Johnny Waters is no stranger to this body, having been before it 15 years ago for consideration as a nominee to the Appalachian Regional Commission, a post at which he served for 2 years with, by all account, a high degree of distinction.

However, his experience ranges far beyond the area of government service, into the fields of law, business, and civic affairs. More importantly, I think, is the perspective he will bring to his new duties as a son of the Tennessee Valley. He knows the pride with which residents of the valley look on the accomplishments of TVA, and he knows the high value they place on the natural beauty that surrounds them. Such understanding will compel him, I believe, to ensure the optimum balance among the various charges to TVA: to assure an adequate supply of reasonably priced electricity, to provide economic development to that region of the country, and to lead by example in environmental protection and education.

As his record before the Committee on Environment and Public Works proves, Johnny Waters is a highly qualified and capable nominee, and I urge his unanimous confirmation by my colleagues.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of John B. Waters to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority. I am pleased to join my senior colleague, Mr. BAKER, in support of the confirmation of Mr. Waters.

Just over 50 years ago, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt signed into law the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933. As my good friend, the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia noted at Mr. Waters' confirmation hearing this past Tuesday, TVA, back in 1933, was a bold national experiment.

The success of the Tennessee Valley Authority has been well proven over the last 50 years, as a national model of economic and social progress. Mr. President, the success of TVA has depended in large part on the quality of leadership of its Board. I believe that the addition of Mr. Waters to the TVA Board will enhance this tradition.

John B. Waters, as a lifelong resident of Tennessee, knows the people of this region. More importantly, as a former Federal cochairman of the Appalachian Regional Commission, John B. Waters brings to the TVA post a heightened sense of responsibility toward meeting the economic, social, and environmental challenges of the Tennessee Valley region.

I am confident that Mr. Waters will build upon the 50 years of trust and partnership with the people of the Tennessee Valley. I look forward to working with Mr. Waters toward the continued success and well-being of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. President, I join with Mr. BAKER in supporting the confirmation of John B. Waters to the Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nomination was confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, under the same terms and conditions, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

WHY DOES THIS NATION FAIL TO KEEP ITS PROMISE TO NEGOTIATE A COMPREHENSIVE NUCLEAR TEST BAN TREATY?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on May 24 of this year, I wrote President Reagan calling his attention to the fact that both our country and the Soviet Union had repeatedly pledged in formal treaties to negotiate toward the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons. I pointed out that the treaties require—with no ifs, ands, or buts—ongoing negotiations. Since there are no arms control negotiations in progress dealing with a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty, both the United States and the Soviet Union are clearly and unambiguously in violation of these treaties.

On July 13, Acting Assistant Secretary of State Robert Turner responded on behalf of the President. What was the administration's answer? Why do they not comply with the treaty and negotiate a comprehensive ban on nuclear testing? Answer: The preamble to the treaties to which I referred—according to the administration—placed the elimination of weapons testing "in the larger context of the goal of ending the arms race." The administration claims to be working in other areas to achieve nuclear peace. What is the administration's reasoning? It goes something like this: A test ban treaty—all by itself—would not end the arms race, so the administration does not feel bound by the language of the treaty. Now, Mr. President, I submit that this constitutes about as feeble an alibi for a failure to try to comply with a treaty to which we have pledged our solemn word as I can imagine.

I am not talking about a single commitment of this country to negotiate a comprehensive test ban treaty. We pledged our word again and again—not once but twice. Consider:

In August 1963, the United States and the Soviet Union signed the treaty banning nuclear weapons testing in the atmosphere, in outer space, or under water. In that treaty, both parties committed themselves in the preamble, under article 1(b), to negotiate toward the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time. The U.S. Senate—this body—then ratified that treaty.

Again in 1974, the United States and the Soviet Union signed a treaty—still unratified, but honored by express agreement by both sides—designed to limit underground nuclear weapons tests to 150 kilotons. Article 1, paragraph 3, of that treaty specifies: "The Parties shall continue their negotiations with a view toward achieving a solution to the problem of the cessation of all underground nuclear weapons tests."

This second treaty was signed by President Nixon. But neither the Carter nor the Reagan administrations have seen fit to honor the requirement for ongoing negotiations. Speaking for the Reagan administration as Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in February 1982, Eugene Rostow said this in speaking to the United Nations Committee on Disarmament:

> While a comprehensive ban on nuclear testing remains an element in the full range of long-term United States control objectives, we do not believe that, under the circumstances, a comprehensive test ban could help reduce the threat of nuclear weapons or to maintain the stability of the nuclear balance.

Mr. President, Gene Rostow and the Reagan administration are seriously, dangerously wrong on this issue. Nuclear weapons testing lie at the heart of the tragedy of this arms control impasse. Nuclear weapons testing is the very essence of the arms race. After all, what gave us our present awesome and terrible nuclear weapons? Testing.

Was testing essential to the development of every nuclear weapon in our arsenal? Absolutely. The arms race is not simply a matter of piling up a larger and larger arsenal of 1945 Hiroshima-type bombs. The arms race is the constant acceleration of nuclear devices that become increasingly more lethal. Both the United States and the Soviet Union have ample nuclear weapons, produced, deployed and ready to deter any kind of attack from the other side. The balance of the nuclear deterrent has helped keep the peace between the two superpowers for more than 30 years What threatens that balance? A technological breakthrough that only nuclear testing could bring on.

To stop nuclear testing constitutes an absolutely essential step for nuclear peace. Oh, sure, stopping nuclear testing is not a sufficient step by itself to achieve peace, but it is essential. Unless we stop testing, the technological arms race will continue. It will sweep both countries along with it. Why, then, do we not comply and keep our solemn word as embodied in two treaties signed by the President? Would the Soviets refuse to come to the table to discuss such a treaty? No way. They have repeatedly made their position clear on this issue. They are willing to sit down at any time to negotiate a comprehensive ban on nuclear testing. So why do we not do it? The administration offers one other justification for not negotiating the test ban treaty which, by signing two treaties, we have previously promised to negotiate. The administration's reason is that we could not verify such a treaty.

Now, Mr. President, verification capability may or may not be an adequate reason to refuse to agree to arms control limits on the production or deployment of nuclear weapons. But how about testing? Our scientific experts—the Nation's seismologists—with rare unanimity agree that we could detect underground nuclear weapons explosions in the Soviet Union at a level high enough to have any military significance. We could detect such an explosion right now without any additional advances in a technology that is constantly advancing. Certainly we would have enough information to alert us in plenty of time to protest, investigate and, if necessary, renounce the treaty if the Soviet testing might have any military advantage for them.

Now, how about it, Mr. President? Here we have two treaties to which this country has given its word that we would negotiate "the cessation of all underground nuclear weapons tests." That language does not commit us to sign such an agreement, unless we are satisfied that the verification provided in the treaty will permit us to prevent militarily significant Soviet cheating. But it does require that we negotiate to try to achieve that end.

What is wrong with that? Why do we not keep our word? No agreement could do more to stop the nuclear arms race than an agreement to cease nuclear weapons testing. Can it be that this administration is afraid to stop the arms race?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the exchange of letters between this Senator and the administration on our violation of these treaties be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, July 13, 1984.

Hon. WILLIAM PROXMIRE,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR PROXMIRE: The President has asked that I reply to your letter of May 24 concerning nuclear testing arms control limitations. As you correctly indicated, verification is a central concern for any successful nuclear testing arms control agreement with the Soviets. The United States has drawn attention to the fact that the Threshold Test Ban Treaty (TTBT) and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosion Treaty (PNET) are not effectively verifiable. Accordingly, on three separate occasions last year we proposed discussions of verification improvements to the Soviet Union on those two treaties. The Soviets rejected these proposals arguing that we should first ratify the agreements, and claimed that our verfication concerns would be allayed by Implementation of their verification and consultation provisions. However, there can be no assurance of improvements solely through implementation of those provisions since, among other reasons, there are no means of independently and accurately validating the data which is to be exchanged.

A Comprehensive Test Ban (CTB) remains a long-term goal of the Administration, in the context of broad, deep and verifiable nuclear arms reductions, expanded confidence-building measures and improved verification capabilities. In addition to serious verification problems, however, there continue to be significant concerns about other national security implications of a CTB. Given our dependence on nuclear weapons, any consideration of a total test ban must be related to the West's ability to maintain a credible nuclear deterrent.

We have agreed to a Western Group proposal for a mandate at the Conference on Disarmament which, if accepted by the Conference, would reestablish the Nuclear Test Ban Ad Hoc Committee and direct it to examine the issues of scope, verification and compliance, continuing the useful work it has done in this field in recent years.

Finally, we believe that current U.S. policy on nuclear testing limitations is fully consistent with the Limited Test Ban Treaty (LTBT) and the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT); in addition, the U.S. has taken no actions to defeat the object and purpose of the unratified TTBT. In the preambles of those treaties, the Parties cited their determination to continue negotiations toward the elimination of nuclear weapons testing, but did so within the larger context of the goal of ending the "arms race." The signatories recognized that a test ban by itself cannot eliminate the threat posed by nuclear weapons, and that limitations on testing must necessarily be considered within a broad range of arms reductions, both conventional and nuclear. To that end, the US has become a party to a number of major arms control agreements in recent years, and is ready to proceed immediately with further negotiations on strategic and INF systems.

We remain committed to seeking deep, effective and verifiable arms reductions that reduce the risk of war.

Sincerely,

ROBERT F. TURNER,
Acting Assistant Secretary,
Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, DC, May 24, 1984.

Hon. RONALD REAGAN,
President of the United States,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: When the United States and the USSR signed the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and Under Water in August, 1963, both parties committed themselves in the preamble and under Article 1(b) to negotiate toward the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time.

This treaty commitment was further reinforced in Article IV of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons which states that the US and USSR each undertake "to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament, and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control."

In addition, Article I of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests of 1974 specified in paragraph three that "The Parties shall continue their negotiations with a view toward achieving a solution to the problem of the cessation of all underground nuclear weapon tests."

These three treaties, the first two signed and ratified, the third signed by President Nixon but unratified by the United States, are explicit and unqualified about the role of negotiating a comprehensive test ban. The terms of these treaties require ongoing negotiations.

At the present the United States of America and the Union of Socialist Republics clearly and unambiguously are in violation of these three treaties. There are no arms control negotiations in progress dealing with a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Considering that perhaps these facts had not been brought to your attention, may I suggest that you attempt to bring the United States into compliance with these treaties by challenging the USSR to sit down to the bargaining table and conclude a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

I recognize that some of your experts feel a Comprehensive Test Ban cannot be adequately verified. Why not let this be subject to negotiations? The 1974 Threshold Test Ban contains restrictions on nuclear testing sites and calls for the exchange of technical data essential for verification purposes. We are in a much stronger position for verification with this data than without. The Treaty improves our verification potential—but only if submitted for ratification. Without a Treaty, verification is much more difficult.

Perhaps the USSR will even agree to on-site inspection, as they have indicated at certain times during past negotiations. If the technical details can be negotiated, this may solve the verification problem.

In any event, we cannot resolve our verification problems, and we cannot adhere to these three treaties, and we cannot make progress toward a comprehensive nuclear test ban without negotiations.

I ask you to publicly seek negotiations with the Soviet Union based on the strongest principles of verification and mutuality.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM PROXMIRE.

THE LODZ GHETTO

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, August 12 marks the reunion of about 4,000 Jews who once inhabited the wartime ghetto in the city of Lodz, Poland. They will gather in New York's Catskill Mountains to recall the attrocities that befell them during the Holocaust 40 years ago. For many of them this will be the first meeting since they were "resettled" from Lodz to the concentration camps.

Prior to World War II, more than 200,000 Jews lived in the area that later became the Lodz ghetto. After the war, there were only 10,000 survivors.

Mr. President, the July 30, 1984, issue of the New York Times Magazine ran a review of a soon to be published book about the Lodz ghetto. During the war, a team of authors kept a diary of life in the ghetto. This book, "The Chronicle of the Lodz Ghetto, 1941-1944" is one of the most significant documents yet to be published about the Holocaust.

These accounts are different from other documents because they were maintained by the official Jewish administration of the ghetto. Therefore, this was not a clandestine effort, but one that was subject to the scrutiny of the German officials at any time.

Mr. President, it is very difficult for us in this day and age to realize the pain and agony that these people endured. Living in hunger, cold, fear, and uncertainty, those gathering at the reunion—the survivors—have much to be thankful for. They also share some bitter memories.

Mr. President, I would like to share one of the accounts documented in the chronicles:

Escape attempts came to a bloody end. Anyone who attempted to save himself by fleeing and was spotted by the authorities had to pay for that attempt with his life. Because the operation proceeded so rapidly, the authorities gave no thought to the motives or causes for any particular act. At 38 Zgierska Street, an elderly woman from Sieradz did not understand if she had been ordered to go to the left or the right and, instead of going to a wagon, she walked over to a group of "remainers." This the authorities interpreted as an escape attempt. The woman was shot to death on the spot.

These chronicles were buried and recovered after the war ended. As you can see, the accuracy and detail in these journals is unsurpassed. It is important for all of us to not only understand what has happened, but also to keep the memories of Lodz alive. We must not forget what happened at Lodz or Warsaw or any other area. We must keep these memories alive so that history will never repeat itself.

This is one step. But there is more that we can do. We can do something that should have been done long ago.

We can and must ratify the Genocide Convention. The Genocide Treaty expressly condemns any attempt to eliminate, in whole or in part, any national, racial, ethnic, or religious group.

The Genocide Convention was adopted unanimously by the United Nations primarily as a response to the Holocaust. Still 40 years later, we the U.S. Senate have not fulfilled our obligation to the survivors, not the respect we owe to those who were not as fortunate.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to take immediate action and ratify the Genocide Convention.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WOMAN'S PENSION EQUITY ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it is our hope that before we adjourn today we can bring up the women's pension equity bill H.R. 4280. It is matter that we have been working on for months. As far as we know, there was no problem at all. It has been cleared with everyone we can find. We have worked with Republican and Democratic staff of the Finance Committee, the Labor Committee and the appropriate House Committees and, we thought with every Member. I understand there is a problem on the other side of the aisle.

There is a great deal of interest in this legislation on the House side. In fact, I understand Mrs. FERRARO, the running mate of the candidate for President, has a deep interest in this legislation along with a great number of other Members of both parties.

I hope my colleagues on the other side will find some way to clear the bill. The problem is, if we are going to go out next week—and nobody knows precisely when—and we are out for several weeks, it is going to be sometime in September before we can come back to this legislation.

But again, as I say, this bill is not controversial. It is not partisan legislation. It has strong support from the women's groups all across this country. It is a pension equity proposal. We have been discussing it day after day after day after day with Democrats and Republicans, Members, committees, and staff. We have had several meetings with the staff of both sides and worked out the problems in the bill the Finance Committee reported. We have also cleared the bill on the House side. What we did in the Senate Finance Committee was to amend the House-passed bill to take care of many of the problems that some groups had raised. H.R. 4280, as amended by the Finance Committee is the bill currently pending before the Senate. We understand the House is willing to accept the bill, as amended by the Finance Committee. I hope it does not get lost because someone feels the need to reexamine it.

We are trying to locate Senator KENNEDY, who has indicated some unwillingness to proceed today. If I can locate Senator KENNEDY, hopefully we can still bring it up before the Senate adjourns today.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. KASSEBAUM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the change in the schedule of the Senate today in respect to the special order and otherwise, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business from this moment until not later than the hour of 12:40 p.m. in which Senators may speak for not more than 2 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOVIET JEWS INTIMIDATED

Mr. JEPSEN. Madam President, I have just learned of a slanderous and vicious attack on a Member of the House of Representatives by the Soviet Union in conjunction with the Universal Postal Union Congress, at which 167 nations were participating, in Hamburg, Germany.

You will recall, Madam President, that I addressed the Senate 5 weeks ago as we considered, and acted favorably upon, House Concurrent Resolution 294, which called the Soviets into account for their deliberate interception and sabotage of the international mails.

This subject has been under investigation by the Subcommittee on Investigations of the House for some 18 months now at the specific request of Representative BENJAMIN A. GILMAN of New York, who is a senior member of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee and a distinguished colleague long involved in the plight of Soviet Jews.

The Senate voted unanimously in favor of this resolution, which pointed out that there was a cold, calculated, systematic campaign by the Soviets to interfere with international mail.

Congressman GILMAN personally attended the UPU Congress in Germany, as did our Postmaster General, William F. Bolger. Both cited the Soviets for wholesale violations of four international treaties.

The Soviet reaction has been a personal and vicious attack on Mr. GILMAN and a frontal attack on the administration.

More than that, it is an attack on the Soviet Jews and no less than 105 other ethnic organizations, comprised of but not limited to the following groups who have complained to the Congress that their mail has been intercepted: Lithuanians, Latvians, Byelorussians, Estonians, Hungarians, Poles, East Germans, Russians, Ukrainians, the Slavs, Romanians, Czechoslovakians, and a host of others from Eastern European bloc countries and Russia who are now living here in the United States.

The distinguished gentleman from New York is certainly capable of defending himself and I will, at the close of my remarks, ask that his statement be made part of the record.

But I want to point out in the meantime that this personal attack should be viewed as a personal attack against the unanimous votes of both the House and the Senate.

More importantly, I cannot help but think this is an attempt to intimidate Jewish people and those people of the other ethnic groups I have mentioned. Many of our synagogues have "twinning" projects in which Jewish youngsters write to youngsters in other lands.

Just about all of their mail, the investigation shows, gets intercepted.

One witness in Davenport, IA, told congressional investigators that only 1 letter of 5,000 mailed by his human rights group to the Soviet Union got a response. One letter.

The UPU has enacted some tough, new regulations governing mail interception. And those regulations passed with very large margins among the 167 nations attending the conference.

I hope these new regulations have a strong effect on the Soviets.

I should like to make three points with regard to the Soviets' attack on Representative GILMAN, with whom I have been closely working on the issue of Soviet mail sabotage:

First, the Soviet statement is a bold attempt to deflect the real issue: The Congress has accumulated over 2,500 exhibits showing a regular pattern of interception of the international mails. I point out that this mail is not just involving dissidents, but nonpolitical communications between family members and friends. We recently found one witness here in the United States who did not know for 7 years the fact that her father had died in Russia, because her mail was intercepted by the KGB.

Second, our 2,500 exhibits come not just from the United States, but from 17 other free world countries as well. This is indeed broad and much larger than just a United States-Soviet issue. It is indeed a worldwide issue.

Third, the Soviets are not just violating the UPU Convention standards, but three other international treaties and their own Constitution as well.

The Communist outburst was prompted by Representative GILMAN's appearance at the Universal Postal Union Congress in Hamburg, Germany last month, to present House Congressional Resolution 294, memorializing the UPU to take up the matter of the interruption of international mail behind the Iron Curtain. Gilman's resolution, which passed both Houses of Congress unanimously, was the basis for five resolutions on the topic passed by the UPU Congress.

The Soviet statement issued at the Congress said:

> We condemn the hostile provacatory activities of Mr. B. Gilman, Member of the United States House of Representatives, which for many years have been aimed at disrupting normal mail traffic between the United States and the USSR. Our delegations decisively reject the insinuations contained in his statement and in the United States Congress decision.

In Representative GILMAN's defense, the U.S. delegation issued a statement saying:

> The United States delegation rejects the erroneous and rhetorical statement attacking the United States Government and a Member of the United States Congress by name . . .

The American reply continued:

> Such false and slanderous statements must be viewed as an attempt to avoid providing specific answers to the problems cited by several delegations in their mail relations with the Soviet Union during the course of this Congress.

Representative GILMAN stated that:

> The statement issued by the Soviets is indicative that the evidence presented disclosing the Soviet's interruption of international mail service has hit home.

Representative GILMAN, a member of the House Post Office Committee, introduced House Concurrent Resolution 294, calling for UPU action, after conducting a series of hearings at which over 2,500 exhibits were presented indicating the systematic interference with international mail behind the Iron Curtain. The resolution passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 403 to 0, and subsequently passed the U.S. Senate by a voice vote.

After Mr. GILMAN's appearance at the UPU Congress in Hamburg, the UPU approved five resolutions relating to Representative GILMAN's remarks:

A resolution calling for all countries to publish lists of prohibited items in clear and concise language;

A resolution calling upon all countries to list reasons for the seizure of any packages, and calls upon these nations to describe offending items;

A resolution providing that priority be given to obtaining the actual signature of the addresse on the "Advice of Delivery Form";

A resolution providing that the addresses signature be obtained in instances when an inquiry is filed regarding failure of delivery; and

A resolution that when delivery of mail is specified to an individual, that individuals signature must be obtained.

THE REGULATION OF LEAD IN GASOLINE

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, the Environmental Protection Agency has moved strongly ahead this week in an important area of environmental protection in proposing to require removal in 2 years of about 90 percent of the lead in gasoline.

I have frequently criticized the environmental policies of the Reagan administration. Conversely, when the administration takes positive action, it deserves support and credit. This is such an instance. I commend the Reagan administration, especially EPA Administrator Ruckelshaus and his staff, for this necessary and encouraging decision. It is good news to everyone who supports the cause of clean air in this country.

It is particularly welcome news because the mental and physical health of children is concerned. Children are most vulnerable to lead, especially in big cities where auto exhaust products are concentrated. Leaded gasoline is the source of 80 percent of all lead emitted into the air. Inhaled regularly and in sufficient quantities by humans, lead can damage the ability to reason and excessive exposure can cause death. The connection between lead in gasoline and in children's blood has been repeatedly and convincingly demonstrated.

Lead has long been recognized as a hazardous substance. The toxic effects of lead at high levels are firmly established, and growing evidence suggests that lower levels, previously thought safe, also may pose serious risk to human health, particularly for small children. Lead in gasoline is a major source of lead in children's blood.

Children 6 years old or younger are generally considered to be most vulnerable to the adverse health effects of lead. This is due to:

First, some types of physical and behavioral effects which have been observed at lower blood levels in children than adults.

Second, a greater opportunity for children to be exposed to certain lead sources including house dust and lead paint through normal play activities and by putting foreign substances into their mouths.

Third, a higher incidence of nutritional problems among children such as iron or calcium deficiencies, which, in turn, enhance lead absorption.

Fourth, the apparent increased susceptability of the developing brain.

But the benefits of significant lead reduction are not limited to children. It will reduce the frequency, and thus the cost, of certain car engine maintenance and improve car fuel economy. It will also greatly lessen the problem of tampering with pollution controls on cars of illegally using leaded fuel in cars made to use unleaded fuel.

I hope that the EPA will move forward as expeditiously as possible to finalize its proposed regulation of lead in gasoline.

TRIBUTE TO MR. J.C. LONG OF CHARLESTON, SC

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, I rise to pay tribute to one of the Palmetto State's finest developers and businessmen, my good friend, Mr. J.C. Long of Charleston, SC, who passed away on July 9, 1984. To his devoted wife, Alberta, two daughters, Joyce and Mary Ellen, 10 grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren, I express my deepest sympathy.

In no uncertain terms, J.C. Long was a self-made man. His strong work ethic was cultivated early in life—working odd-jobs just to make ends meet. It was his intense spirit of determination that lifted J.C. Long to the pinnacle of success in every facet of his life.

One need only examine his impressive career to see numerous examples of his success. While a student at the University of South Carolina, J.C. Long excelled on the football team. After graduating there, he went on to receive a law degree from the same institution, beginning what would later become a prestigious law practice in Charleston.

J.C. Long's competitiveness was not confined exclusively to the playing field and classroom, however, because this businessman pioneered several land development projects throughout the low country of our State. His keen instinct for successful business ventures earned him respect and notoriety in the Charleston area. The Isle of Palms, a beautiful family resort on the Atlantic coast, stands as one of the many examples of this entrepreneur's accomplishments.

In addition to his significant achievements as a developer, J.C. Long was also a fine public servant. I had the pleasure of serving with him in the South Carolina State Senate during the 1930's, and I knew him to be an individual committed to the well-being of Charlestonians and all South Carolinians.

Madam President, J.C. Long was loved and admired by many, and will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends and associates. However, he leaves behind several reminders of the tremendous impact he made on the low-country of South Carolina. In order to share more about this outstanding individual, I ask unanimous consent that the following articles from his hometown newspapers be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOTED SOUTH CAROLINA DEVELOPER, LANDOWNER J.C. LONG DIES

J.C. Long, one of South Carolina's largest landowners and most illustrious developers, died Monday at his East Cooper residence. He was 80.

Funeral services, directed by McAlister's, will be at Sacred Heart Church at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday. Entombment will be at St. Lawrence Cemetery.

Mr. Long, who took on his first construction job at 16, became one of the area's largest landowners with property including apartment buildings, duplexes, subdivisions and other types of real estate.

He was a native of Pensacola, Fla., and moved to Charleston with his family in 1918. He starred in football and earned money by operating peanut concessions at ball games.

After graduating from the High School of Charleston, he attended the University of South Carolina, where he received a bachelor's degree and a law degree. He was captain of the Gamecock football squad in 1925 and was named to the All-State team and gained honorable mention on the All Southern team as a lineman.

He began law practice in Charleston with the firm of Logan and Grace but soon set up his own law office. He entered politics in 1929 and was elected state senator from Charleston County a year later at 27, one of the youngest ever to serve in that legislative body at that time.

He was a stormy petrel in politics, clashing often with other legislators, elected officials and with the Democratic Party to which, however, he remained loyal throughout his life.

He was defeated for re-election in 1934 and that year broadened the real estate development activities that he initiated in 1931 when he developed Ashley Forest.

When the Federal Housing Authority was set up shortly after President Franklin D. Roosevelt took office, Mr. Long and his brother, the late Leonard D. Long, immediately began to use that federally insured program to build in South Carolina. They jointly became one of the largest FHA building families in the nation.

One of his major land purchases, and one of his favorite developments, was the Isle of Palms. Purchasing all of the undeveloped area, Mr. Long set out to make an ocean resort that would be a family vacation spot without commercial facilities other than those required for providing needed supplies. When he sold the undeveloped areas of the island in 1973, he could point out that there were no high rises and only one motel type facility, an apartment style unit owned by the Long interests.

He was loyal to his alma mater and served as a USC trustee and on many committees working for the university.

He was a lifelong Democrat and a heavy contributor to the party. In 1944, he was one of the 1,000 given invitations by Roosevelt to his inauguration.

He had served on the S.C. State Highway Commission in the 1930s and was an advocate of major road building programs. He returned to politics in 1947 when elected a city alderman in Charleston on the slate of the late William McG. Morrison, with whom Mr. Long had feuded in the early 1930s.

He soon broke with Morrison, however, and from that time on did not actively take part in politics. In 1951, he resigned the aldermanic post to become a member of Gov. James F. Byrne's S.C. Educational Finance Commission that established the sales tax.

Mr. Long was a modern populist in political theory. He had admired the "Share the Wealth" theories of Huey Long of Lousiana and invited Long (no relation) and the Rev. Gerald L.K. Smith, another advocate, to speak in Charleston under his auspices in 1935.

He was a staunch family man and, during the heat of political campaigning, twice engaged in fisticuffs with persons who derogated his relatives. One of them was a fellow senator, C.E. "Mountain Lion" Sloan of Greenville, who opposed the late Sen. Olin D. Johnston, a good friend of Mr. Long's.

He was elected president of the Charleston County Bar Association in 1945 and was a member of a number of civic and fraternal organizations and a past master of Pythagorean Lodge 21, AFM, and past exalted ruler of the Charleston Elks.

He had served several times as a specially appointed judge in the Common Pleas Court. He withdrew from the law firm of Long, McRae and Rittenberg in 1955 but continued his law practice, saying, "I'm a lawyer first, last and always."

However, his fortune was made largely in real estate, and he was one of the largest property owners and taxpayers in the state, particularly in Charleston County.

Following construction of the Sergeant Jasper Apartments in downtown Charleston in 1949–50, Mr. Long built similar high-rise units and other apartment units in Savannah, Ga.; Anderson; Greenwood; Aiken; Rock Hill; Orangeburg and Sumter.

One of his favorite places was the home he built at Seaside Plantation in Christ Church Parish. There he raised cattle and experimented with the growing of shrimp in salt water ponds. He also maintained a nine hole golf course that he made available to many friends.

Just recently, the East Cooper School named its track and athletic field the J.C. Long Athletic Field.

Mr. Long was a man of strong opinions and beliefs. He had a dislike for the color blue, refusing to sign papers with blue ink and to wear blue clothing.

He was a hard worker, beginning his day as early as 5:30 a.m. and often continuing late into the night. He had specially built a mobile office, one of the first in the nation, and used it to commute between his many building projects.

Mr. Long was born Sept. 19, 1903, a son of John Edward Long of Florida and Mrs. Amelia A. Darlington Long of England. He was a Unitarian.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Alberta Sottile Long of Seaside Farms, Mt. Pleasant; two daughters, Mrs. Charles P. Darby, Jr. of Seaside Farms, Mt. Pleasant, and Mrs. Charles S. Way, Jr. of Seaside Farms, Mt. Pleasant, and 10 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

JOHN CHARLES LONG

J.C. Long—he never used his full name—arrived with his family as a teenager in the Lowcountry from Pensacola, Fla., in 1918 and proceeded to carve a career in real estate, politics and law that will long be remembered. Aggressive playing on the line of the University of South Carolina's football team earned him the respect of his teammates, who elected him squad captain, as well as a place on the All-State team and honorable mention on the All-Southern team. But more, it set the stage for a long and highly successful career.

Nothing in life was handed to J.C. Long. As a teenager, he earned money with a peanut concession at ball games and as a construction worker. Graduating with a law degree from USC, he hung out his shingle in Charleston and embarked on a political career which has been described as stormy—an understatement. He was one of the youngest to serve as state senator—elected at the age of 27. But even while serving Charleston County in the Legislature, he entered the realty and construction business, creating a group of companies that are today the legacy that people will remember him most for.

Starting with one of the earliest developments west of the Ashley River, Ashley Forest, Mr. Long, personally or with his late brother, L.D. Long, built over 9,000 housing units in the county. One of his major land purchases and favorite property developments was the Isle of Palms, a planned, family, ocean-resort area with tight controls over commercial enterprises other than those needed for supplies. The island is currently home to more than 3,500 year-round residents. Another measure of his success is that corporations he and his family control annually pay about $270,000 in state taxes.

Mr. Long's death Monday at the age of 80 closes the book on over a half century of entrepreneurship that made him a legend in his time and changed the face of this part of the Lowcountry.

[From the Charleston Evening Post, July 10, 1984]

J.C. LONG

(By Thomas R. Waring)

During the 1920s, J.C. Long was a star football player for the famous High School of Charleston Bantams and for the University of South Carolina. The aggressive lessons he learned on the playing fields helped him to succeed first as a lawyer, and then as a large-scale builder of houses. In an interview published in the Post-Courier in 1980, he estimated that he and his brother, the late L.D. Long, built 6,000 dwelling units in Charleston County. In addition, he built 3,000 more by himself in the county.

Mr. Long and approximately 30 corporations his family controls have handled land acquisition, construction and insurance on properties that pay about $270,000 in annual taxes in Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas.

For almost 10 years, illness had confined J.C. Long—he never used the full name, John Charles—to a wheelchair. The infirmity did not quell the drive that had shaped his career, and the years brought a measure of serenity to a sometimes stormy life. Mr. Long served in the state Senate and on the City Council of Charleston and maintained a lively interest in politics. He had many other interests and a wide acquaintance.

Six years out of law school, Mr. Long in 1931 launched his career as a builder during the Depression. His first project was Ashley Forest, one of the earliest developments west of the Ashley River.

"I was the first to build 'across the railroad tracks' in the north area on Dorchester Road," he said in the 1980 interview—one of the few he ever granted. "My parents mortgaged their home and I mortgaged a house I owned to raise money for a down payment. We handled the first Federal Housing Administration loan in South Carolina."

The enterprise that gave him the greatest satisfaction was the purchase of the Isle of Palms, a beach resort, which grew to be a community of 3,500 year-around residents. Mr. Long was the instigator of the Charleston Development Board to attract industry. His death at age 80 has concluded a busy and successful life.

COAL BELATEDLY RECEIVES ATTENTION BY THE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Madam President, last week the administration of President Reagan discovered coal, our most abundant source of energy, after 3½ years in office. It was a timely discovery.

The administration officials were pleased by their newly found knowledge and they called in coal industry officials from across the country for a "White House briefing" which, incidentally, did not take place in the White House and was not attended by the President.

Now that senior administration officials have made this discovery, I assume that they are genuine in their desire to follow up. Thus, it is my purpose today to make available some facts about coal for all those who read the RECORD.

Since arriving in Washington, this administration has proposed abolition of the Department of Energy, and elimination or drastic cuts in coal research and development 3 out of 4 years.

They talk of increasing coal exports, but have been ineffective when negotiating with out major coal trading partners, and have resisted financing inland waterway and port improvements.

They have permitted the Interstate Commerce Commission to virtually deregulate railroad coal haul rates.

After a 10-year moratorium on coal leasing expired, this administration had the opportunity to distribute coal reserves for orderly development. Instead, the administration program was managed so poorly another moratorium could ensue next year. This administration now demands deep recissions in synthetic fuels programs which not only threatens our future energy security but the largest potential new market for our coal resources.

They have delayed nominating a new director for the Office of Surface Mining, seemingly for no particular reason. OSM—managerless with its top two jobs vacant—suffers from a total lack of direction. Meanwhile, our State programs suffer; the industry suffers; and our miners suffer, and our Nation is the loser.

RETIREMENT EQUITY STATEMENT

Mrs. HAWKINS. Madam President, I am pleased at this opportunity to express my support for the conference report on the Retirement Equity Act.

The 1974 Employee Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA] mandates minimum standards for private pension plans. For example, ERISA sets the maximum length of time employees can work before they are vested and, similarly, grants the permanent right to employer-financed benefits even in the event of job changes.

Under current standards, most employees have to work 10 years under a pension plan to become vested, and interruptions in a career can result in the loss of pension benefits. Existing laws also allow employers to exclude workers from participating in a pension plan until they reach the age of 25.

However, it has become increasingly clear in recent years that ERISA standards are inadequate to deal with the changing composition of the American work force. Many observers now agree that the regulations are disadvantageous to women—persons who enter the work force early, and then drop out to raise a family do not collect their full benefits. Since this description accurately mirrors the course of many American women, it is safe to conclude that female workers are being deprived of retirement credits.

This unfortunate situation has left many women in desperate straits, unjustly and unwisely deprived of their rightful benefits. The plight of the American working woman is one with which we should all be concerned. And in light of the magnitude of the problem, it is important that we all work to rectify this situation.

Fortunately, Madam President, measured by the actions and responses of my colleagues, it is quite clear that the Congress is deeply concerned over the lot of working women. The almost unanimous acceptance of this bill equally evidences a determination to improve pension benefits for women and also shows the merits of this measure.

Consequently, I am very pleased that the conference committee has reached agreement on this important legislation. It is my firm belief that this is a significant step in the fight to bring equity and prosperity to the millions of American working women. I urge all my colleagues to join me in support of this measure and other progressive legislation in this area.

EULOGY TO ELIZABETH P. FARRINGTON, A BENEFACTOR TO THE PEOPLE OF HAWAII

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Madam President, it is with a heavy heart that I rise to note the passing of a very great lady in the recent history of my State, a person whose distinguished career of public service to Hawaii and to the Nation was conducted here in Washington where she was both a lawmaker on Capitol Hill and later a ranking official of the executive branch at the Interior Department.

I refer to Elizabeth P. Farrington, a journalist who took our islands to her heart when she married the late Joseph Farrington, former Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

As a young law student at Harvard, I was called to Washington by Joseph Farrington to testify on behalf of statehood before the House Interior Committee's Subcommittee on Territories. He felt that my experiences in World War II, along with thousands of Americans of Japanese ancestry from Hawaii, would have a key bearing on our "readiness" for statehood. It was at that time that I met Mrs. Farrington, his lovely, gracious spouse and a full partner with her husband in his political and journalistic career. When her husband died, Mrs. Farrington succeeded him as Delegate to Congress and publisher of the Honolulu Star Bulletin, Hawaii's largest newspaper. She continued her husband's lifelong fight for statehood which came a few years after her term of office ended. She was a key player right to the point when our statehood legislation achieved passage, however, in her role as the Star Bulletin's publisher. Later, she became Director of the Office of Territories in the administration of President Nixon, where she served with distinction.

Throughout her lifetime, she compiled an extraordinary record of accomplishments, a record that reflects her selfless commitment to serving others. She will long be remembered and admired for her determined efforts to see Hawaii achieve statehood, a goal she set for herself following her graduation from college and her marriage. Her notable contributions to the Nation here in Congress and with the Interior Department earned for her the highest respect of all who were fortunate enough to know her. I myself have lost a dear personal friend with whom I conferred on many occasions on the strategy to win statehood. In an age when women are assuming new roles in American life, it is well to remember that Elizabeth Farrington's achievements were the equal of her outstanding husband's. She was in all regards a remarkable achiever.

Hawaii and the Nation is a better place in which to live because "Betty" Farrington lived among us.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask the Chair to inquire if there is further morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER—AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A motion to waive section 303(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of H.R. 5743, Department of Agriculture Appropriations, 1985.

The Senate resumed consideration of the motion.

Mr. CHILES. Madam President, we are having a little discussion on the motion to waive the Budget Act to declare that the agriculture bill would be in order, notwithstanding the fact that we do not have a budget resolution. The Senator from Florida has been concerned about that waiver process.

I am concerned because we find ourselves now in August—August 3, I think it is today—and we do not have a budget resolution. We have never gone this long since we passed the Budget Act in 1974 without a budget resolution. In every other year, we have had a resolution by June, and in most instances in May.

As the distinguished Madam President knows, the purpose of the Budget Act is to set the framework for spending, to place a limitation on spending to determine what the priorities of Government should be, and to determine what our revenues should be. I feel there is much or more reason for the act today than there was at the time we passed it in 1974.

I was here at the time, operated as a Member of the Senate for 2 or 3 years without the act, helped to write the act, and have been on the committee since we passed it. I remember the dilemmas we were in constantly where we were adopting new programs, and where we did not look to see where those programs would take us.

I say we are still harvesting many of those programs that we adopted at that time. We did not look 5 years out. We did not have a Congressional Budget Office to make estimates. We did not have to be concerned with what outyear spending would be. We got ourselves into this quagmire which we still are trying to work ourselves out of. Why in the world we are abandoning the budget process now is more than I can understand.

I came back from the last recess. There was no call for a meeting of the conference of the Budget Committee. No one was talking about the Budget Act. The press does not write about the Budget Act. It is as if it has just simply disappeared. It is gone.

In a colloquy I had with the Senator from New Mexico, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, who has worked so long and hard for it, he said this is a very different year. I agree with him on that. It is a very different year. But the different years mean that you should abandon a process you have because it becomes some kind of a handicap for a majority party, or a President in power? That different year is going to happen 4 years from now and 4 years from then. And if we can simply waive this process, or just feel that it does not exist, that will come back to haunt us, too, I think.

The budget conference has had four meetings. Three of those meetings lasted way under an hour. One of them might have lasted a little bit over an hour. We have not really sat down, and tried to work out these differences. We have basically a difference only in one area, in one number, and that happens to be the number of defense. The Senate-passed number is $299 billion. The House-passed number is $287 billion. So we are talking about $13 billion difference.

The House conferees have offered the Senate a split at $299 billion, and to split also the inflater numbers between what the Department of Defense said would be the inflation number and what the Congressional Budget Office said would be the inflation number. So they have offered that split.

The distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, the Senator from New Mexico, started off when he went to the White House with a number that he said should be $294 billion. So our debate is somewhere between what the House has offered, $292 billion, and what the Senate number is. And the Senate has not come off of their number of $299 billion.

We know what the number of the Senator from New Mexico thought would be fair for defense—$294 billion. And over that we have no budget resolution. So we are passing these appropriation bills. And each time they come up, we just make a motion to waive the Budget Act, and go ahead and pass this bill. We are going to do that throughout this year until we get to the defense. That is going to be the last thing we get to. Everybody sort of knows that.

What does that spell out for us next year? What does that spell out for us in the future? I do not think it bodes very good for us, for the only law that we now have to basically restrain spending we are honoring in its breach. That is exactly what we are doing.

The President says I want the Congress to pass a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget. That is what we need. Madam President, you know how long that is going to take if we pass it.

The Senate has passed that. The Senator from Florida voted for that. But if it passes the Congress this year, we are looking at years before it is ratified by the requisite number of States to make that a constitutional amendment.

So while we are telling the public that is what is necessary, the same President is telling the majority party do not adopt a budget resolution. Do not come to a decision on that budget resolution, if you have to move off of that figure of $299 billion. We need one law. But we ought to breach another law. That just does not strike me as being sound.

The reason it does not, more than anything to do with the parties or anything, is where is it going to leave us in the future in regard to the Budget Act? The distinguished President has spent a lot of time on the Budget Committee, and has high rank on the majority side on the Budget Committee. And as the Senator from Florida has spent a lot of time on that committee, I think it is worthwhile. I think it is worth spending that time because I think that act forces the Congress to make some hard decisions that we do not want to make, and that as a body we did not make before we had the act. We would take up appropriation bill by appropriation bill and we passed those bills one at a time, and we would add up at the end of the year.

I have never voted for a bad appropriation. It has always helped somebody, and I always hear from the group that it is going to help. And John Q. Public does not sort of know what is happening in all of those appropriation bills. So he cannot say, "Do not vote for this program." But he wants us to live within our means. For the first time the Budget Act sort of helped us do that. We had to determine at the beginning of the year how much money are we going to take in? How much money do we need to spend? If it is more than we take in, where is it going to come from? Are we going to tell the Finance Committee as we have in the Budget Committee we expect you to raise some new revenue? Are we going to tell the authorizing committees, as we have, that we expect you to do something to cut some money in some of the discretionary programs or some of the entitlement programs? The body has to debate. Then we set this spending limit. I think the process has worked better.

I do not see any great, grand, new, and glorious programs that have been started since we have had this Budget Act with these great formulas that tie us into tremendous spending down the road.

Yet, this year, because it is a very different year it looks like we are not going to have this act.
